I do not believe that any white community in the United States would have met a complicated and profound, urgent challenge, entailing the upset of widely distributed but unequal vested property interests, with the spirit, the audacity and the resourcefulness which the Navajo Tribe has shown. Be it remembered that the Navajos are illiterates, in the main, and speak only the Navajo language, in the main. And that the women are, in most cases, the owners of the goats and sheep; and that goats and sheep are viewed by the Navajos emotionally, all but as human children.

Let me quickly sketch the social program, going beyond erosion and range control, now being put into effect by the Navajos and by the Government as their partner. First comes the drastic decentralization of Indian Service administration. The new Navajo capital (called "Nee Alneeng", which means center of the Navajo world) will be the Indian service office of the whole reservation. Into it, whatever Washington authority can be legally transplanted will be transplanted. Under the pending Wheeler-Howard bill, discussed below, that will be substantially the whole authority of the Federal Government.

Here, likewise, will be the capital of the tribe—the headquarters of the tribal council.

But beyond this headquarters, decentralization will be carried to the more than 25 subagencies, each the center of the locally organized Navajos and the administrative office for the school work, health work, agricultural extension, erosion, law enforcement, and other services of the Government. These subagencies will be people's houses, and into them the formal schooling of the Navajos will be merged; indeed, if hopes are fulfilled there will be no formal schooling of the cloistrated or standardized order. All educational work will start from, and end in, the community group. The Navajo language will be used coordinately with English; Navajos and the Government's workers with the Navajos will be bilingual in the future. The employees at these subagencies, and at the capital, will increasingly be (again, subject to the enactment of the Wheeler-Howard bill) Navajo Indians.

I have begun with this happy and inspiriting example, and I will give one bright instance more because it testifies to what qualities there are in all Indians; and then I will pass to the gloomy side. For it will become evident that the Indians, now as before, are shrouded in gloom.

Last May President Roosevelt decided that 14,000 Indians in all parts of the Indian country should be admitted to emergency conservation camps, to work on reforestation, on water development, and erosion control. We were glad, but we were frightened. For the permission extended beyond the Pueblos, Pimas, Papagos, and Navajos, famed for their sobriety and their industry. It reached to the Oklahoma, Dakota, Montana, and Pacific coast tribes—to those Indians reputedly not willing to work and reputedly demoralized. Would the camps become centers of drink, of debauchery? Would the Indians respond to their opportunity and after they responded would they work?

The sequel has been, I believe, the most impressive event in Indian affairs in these "lonesome latter years" of Indian life. The Indians thronged to the camps and projects. The camps became and have uniformly remained (there has not arisen even one exception) models of orderly, happy living. The work projects, involving every kind of technical operation connected with forestry and with land conservation and use, have been pursued with better than mere industry—rather, with joyous ardor. Of all the technical and supervisory positions, more than 60 percent are now being efficiently filled by Indians, and the rank and file of the workers is 100 percent Indian. But the main significance is here: That the southwestern tribes have in no degree, in no particular excelled those of the other regions.

These Indians of the allotted areas have been, at the camps, like creatures released from prisons and dungeons. Once more they have been allowed to live in groups, to work in groups, and to work for a common good. They have furnished the solution of the so-called "problem of the American Indian." Just in such a way the Mexican peons of yesterday, now members of the recreated pueblos or ejidos of Old Mexico, have furnished the solution of the problem of the Indians south of the Rio Grande.

Because this article has space limits I shall now deal with only one other matter, the Wheeler-Howard Indian land and home-rule bill, and, in conclusion, with the objection raised against this bill, namely, that it tends toward an unfortunate segregation of the Indians.

Though this article will be published too late to have persuasive weight with the outgoing Congress, a description of the Wheeler-Howard bill will serve to give a perspective of the Indian situation as a whole and will tell what it is that the present administration seeks to do. President Roosevelt has thus summarized the intent of the bill:

"In offering the Indian these natural rights of man we will more nearly discharge the Federal responsibility for his welfare than through compulsory guardianship that has destroyed initiative and the liberty to develop his own culture."

The bill primarily drives against two states of fact—an Indian landholding system fatal, sinister, and dishonest, and a system of law which makes of the executive an unreviewable czar over Indian life.

The present system of land tenure was ushered in 57 years ago with the passage of the General Allotment Act. Previous to this time the soil of the various Indian reservations was owned in common, title resting in the tribe. Every member of a tribe had the right to occupy as much land as he could beneficially use; his house and other improvements passed on to his heirs, but he could not alienate and dispose of a square foot of tribal soil. Those reservations which escaped allotment have today as much and frequently more land than they contained 60 years ago.

Through the General Allotment Act the Government proceeded to break up the reservations, to attach to each Indian then living a tract of land as his individual property, and to throw the part of the reservations not used in this individual land distribution open to white settlement. Thus the Indian was to become an individualized farmer and assume all the white man's burden after a comparatively short trust period during which the privilege of mortgaging and selling his land was denied him.

After allotment the individualized land began to slip out of the Indian owners' hands at high speed. When the trust period expired or the Indian was declared "competent", he disposed of his land in short order, spent the proceeds, and went to live with his relatives. And when an allotted Indian died, the usual impossibility to make an equitable partition of the land forced its sale, not to Indians but to those who had the money to buy, to the waiting white people. Thus allotment dissipated—continues to dissipate—the Indian estate.

In 1887 the Indians were owners of 136,340,950 acres of the best land. In 1933 they were owners of 47,311,099 acres, of which a full 20,000,000 acres were desert or semidesert. The surface value of the Indian-owned lands had shrunk 90 percent in these 46 years. Of the residual lands, 7,032,237 acres (the most covetable of the remnant) were awaiting knock-down sale to whites—sale conducted by the Government itself, usually without reference to Indian choice. And of the usable land still owned by the allotted Indians, a full three-fourths was already possessed and used by whites under the allotment leasing system. Such land is tax-exempt, and the white lessees (cattlemen, sheepmen, farmers, and grain corporations) reap the benefit of tax exemption. Since 1887, 150,000 Indians have been rendered totally landless; and existing law—the practices mandatory or administratively inescapable under it—insured the dispossession of the remaining allotted Indians within the present generation.

What the Indians themselves have done or have left undone has been a negligible factor in the above-stated record. The allotment law and system intends and compels the transfer of Indian title to whites. Less swift than treaty-breaking with Indians or than outright rape of Indian lands, but surer and cheaper, bloodless and silent, the allotment law has fulfilled the civilizing intentions of the Government of 1887.

The facts of 1933 are the facts of today. I give some other facts of the workings and consequences of Indian land allotment.

The Indian lives in an ever-narrowing prison pen of allotment until his last acre is gone, and then he is summarily cast out from Federal responsibility. But the Indian Service, hardly less than the Indian, lives and endeavors to work in a prison pen of land allotment. Governmental appropriations into the millions each year, sorely needed for health service to Indians, for education, for relief, and for the economic rehabilitation of Indians, are of necessity diverted to the real-estate operations connected with the still shrinking allotted lands. Pari passu with the dwindling of the lands, the costs of administration rise. And there is no escape from these results under existing law.

I refer, of course, to the allotted areas, but these are all of the Indian country of Oklahoma and nearly all of the Indian country of Wisconsin, Minnesota, the Dakotas, Montana, Nebraska and Kansas, Wyoming, Oregon, Washington, and California.

The allotment system fights against all the human services attempted for Indians. Two Oklahoma cases will serve as examples, chosen because the bitterest of the embittered opposition to the Wheeler-Howard bill comes from whites.

At the Kiowa and Comanche Agency, the total Government expenditure—school costs aside—is $80,000 a year. Of this total, only $15,000 can be used for health, relief, reimbursable loans, agricultural extension and all the other human services. Sixty-five thousand is required for the real-estate operations of the allotted lands. Meantime the lands inexorably pass to whites by Government sale. About sixty of every hundred Indians in this jurisdiction are totally landless, all but a few are in poverty, and their needs for service are extreme. At most allotted jurisdictions the proportion of the landless Indians is greater than at this one.

On its work other than schools, the Five Civilized Tribes Agency of Oklahoma spends $300,000 a year. All except $60,000 of this total is devoured by the real-estate operations of the allotted lands. Of the 100,000 Five Tribes Indians, 72,000 are totally landless; the remaining lands are swiftly being forced into white ownership; and the per-capita income of the Five Tribes, omitting oil and mineral royalties paid to a few individuals, is $47 a year. These Five Tribes possessed, 25 years ago, 15,000,000 acres of the best Oklahoma land; they now possess 1,500,000 acres.

Subdivision of inherited allotments on a hundred reservations has proceeded to that point where an individual equity is fixed by subdividing, for example, the sum 5,200 into the sum 114,307,200, and the Government solemnly pays each heir the value of a postage stamp once a month. The heir possesses an equity in 10, 30, or 50 separate allotments. Administration costs more than the total rental, even the total value of the lands. Not merely farming lands, but grazing properties and even forests have been fractionated to these vanishing dimensions, making impossible the working of their own assets by the allottees; and the fading Indian lands are dots within the sea of white ownership. Twenty-five years ago the areas were solidly Indian.

The Wheeler-Howard bill centers in the land problem. The bill's 48 pages are their own explanation, but the principles can be stated in a few words. Under the bill, individual allotted titles may be exchanged for equitable rights in a community title. Use of the land, ownership of the improvements, ownership of the rental value of the land, and the right to use an equal area or value of land within the community estate, is safeguarded and made into an inheritable vested right. The physical allotments may be inherited so long as their subdivision does not reach the point of destroying their economic use.

Under the bill, reservation areas are to be marked out for ultimate consolidation into unbroken Indian holdings. The new land procedures will apply only inside these consolidated areas. To buy the white-owned tracts and to purchase the Indian heirship lands for the communities, the bill authorizes $2,000,000 a year. This grant will be used likewise for buying land on which homeless Indians will be colonized. In addition, submarginal lands, now being purchased by the Government, will be furnished the Indian communities, and funds from the subsistence homestead appropriation will be used for experimental colonies.

Financial credit, which is now practically denied the Indians, is essential to the Wheeler-Howard plan, and the bill establishes a revolving fund of $10,000,000, which will be a Federal grant, allocated to the Indian communities to be used by them as a revolving loan fund, capitalizing the individual and group enterprises.

The bill forbids any and all allotment of lands hereafter and forbids the sale of Indian lands to whites, and through many devices seeks to enable the Indians to repossess their lands now rented to whites and to become their own operators.

The so-called "home-rule provisions" of the Wheeler-Howard bill are geared with the land provisions, but their application is more general than that of the land provisions. Under existing law the Secretary of the Interior and Indian Commissioner practically are forced to stand as absolutists over the Indians. Usually their actions are exempt from court review. But they, in turn, are victims of the mandatory allotment system and of an appropriation and budgeting system which conceals facts and which freezes Government moneys into outmoded and sometimes even fictitious uses, leaving Congress itself helpless to control the expenditures, while the Indian office is no less helpless and the Indian is kept in the dark.

The total effect of these above conditions has been to impose on the Indian service an extreme centralization at the Washington office. The free movement of ideas, of experimentation and of local adjustment is impeded everywhere, and in the allotted areas is all but prohibited. There has been a wealth of bold effort and of truly creative initiative within the Indian Service during the last 4 or 5 years, and by main strength and awkwardness, as it were, some of this innovation has been pushed through to the Indians' actual life in the 200 reservations. But the autocratic and centralized system practically defies the human effort, and the best administration, whether from the headquarters or from the field, is as water poured into the labyrinthine sands of bureaucracy, which is forbidden by law to reorganize itself.

The Wheeler-Howard bill cuts through the tangle of legal compulsions and inhibitions and provides for a radical decentralization of the Indian Service. Indians may organize and become chartered for any of the tasks or interests of their own lives; their organization may be geographical or functional, according to their wishes or requirements. When organized, the chartered Indian communities become instrumentalities of the Federal Government. Doing less or more according to the facts of the innumerable variable cases, these communities in their fullest development may become wholly self-governing, subject only to Congress and the Constitution. Any function of Indian Service, with the appurtenant Federal moneys, may be transferred to these communities. The communities in turn may enter into contract with States, counties, and any other local institutions.

A special Indian civil service is created by the bill, and communities may appoint their qualified members for any position of local Indian service, and power of recall over local government employees is given to the communities.

The bill in its title 2 broadens the authority for Indian educational work, and through a system of loans and scholarship grants opens the colleges and the professional and technical schools to Indian youth.

Title 4 of the bill sets up a court of Indian affairs, with functions, ministerial as well as judicial, and brings the Indian Service and the Indian communities under the review of this court. Through this court the constitutional rights will be insured, including minority rights, religious rights, and the due process of law in matters of life and property which are necessarily withheld from Indians under the present system.

I conclude with some necessary remarks directed to the only reasoned criticism which has been brought against the Wheeler-Howard bill and the Roosevelt-Ickes Indian policy. The bill and policy, it is contended, make for racial segregation and would wall the Indians off from civilization and from modern opportunity. To meet the contention is to bring the Indian situation under a sociological searchlight.

Where the trend or drift of a race has gone in one direction—in the case of most of the Indians, downhill—for a hundred years more or less, there cannot be any sudden or easy reversal of the trend. Subtle and deep readjustments, sociological, psychological, and even biological, take place within peoples; human beings make structural adaptations to the life-limiting environment. The prison psychosis would furnish an illustration.

Space limits forbid the pursuit of this analysis, but as a practical matter, the Indian Service task has to be visioned in relation to such facts as the following:

The extreme poverty of the Indians, which was recognized as a controlling factor by the Institute for Government Research in 1928, continues unrelieved. Indeed, with data greatly enriched, the fact of Indian poverty has become more impressive. The shrinkage of landholdings, due to allotment, actually is smaller than the shrinkage of capital funds. These have disappeared altogether, in the cases of scores of tribes.

Earned income and subsistence production have continued at an almost unbelievably low level. Only when the land system is examined do the facts become credible, especially in the light of the proved readiness of Indians to work, and their ability to work efficiently, as displayed in emergency activities during the past year.

The incomplete returns have now been tabulated from 10 allotted areas in the six States of South Dakota, North Dakota, California, Kansas, Montana, and Oklahoma. The studies were made by competent investigators employed under a Civil Works grant. Case records were made for families containing 38,772 individuals. The per capita per year income was found to be $47.78, after excluding the oil and mineral royalties paid to a handful of individuals in these 10 areas.

This per capita income—$47.78—represents the earned income and the lease money and the market value of goods produced or consumed. These Indians have consumed no more than $47.78 worth of goods in the year. The ascertained figure is higher, not lower, than it would be in an average year, because Federal emergency expenditures, on works projects in the Indian country, were rising toward their peak during the time of the survey.

The poverty of the Indians contributes to their continuing morbidity and death rates. The death rate, taking the Indians as a whole, continues at twice the death rate of the general population, including the Negroes. Tuberculosis, with an Indian death rate more than seven times the white, is not yet being controlled. Trachoma is uncontrolled although clinical treatment has been multiplied tenfold since 1925.

Less tangible, but no less important, are the registrations of economic inferiority in the mental and social reactions of the Indians. Between the elder and younger generations, suppressed or open conflict rages. Between the pure bloods and the mixed bloods, conflict rages. Between the allotted Indians and the Government, conflict rages. Rarely, where these conflicts go on, are the causes understood by the Indians. The causes are objective and imminent, residing as they do in the allotment system, in the dictatorial and centralized Bureau management, and in the segregation forced upon the Indians by their poverty and their underequipment. But the conflicts, psychologically analyzed, are essentially neurotic conflicts—compensations, escapes, and rationalizations of misery. And in the allotted areas, it is largely out of the question to recapture and harness these neurotic energies for practical social tasks, because the tasks are forbidden by the law and the system.

The total effect of these and related conditions is to degrade the Indian social level, and the degradation goes steadily forward. The real values of the Indian are driven inward, insulated from world contact, and compelled to face toward remembered glory, remembered plenty, and power. And assimilation, whether biological or social, becomes for Indians, with each passing year, an assimilation into still inferior levels of the white life.

The Indian Rights Association, in company with some of the missionaries, fears the policies of Secretary Ickes' administration, and looks with doubt on the Wheeler-Howard bill, on the ground, stated above, that the policies and the bill are working toward the segregation of Indians. I have stated the facts of Indian poverty because, from any point of view, they are controlling in the appraisal of the Indian situation, but also because they dispose, I believe, of the segregation argument. The Indians today are segregated by factors all-penetrating, infinitely more potent than mere geographical segregations could ever be. Their extreme poverty segregates them. Their inferiority status in law intensifies their segregation. Their infectious diseases segregate them. Their inferiority sentiment, elaborately planted at the center of their consciousness by deliberate governmental policy as well as by the unintended action of poverty, effectually segregates them.

Their ancient interests and loyalties, which are far from being extinct, are by these same conditions imprisoned, and denied the chance to partake in social action, to salvage themselves through development and change.

And the Indian, in his profounder psyche, is condemned to that which could be termed a "social-psychic infantilism" a dream-escape to the social mother—that social mother who, to the Indian, is always his own tribe. Yet even this escape takes with it a conflict into the very heart of the Indian's life. Due to the rendering of the ancient values powerless by social segregation, insecurity, and inferiority haunt even this inmost refuge or shrine.

The mechanisms and policies of the Wheeler-Howard bill are, first and last, a prescription for bringing this Indian segregation to an end.

HAWAII, THE OUTCAST—EDITORIAL FROM THE HONOLULU TIMES

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] I ask that there be inserted in the RECORD an editorial from the Honolulu Times of April 28, 1934, entitled "Hawaii, the Outcast."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HAWAII, THE OUTCAST

Hawaii, kicked out of the Union by the recent act of Congress which says, in effect, that this American Territory is not an integral part of the United States, stands now in the position of Lazarus waiting for the crumbs to fall from the rich man's table.

Having been denied its just rights, Hawaii is humbly asking for charity.

Having been told by the National Legislature that we have no rights which the Federal Government is bound to respect, that we exist only by sufferance, and that we may produce only so much of our principal crop as the Secretary of Agriculture in his boundless wisdom and the kindness of his heart shall say we may, we must now humbly beg of him that our industry and prosperity be not entirely destroyed.

A few kind words have been thrown to us as a bone might be tossed to a hungry dog.

Those who engineered, through Congress, the Jones-Costigan sugar control bill, with its infamous provision that Hawaii, in common with Puerto Rico, the Philippines, and the Virgin Islands, may produce only as much sugar as Mr. Wallace, within certain broad limitations, shall permit, are now soothingly telling us that we may be sure of getting a fair deal.

Fair deal? We already have been given a raw deal. Any administrative mitigation of the harshness of that raw deal can come only as charity, not as justice.

For justice has been denied us.

For the moment Hawaii is helpless. Her business envoys, together with her official representative in Washington, can only go, hat in hand, to the Secretary of Agriculture and plead with him not too drastically to reduce the amount of sugar this Territory may produce.

The best that can be hoped for is that the Government official who has been created by act of Congress the czar of the sugar industry and the absolute master of the destinies of Hawaii and its 360,000 people will extend to us a little of the charity he and his fellows in the administration have for Cuba and Wall Street.

The prospects, it must be admitted, are not encouraging. For Secretary Wallace has put himself on record as believing that the American sugar industry ought to be completely destroyed because it is not "economically efficient." Mr. Wallace, however, says the time has not yet come to do away with the entire American sugar industry—but he can at least make a beginning by crippling the sugar industry of Hawaii.

And Senator COSTIGAN, who worked the sugar control bill through Congress, has stated publicly that the time may come when it will be advisable to put an end to the insular sugar industry. That, insofar as the production of American sugar is concerned, would give a monopoly to his own Colorado and the other beet-sugar States.

It may be that Secretary Wallace may be charitably inclined and will allot Hawaii a sugar quota not greatly less than the amount of sugar now produced. But that will not be justice; it will be charity.

Hawaii would stand in a far better position if Congress had fixed a quota for the Territory, just as it did for the mainland sugar industry, even though that quota might be much smaller than may be alloted by the Secretary of Agriculture. For it would at least have been recognition of the fact that Hawaii is an integral part of the United States and entitled to the same treatment as that accorded other parts of the Union. It would have been recognition of Hawaii's rights as a part of the Union.

But Hawaii's rights have been denied; and the implications of that denial are ominous.

If in the matter of sugar production Hawaii can be treated differently than the rest of the United States, then Hawaii can be treated differently in any and all other matters.

If, while allotting to the mainland sugar States a sugar quota equal to or approximating the amount heretofore produced, Congress can legally give the Secretary of Agriculture authority to reduce Hawaii's sugar production by 200,000 tons, then Congress can legally authorize him to prohibit the production of any sugar at all in Hawaii.

And if the production of sugar may be so limited or prohibited, then the same is true of pineapples, potatoes, taro, and dried squid.

Nor are Hawaii and the Hawaiian sugar industry alone in being placed in jeopardy by the act of Congress limiting sugar production. The mainland sugar States fare well in the present allotment of quotas, but what assurance is there that they will always fare well?

If, for the sake of aiding Cuba and the Cuban sugar industry, Congress can limit the amount of American sugar produced, then it is conceivable that some day an administration unduly friendly to France might wish to aid that country by prohibiting the manufacture of wine in America. Or it might be felt desirable to curry friendship with Japan by forbidding Americans to engage in industries that compete with the industries of the Japanese.

Limitation of the amount of sugar that shall be produced in the United States is not on the same footing as the restrictions on cotton production imposed by the Bankhead cotton control bill. For the United States has been producing more cotton than could be used in this country and more than could profitably be sold abroad, with the result that the price of cotton had dropped to a calamitous level and the cotton industry was in dire straits. Limitation of production of cotton is intended to increase the price.

But only about one-third as much sugar is produced in the United States, including Hawaii, as is consumed in the country. The comparatively low price is not due to domestic overproduction but to overproduction in Cuba. It is Cuba, not American growers, that the Jones-Costigan bill is intended to help.

Nor does the Jones-Costigan bill contemplate any material increase in the price of sugar. On the contrary, President Roosevelt and his administration insist that the price to the consumer shall not be increased. And it is difficult to see how sugar producers, at least those in Hawaii, are to be helped by the complicated and vague provisions for a processing tax.

However, all those things are details comparatively unimportant. What is important, and serious, is that Congress has read Hawaii out of the Union, denied the Territory its just rights and compelled it to beg for charity.

And that is precisely what, it seems, the Territory must do, or at least what is expedient to do, for the present.

But Hawaii cannot afford to let the matter ride. The issue has been raised and it must be determined in the only way it can be effectively and permanently determined, by an appeal to the courts. Insofar as the Jones-Costigan bill affects Hawaii, it seems to be plainly unconstitutional. But only the Supreme Court of the United States can say so finally.

If the law is held constitutional as regards Hawaii, then the Territory must resign itself to being an unwanted stepchild and to accepting humbly as charity what it has been accustomed to regard as rights.

MEMORIAL DAY—ARTICLE BY A. DONALD ANDERSON

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD an article entitled "Memorial Day", by A. Donald Anderson, I believe the Members of the Senate would like to read it.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORIAL DAY

By A. Donald Anderson

Today is Memorial Day. At a monument symbolic to the lives of millions of gallant soldiers men will speak a tribute and offer prayers for those fallen heroes. They will go on to say how gloriously they fought, and how grand a privilege it is to serve one's country, that we all, each and every one of us, should feel as though the supreme sacrifice, while fighting for one's country (regardless of the cause) is a death to be greeted with a smile; nothing is greater nor more honorable. Arrested by the beautiful march music, the pictures of honor, reward, and glory painted with the words of masterful orators, some of the young audience would, if asked, enroll there at the foot of the tombstone of the Unknown Hero.

Tomorrow Memorial Day will be yesterday. We will not be attracted by scheduled speeches and prayers and the beautifully composed march music nor the memory of the dead heroes. We will read of public leaders who, with all their strength, pleaded and urged men to go to the front to defend their country and its material wealth, but who are now denouncing and damning every effort to pay the soldiers or their survivors a cash bonus. We are attracted by the marching of the hungry, the roaming of the homeless, the cry of pain of those in agony. We see heroes of that war, and wars before, so badly physically wrecked that death alone will end their sufferings. Amongst those cast into the streets to be trod upon are the survivors of men of war because selfish, cruel, and unjust laws do not provide for them as they should.

What price glory! What price hypocrisy! What price for material greed!

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 3041. An act to effectuate the purpose of certain statutes concerning rates of pay for labor, by making it unlawful to prevent anyone from receiving the compensation contracted for thereunder, and for other purposes;

S. 3211. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Chesapeake Bay between Baltimore and Kent Counties, Md.;

S. 3540. An act to amend section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933; and

S. 3640. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Tensas Basin Levee Board of the State of Louisiana to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Bayou Bartholomew at or near its mouth in Morehouse Parish, La.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 74. An act to authorize payment of expenses of formulating claims of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians of Oklahoma against the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 2046. An act to provide relief for disbursing officers of the Army in certain cases; and

S. 3615. An act authorizing the county of Wahkiakum, a legal political subdivision of the State of Washington, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River between Puget Island and the mainland, Cathlamet, State of Washington.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 2647. An act prescribing the procedure and practice in condemnation proceedings brought by the United States of America, conferring plenary jurisdiction on the district courts of the United States to condemn and quiet title to land being acquired for public use, and for other purposes; and

S. 3502. An act authorizing the Oregon-Washington Bridge Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Oreg.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate;

H.R. 4554. An act to amend section 4808 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 24, sec. 3) to prevent discriminatory reductions in pay of the retired personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps;

H.R. 5791. An act to add certain lands to the Challis National Forest;

H.R. 8460. An act to amend section 392 of title 5 of the United States Code;

H.R. 8539. An act to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the United Confederate Veterans' 1934 Reunion at Chattanooga, Tenn.;

H.R. 8728. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to lease or to sell certain lands and buildings, known as "Camp Eagle Pass, Tex.," to the city of Eagle Pass, Tex.;

H.R. 8954. An act to amend an act approved June 14, 1932 (47 Stat. 306), entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River";

H.R. 9145. An act to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Rochester, N.Y., August 14, 15, and 16, 1934;

H.R. 9233. An act authorizing associations of producers of aquatic products;

H.R. 9391. An act to provide for a census of unemployment, employment, and occupations to be taken as of November 12, 1934, and for other purposes;

H.R. 9547. An act to amend section 766 of the Revised Statutes, as amended;

H.R. 9571. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Essex County, in the State of Massachusetts, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Merrimack River, in the city of Lawrence, Mass.;

H.R. 9618. An act authorizing the Sistersville Bridge board of trustees to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at Sistersville, Tyler County, W.Va.;

H.R. 9645. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Washington, Mo.;

H.R. 9646. An act to authorize the acquisition of additional land for the Upper Mississippi River Wild Life and Fish Refuge; and

H.R. 9829. An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act with respect to the processing tax on hogs.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H.R. 311. An act for the relief of Martin Henry Waterman, deceased;

PROCEDURE AND PRACTICE IN CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2647) prescribing the procedure and practice in condemnation proceedings brought by the United States of America, conferring plenary jurisdiction on the district courts of the United States to condemn and quiet title to land being acquired for public use, and for other purposes.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the bill with the amendments of the House be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred or ordered to be placed on the calendar as indicated below:

H.R. 4554. An act to amend section 4808 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 24, sec. 3) to prevent discriminatory reductions in pay of the retired personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps;

H.R. 8539. An act to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the United Confederate Veterans' 1934 reunion at Chattanooga, Tenn.; and

H.R. 9145. An act to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Rochester, N.Y., August 14, 15, and 16, 1934; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H.R. 5791. An act to add certain lands to the Challis National Forest; and

H.R. 8954. An act to amend an act approved June 14, 1932 (47 Stat. 306), entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River"; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

H.R. 8460. An act to amend section 392 of title 5 of the United States Code; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

H.R. 8728. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to lease or to sell certain lands and buildings, known as "Camp Eagle Pass, Tex.", to the city of Eagle Pass, Tex.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H.R. 9547. An act to amend section 766 of the Revised Statutes, as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H.R. 9571. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Essex County, in the State of Massachusetts, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Merrimack River, in the city of Lawrence, Mass.; and

H.R. 9645. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Washington, Mo.; to the Committee on Commerce.

H.R. 9646. An act to authorize the acquisition of additional land for the Upper Mississippi River Wild Life and Fish Refuge; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

H.R. 9233. An act authorizing associations of producers of aquatic products; and

H.R. 9391. An act to provide for a census of unemployment, employment, and occupations to be taken as of November 12, 1934, and for other purposes; to the calendar.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS

Mr. FESS obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I have received a number of telegrams from Arizona protesting against the adjournment of Congress until certain legislation described in the telegrams shall have been enacted. I ask unanimous consent to have them printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the telegrams will be printed in the RECORD.

The telegrams are as follows:

Railroad employees will be greatly disappointed if Congress adjourns before adopting Senate bills 3266 and 3231.
(Signed by 14 citizens of Arizona.)

Respectfully urge you work for passage S. 3231 and S. 3266 before adjourning.
(Signed by 35 citizens of Arizona.)

We are deeply interested in passage amendments labor act, 3231 and 3266, pension bills. Your quick action in passage before adjournment will be of untold value to railroad fraternity, and act as relief to unemployed. Your support will be graciously returned.
(Signed by four citizens of Arizona.)

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there is at this time quite naturally much speculation in the press as to when Congress will adjourn; and inasmuch as I doubt if the adjournment resolution when presented will be debatable, I therefore embrace the present opportunity to say that I am opposed to any adjournment of Congress until the legislation helpful toward national recovery and within reasonable range of accomplishment shall have been enacted.

This Congress has, in Milton's noble words, been able—

To scorn delights and live laborious days.

Industrious as this Congress has been, it should not, in my opinion, adjourn unless and until its task shall have been fully performed.

In this life perplexing problems constantly recur. The time and energy that one might expend in trying to avoid difficult problems would in most cases, if applied to the problems, solve them. No Member of this Congress has or could conceivably have more deeply personal and political reasons for an adjournment than I have. Indeed, I make no concealment of the fact that I am anxious to go home and reconstruct some political fences that are now, as I am advised, in a condition of disrepair. I am convinced, however, that I should cut a sorry figure were I to abandon my duties here, or were I to assist in securing an early adjournment which might be to the great detriment of the country at large in order that I might return to the more pleasing work of rehabilitating my political fortunes.

I am convinced that the people, not only of Arizona but of the other States, will not permit the political interests of anyone to suffer who is here, without default and without complaint, doing the day's work for which he has been chosen and for which he is being compensated.

It is far better that I should lose the nomination than that I should be remiss and truant to my duty here, especially in these trying times, when our citizens are exhibiting so much patience and fortitude and are making so many sacrifices. I can with equanimity sustain any political defeat, but I have not the temerity—the audacity—to face the charge that I abandoned my post here to promote my reelection.

One of the most powerful reasons for adopting the amendment abolishing "lame ducks", which amendment was so ably championed by my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], was that the 4th of March deadline would be erased, and Congress would be left free to adjourn at discretion when its task was finished.

Therefore, I hereby register in advance a protest against adjournment until, as I said before, all the legislative business within the domain of reasonableness shall have been performed.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, whatever comment may be made upon the rare talent of the distinguished Senator from Arizona, no one will claim that he is short on political psychology. He expresses the sentiment that probably is in the minds of a great many Senators.

MONETARY USE AND PURCHASE OF SILVER

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9745) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes.

Thursday, June 7, 1934

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I hesitate to enter upon the discussion of a subject of this nature at this hour of the day. I feel like paraphrasing the expression of a great orator, who, when speaking in the city of Indianapolis, said:

The past rises before me like a dream.

When we discussed this subject, the particular past that I have in mind is 1896. In that year came the climax of one of the most exciting discussions that ever took place in the political history of the country. The climax came not so much because of the points of dispute in the contest, or of any particular philosophy, but the crisis was, in a smaller measure, very much as we see it today.

We had gone through the depression which began early in 1893, and everyone was looking for a remedy by means of which we could emerge. The silver question had been discussed throughout the country, and especially in the Houses of Congress. In fact, it was a very interesting topic of congressional dispute in 1896. The history of the issue which found its climax at that time covers the entire period of our national life.

I, myself, at the time interested in college work, and having some familiarity with the subject of finance from the standpoint of the classroom, made a trip to Columbus to listen to the speech of a statesman who was regarded as an authority on finance, John Sherman. He made a very remarkable address. It was clear-cut, there was no extra verbiage, no ambiguity, but it set out the issue in a very concise manner. It attracted such wide attention that it was fully reported in the great newspapers of the country.

I have before me now a copy of that speech of John Sherman as taken from the New York Times. As I read it, I have a vivid recollection of the exciting personal experience I enjoyed as I sat in the audience and listened to this remarkable address. Let me read the first paragraph:

> At the coming Presidential election there will be submitted to your judgment two questions, one of which is whether any holder of silver bullion may deposit it at the mints of the United States and have it coined for his benefit and without cost to him into silver dollars, each of the weight of 412½ grains of standard silver 0.9 fine, and may tender them for any debt, public or private. The other question, in levying duties or taxes on imported goods, we should only consider the revenue required, or whether, while raising the needed revenue, we should seek also to protect and encourage domestic industry; the one is called "revenue tariff" and the other "protective tariff." Both the silver and tariff are vital questions of domestic policy, of equal importance, but I propose on this occasion to confine my remarks mainly to what is known as the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 parts of silver to 1 of gold. This issue is thrust upon us by the Democratic Party, or rather, by the populistic branch of the Democratic Party.

This statement I am reading because it coincides with my own view:

> Gold and silver coins are recognized by all commercial nations of the world as the best standards of value, as the measure of every article of desire, of everything that is bought or sold. These two metals not only measure all other things, but they measure each other. Their relative value constantly changes. Twenty-three years ago 16 ounces of silver were worth more than 1 ounce of gold. Now 31 ounces of silver can be bought with 1 ounce of gold. This fluctuation of value cannot be prevented by law. It is beyond the reach of legislation. It is caused by the changing demand for and the increasing supply of these metals from the mines. Both are necessary as money, silver to supply the daily wants of life and gold to measure the larger transactions of business, especially in exchange with foreign nations.

Then Mr. Sherman proceeds to discuss the difficulty of maintaining the parity of these two metals.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BANKHEAD in the Chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the statement made by the late Senator Sherman illustrates—I shall not say his lack of familiarity with bimetallism, the question of gold and silver, but certainly that he failed to take into account the fact that during the period of 23 years to which he referred silver had been demonetized in a number of countries, and that that was responsible for its decline in value. The decline in value of silver was not due to the increased use of gold in the arts or for money, except as the increase was necessitated by reason of the demonetization of silver, or to a diminished demand for silver, except insofar as that diminished demand was the result of demonetization.

The Senator will recall that when the gold mines of California and Australia poured their golden stream into the channels of trade and commerce, a number of the countries of Europe—notably Austria and a number of the states of Germany—demonetized gold; and immediately in those states gold in their domestic transaction shrank in value, and silver increased in value. That result was not because of any increased demands for commercial purposes; but the change in the relative value, one measured by the other, was the result of the demonetization of gold.

If gold should be demonetized today throughout the world—and we may have done it in our country—the demonetization of gold would reduce its value. The demonetization of silver reduced its value measured by gold. The violent fluctuations referred to by the Senator from Ohio were the direct result of demonetization acts rather than an increase or a decrease in the production of those metals.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. While agreeing with everything the Senator from Utah has said, it is satisfying to me to note that the distinguished Senator recognized that both gold and silver were standard moneys of our country at the time of which he is speaking, and that they were basic moneys everywhere. He did not believe that a ratio could be brought about between them.

It will also be remembered that it was Senator Sherman who desired to increase the amount of silver money in our country.

The bill pending before the Senate does not attempt to establish any ratio. It does attempt to do just what Sherman did in the Sherman Act—to increase the proportion of silver in our circulating monetary system. I may say that at the very time Senator Sherman was attempting by means of the Sherman Act to increase the amount of silver in our monetary system, the percentage of silver to gold was over twice as great as it is now. Our monetary system was not so badly maladjusted at that time as it now is.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in the course of the discussion I intend to make I shall pay attention to the subjects mentioned by the two Senators in indicating the progress of this dispute as we see it in our own history and in that of other countries. I read the statement of Senator Sherman with personal approval. I have always believed that silver, being one of the precious metals, ought to be given a monetary value if it can be done without driving out of circulation another kind of money which is more valuable, thus putting us upon a purely silver basis.

I do not see any possibility of the policy of bimetallism in actual, successful operation in our own country, unless we can secure an agreement with the chief countries of the world with which we trade to adopt the same policy. I had hoped—I really had an abiding hope—that our leadership might be able to induce the commercial countries of the world to decide upon a basis for bimetallism. If for any reason they refuse to do it, I do not see the possibility of our utilizing that policy in our country alone.

I admit, Mr. President, that under the anomalous condition we now have in our monetary situation, Gresham's law does not apply as it did when we were on a bimetallic basis or on a gold basis. We did not coin any silver dollars, to speak of, between 1834 and 1873, not because it was illegal, but because the holder of silver had more purchasing power in bullion than he had in coin, and he would not be so foolish as to take his bullion and have it coined and be given back a coin that was worth less than what he had coined. For that reason, no matter how many silver dollars we coined, they would have gone out of circulation by virtue of the operation of Gresham's law.

The vice of the contention for 16 to 1 in 1896, without an agreement with other countries with which we were dealing, was that it would have given full sway to the operation of that law, which is that the cheaper metal would have driven out of circulation the dearer, and placed us on the basis of the cheaper metal. That law is just as certain in its operation as is the law of gravitation. It is really a question whether it would apply today, because we have no gold in circulation; we have not any gold basis; that is, there is no power of redemption in gold of our present paper currency.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Speaking of Gresham's law, for 199 years, from the time Sir Isaac Newton established the ratio between gold and silver in England, neither drove the other out of England. They were both used interchangeably for 199 years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator again suffer an interruption? Then I shall not interrupt again.

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator will also recall that after Great Britain had demonetized silver, France, under the leadership of a very great political economist and a great statesman, fixed the ratio at 15½ to 1, and opened the mints of the country to the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold. The ratio was maintained without the slightest interruption until 1872, when Germany took one billion in gold by way of indemnity from France, then debased her own silver and flooded France with it; and then the Latin union pursued the evil course which had been adopted by Germany and the United States.

Mr. FESS. The Senator's historical citation is correct, that Germany demonetized silver in 1872 after the indemnity of $1,000,000,000 was paid her in 1871. The interesting point of the question of the Senator from Idaho is that I think he means to deny that Gresham's law would operate if we had both the metals as standard money.

Mr. BORAH. What I meant to say was that in actual historical fact Gresham's law did not operate in the instance I cited.

Mr. FESS. I cannot dispute the Senator's statement, because I have not looked up the matter; but if, in this country we had two metals on a parity, both of them used as commodities—even though they were not bought and sold as commodities, they would have to be mined by labor and paid for—I cannot believe that by law the two could be kept at a fixed ratio. I think the operation of Gresham's law would cause the cheaper metal to drive out of circulation the dearer. It may be assumed that by law the two can be kept equal in value, but I do not see the possibility of that.

Mr. BORAH. I readily admit that if, for instance, there were today throughout the world certain ratios between gold and silver, and the United States fixed a different ratio between gold and silver, and by reason of those ratios one or the other of the metals were more valuable in one country than in another, the metal would travel to the country in which it was most valuable.

Mr. FESS. It certainly would.

Mr. BORAH. I admit that; but in a country where both gold and silver are acceptable as legal tender in full payment of all debts, and perform exactly the same kind of service, and just as effectively, why should one drive out the other?

Mr. FESS. If one becomes more valuable than the other, it drives out the other because the one is more valuable. That seems to be the undisputed or uncontroverted fact in law. Simply because I should prefer to have the better value, the metal that has the greater value, to the one that has the lesser value, the one that I should hoard would be the one that had the greater value.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. Speaking of the pending measure, does the Senator think it would tend to drive gold out of the country even if we were under conditions which existed 2 or 3 years ago?

Mr. FESS. I rather think it would. If I correctly read and understand the measure, we are to buy the silver. We are to issue silver certificates for that silver. Those silver certificates can be redeemed in silver. The bill makes silver the basis of that circulation. If gold were in circulation, it would have to be upon some particular basis. Unless we could by law—which I do not concede to be possible—make the gold equal to the silver, the cheaper would evidently drive out of circulation the dearer.

Mr. PITTMAN. Going back to just before we demonetized gold a few months ago, why did not gold then leave the country?

Mr. FESS. The Senator must understand that up to the demonetization of gold, or the enactment of the gold legislation, we were proceeding under the law of July 14, 1900, which made gold the standard of value. All other moneys could be redeemed in gold. Silver virtually stood on the gold basis, because it could be converted.

Mr. PITTMAN. There was no redemption of silver or silver certificates in gold.

Mr. FESS. It was not specifically so stated.

Mr. PITTMAN. And in fact it was not so.

Mr. FESS. I think in fact it was so. There was no redemption for the greenback, but it was put on a parity under the law of 1900, which made gold the standard of all our currency without reference to whether it was silver, bank notes, or what not.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does the pending measure——

Mr. FESS. Let me say to the Senator that I do not think the Gresham law will operate under the condition of gold today.

Mr. PITTMAN. I did not want to question the Senator about that. I had in mind another question. Let us go back to 5 years ago. Would the measure which we now have before us in any way change the situation with regard to the redemption of silver certificates under conditions as they then existed?

Mr. FESS. No; I think not, except that with the law of 1900 operating, silver certificates, while not specifically redeemable in gold, being redeemable in silver, were on the basis of gold. People felt they could present their silver certificates or their silver dollars and get a piece of money that was equal to gold.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does the pending measure in any way change the law of 1900 with regard to that feature?

Mr. FESS. No; I think not. The only thing the bill proposes to do is specifically to state that the silver certificate is redeemable in silver.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is there any difference between that provision and the law of 1900?

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. PITTMAN. Therefore the measure does not endanger any condition that has existed from 1900 up to this time?

Mr. FESS. I think not, so far as the redemption feature goes.

Mr. President, while I have been listening to the discussion, which has been very able, I have been thinking how little interest there seems to be in the subject throughout the country. If we look at the newspapers, we find that no editorials disclosing any degree of interest such as we would anticipate should attend the discussion of a subject of this kind, especially with the background of the discussion had in other days. We cannot stir up any interest in the subject. Even individual Senators do not seem to be extremely interested in it. I am wondering why it is.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Perhaps they are all numb! [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. No; I do not think it is because they are all numb.

Mr. KING. Perhaps they are all dumb? [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. No; it is not that, either. There seems to be a different cycle of thought existing from any I have known. For instance, in previous legislation we gave to the President absolute unlimited authority to coin silver at any ratio he chose. Any one of numerous things of that kind would have created the most fierce discussion if we had attempted to do it 30 years ago, and yet we have that full authority turned over to an individual without restraining him by any kind of qualifications. Just how to explain that lack of interest I do not know.

I have been interested from three angles in the discussion of the silver question as it has been discussed in modern days and as it has been presented by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. Let me say that I think the people of his State should recognize the untiring efforts he has put forth in giving what he thinks is a proper recognition to this particular phase, not only of a product of the country but the monetary value of that product to the country.

I think of the days of the famous William M. Stewart, and the no-less famous John P. Jones, and the equally famous Francis G. Newlands, who gave great renown to the State of Nevada, largely because of the position they took in their high-grade discussions of the silver question. I doubt whether anyone has to his credit more untiring effort of record than has the author of the bill now before us. I want to pay him that tribute. Since he presented the bill in its various phases I have given rather sympathetic attention to what he said.

I believe we ought to encourage any industry of the country, even if it be nothing more than a commercial product, which represents any amount of investment, employs labor, and, of course, is the last feature the Senator from Nevada has in mind.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FESS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thank the Senator for his kind and complimentary words. I wish to say, however, that he does me entirely too much honor when he designates me as the author of the bill. When I presented the bill, in my opening remarks, I stated that it was the outgrowth of 5 or 6 weeks of work on the part of a voluntary group, whose names I gave at that time, in conference with representatives of the Treasury Department, and finally of the President of the United States.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator's modesty does him credit. He evidently had more to do with it than he is willing to admit here—to say nothing about his collaborators who worked with him.

If we discuss the subject from the standpoint of what industry represents, it becomes immediately important, especially if in its development it is to do good; and if we, by our efforts, give it some monetary phase that would not do any harm—that, of course, is the question which is uppermost in my mind.

I desire to discuss the subject of the demand for silver from the monetary standpoint; and I shall give data the chief source of which is a recent publication from the Brookings Institution on the subject of silver.

I have here a table showing the net coinage of silver of the specified countries from 1900 to 1931. These countries are the United States, Austria-Hungary, Austria and Hungary, Australia, Canada, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, India, Indo China, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, Persia, and Russia. I shall not take the time to comment upon the changes from year to year; but I ask the privilege of inserting the data in the RECORD, because they are quite valuable in the study of this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

[1] Indicates balance between coinage and withdrawals.

Compiled from Annual Reports of the Director of the Mint. These net figures were obtained by subtracting from the total annual domestic coinage of each country the amount of domestic coin withdrawn from monetary use. The coins struck and the coins withdrawn were converted into fine ounces on the basis of their legal content; or, where only the value of the fine silver consumed in coinage or withdrawn from circulation was given, the fine silver content was derived by dividing the value by the average price of silver in London.

The minus sign indicates that withdrawals from monetary use were greater than new coinage.

This total is incomplete, as data for Hungary, Japan, Persia, and Russia are not available.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the war greatly affected silver coinage. It induced large issues of paper currency, with inevitable inflation of prices, which compelled greater use of silver by the allied countries, and the reduced use of it in the central countries, which, in time, discontinued the coinage of silver entirely. This situation during the World War induced a large use of silver in India, and it was largely purchased from the United States during 1918 and 1919. Then, in 1920, the debasement of silver by many countries began.

I recall, while a Member of the other branch of Congress during the midst of the war, a sort of a signal call, a warning which came to us that because of a certain situation in India we ought to make possible, without debate, a certain allotment of silver for a use which seemed to be absolutely essential in winning the war. I recall asking someone in the House why a subject of such popular import was not permitted to be discussed. We were asked by the committee to allow the measure to be put through without any debate. That was done. It was at a time when the world situation was so critical that we were left under the impression that certain things ought not to be made public. That situation, as the chairman of the committee remembers, provided a great market for silver for a time; but in 1920 these countries began to debase their silver. No official statistics of the amount of silver derived from demonetization and debasement are available, but unofficial estimates of the amount sold from those sources have been prepared by the firm of Handy & Harman. I ask unanimous consent to have the table showing the current of debasement by the several countries from 1920 to 1932 inserted in the RECORD without reading. The figures are in millions of fine ounces.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

	Sales
1922	43
1923	45
1925	30
1927	18
1928	60
1929	67
1930	72
Total	543

The quantity derived from these sources is probably somewhat larger than the amount sold, as a number of countries still have a reserve of retired silver. France, for instance, has disposed of only a part of its demonetized silver, and India has a large supply for sale.

Mr. FESS. The war tended to drive silver out of circulation in all countries except Great Britain, where the circulation increased heavily, I think about two and a half times. Since that time Britain has entered upon the debasement of the metal. In view of the fact that there is a demand for increased silver circulation in the United States, a study of the table I have before me is important.

Mr. President, this table shows the standard silver dollars in circulation and the standard silver dollars and silver certificates outside of the United States Treasury for the years from 1900 to 1932, giving in one column the silver dollars in circulation and also the percentage of silver currency outside of the Treasury; in another column the silver currency outside of the Treasury, in millions of dollars, and the percentage of such currency. This is a very interesting study, especially the percentages. I shall not take the time to read it. I had intended to comment on the different years, but instead of doing so I ask unanimous consent to insert the table in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FESS. It will be of value to observe the holdings of some of the leading banks in the leading countries of the world. Not only have the silver holdings of the 18 banks I have selected decreased relatively, but they have decreased absolutely, as shown by the following 5-year averages given in millions of dollars:

In the 4 years from 1900 to 1904, on an average, the banks held $501,600,000.

From 1905 to 1909 they held, on an average, thirteen millions more, an increase.

From 1910 to 1914 there was a decrease from $514,000,000 to $471,000,000.

Then from 1915 to 1919 there was a further decrease to $306,700,000, which is a decrease of nearly $170,000,000.

Then in the next 4 years, from 1920 to 1924, the holdings were further reduced to $290,000,000.

Then, in the next 4 years, from 1925 to 1929, the holdings of the banks were further reduced about $20,000,000, to $273,000,000.

I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the table showing the silver holdings as percentages of total metallic holdings of these 18 banks of issue from 1900 to 1929.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FESS. It is interesting to me to know just how much of a demand there is for silver outside the monetary value—say, for example, the industrial demand. I will take it in the United States, Great Britain, France, Sweden, and Switzerland. These are the five great countries using silver.

From 1900 to 1904 the United States used 17,400,000 fine ounces, while the other four countries—this is the amount in industrial use—used 17,300,000 ounces, or a little less than the United States.

In the next 4 years, from 1905 to 1909, the United States used, for industrial purposes, 24,400,000 fine ounces, while all the rest of the countries used but 20,600,000 ounces. In other words, the other four countries used a little less than two-thirds of the amount which the United States used.

From 1915 to 1919 on an average the United States used 31,000,000 plus, while the other four countries used only 10,300,000. In other words, the United States used three times in industry, outside the monetary value, the silver these other four countries used.

The next 4 years, on an average, the United States used 34,000,000, while the other four countries used 18,000,000.

The next 4 years, up to 1929, the United States used 39,000,000, and the other four countries but 18,000,000.

I give these figures as to the consumption of silver for industrial purposes by these five countries, outside the monetary requirements.

The classes of use the United States has made of silver for industrial purposes are given in the following table:

Classes of uses

	1928	1929	1930	1931
	Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent
Sterling ware	36.4	34.4	31.5	37.4
Photographic	25.4	26.6	31.5	27.9
Electroplating	14.9	14.4	11.6	9.8
Jewelry, optical, etc.	8.6	9.0	9.2	8.8
Chemical	6.0	6.2	7.0	6.2
All others	8.7	9.4	9.2	9.9

A study of these figures opens up the question in what particular fields there is an increased demand for silver for use industrially.

Mr. President, I now wish to pass to other countries in ascertaining the demand for the use of silver. First, I take India, and limit the demand to other than monetary purposes.

Private uses known as hoarding take the form of ornaments and bullion in the ratio of 90 to 10. These are interconvertible.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. To make that clear, the ornaments in India are the money of the women, because they cannot inherit property, and when famine comes, they cut a little piece of silver off, go to the bazaar, and with it they buy food. While it has the name of jewelry, it is money to them.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator. I recall seeing that statement somewhere. I was interested to know just how the ornaments could be used. I am informed that ornaments serve for decorative values and for capital. Since 1921 India has consumed annually, on an average, 85,000,000 ounces of silver for other than monetary purposes, 35 percent of the world's annual production.

Mr. PITTMAN. They class that as nonmonetary use.

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. But, under the interpretation in India, it is monetary use.

Mr. FESS. The trade movement in India, measured by the use of silver, is shown by the following table:

Net private imports of silver into India compared with net private imports of gold and net private exports of merchandise, 1900–1932 [1]

[1] Compiled from annual Accounts Relating to the Sea-borne Trade and Navigation of British India, Department of Commercial Intelligence and Statistics, Calcutta. The original figures, which were in rupees or pounds sterling, have been converted into dollars at the average rate of exchange of each year. The war years 1915–19 were omitted from consideration because, owing to the world shortage of gold and silver, to the many impediments to the free flow of treasure, and to the restriction on private importation of treasure by the Indian Government, practically no gold or silver was imported into India on private account during this period.

Friday, June 8, 1934

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, yesterday I set out to make a study of whether the claim made for this measure by its proponents is justified by the facts of trade. In order to do that I desired to deal with silver as a commodity in the country as well as a monetary factor, in order that we might know just how much the price of silver is influenced by what is alleged to be discrimination against that metal.

It is necessary to get at the real demands for silver. Then it is necessary to have some idea of the supply of silver, as well as to designate the uses to which it is being applied.

In order to do this I shall use some graphs which indicate the direction of the currents, both of production and consumption, not only of silver but of other commodities which are bought and sold in the same currents of trade in which silver is bought and sold.

When we adjourned last night I was using the case of India, and I will use also the case of China, which is really the great silver-consuming country.

In reference to India, a study of the figures shows that net imports of silver vary little from year to year, and that while India's demand for gold for private use is largely determined by the trade balance, its demand for silver for private use bears very little fixed relationship to the trade balance, a fact which is generally not agreed to or admitted. It is also shown that the contention is unfounded that gold imports for private use increase at the expense of silver. That fact is shown by figures which I wish to give the Senate.

In 1921 net private imports of silver, compared with the net imports for Government use, were fifty-one and four-tenths million ounces. The imports for Government use were only three-tenths of a million fine ounces.

In the next year there was an increase of imports for private use of 26,000,000 ounces, which was an increase of a little over 50 percent. There was a net import for Government use of 1,000,000 ounces, which was an increase also of about seven-tenths of a million ounces.

In the year 1923 the increase for private use was 16,000,000, while for Government use the figure remained exactly the same.

In the next year, 1924, there was a decrease of 5,000,000 ounces in the importations for private use, and a decrease of about eight-tenths of 1,000,000 in importations for Government use.

The figure for 1925 is very significant. There was an increase of importations of 13,000,000 fine ounces for private use, and instead of there being any imports for Government use, there was a net export from India of one-tenth of a million ounces.

In 1926, a banner year, there was an increase which amounted to 6,000,000 ounces for private use and also an increase for government use of two-tenths of a million ounces.

In 1927 the decline started in the use for private purposes, and it went down with rather unusual speed. In the year 1927 there was a falling off for private use of 12,000,000 ounces and there was a falling off for Government use of one-tenth of a million.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope we can have better order. It is difficult to hear the Senator, there is so much conversation in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair). The Chair will ask the visitors in the galleries to refrain from conversation. The Senate is glad to have them here, but conversation annoys any Senator who may be addressing the Senate. The Chair asks Senators also to refrain from conversation.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I appreciate the suggestion. A discussion of this question cannot be of any particular concern to one who does not have some special interest in the study of the problem. As I stated yesterday, it is most amazing to me that a subject which a little over 30 years ago stirred our people as no other subject presented to them ever did is of such little interest today that no one outside of those who are particularly concerned in this problem cares a fig for it. It seems impossible to arouse interest in the country in the matter, as is shown by the editorials in the newspapers. One who went through the campaign of 1896, and compares the interest of the people of that day with that manifested by our people today, finds the most remarkable contrast. So I cannot complain of anyone who fails to give attention to these dry figures. However, they are the very basis of the study of the question. We cannot discuss it by appeal to mere sentiment, as has been done so often. We have to have figures which will demonstrate whether the suggestions made in arguments for this legislation will justify its enactment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator, I assume, is taking the figures from Mr. Pasvolsky's book recently published by the Brookings Institution.

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. KING. What significance does the Senator attach to those figures, particularly in view of the fact that in India, as the Senator knows, there has been since the demonetization of silver in Great Britain, and particularly since the demonetization of silver in India by the British Government, to the injury of the people, such a condition of uncertainty and confusion as to the monetary situation that it seems to me that it would be of little advantage, would throw but little light upon the situation, to tell how much silver was introduced, how much was purchased, how much was used by the Government, and how much by private individuals? Nor is it possible to determine, it seems to me, with the data furnished in the Brookings Institution book, which I have read, what part of that which is introduced into India ultimately finds its way into the channels of trade and commerce, what part is used with the Government, or what part is used for storage values, as so much of the silver in India is used.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I appreciate the statement of the Senator from Utah. I am not embarrassed by these figures.

Mr. KING. Nor am I.

Mr. FESS. I desire to give facts and not mere statements. I cannot argue with those who make mere statements about conclusions and say that the figures which indicate the currents of trade do not mean anything. These figures mean everything to me. They are the basis on which the argument must either stand or fall.

In 1927 the decline in private use started and proceeded with amazing rapidity. There was a fall of 12,000,000 ounces in the use for private purposes. In 1928, instead of importing silver, India exported 19,000,000 fine ounces of silver. Up to that time India was an importing country. That fall continued until 1931, which is the last year for which I have the figures, when it reached the low point of about 61,000,000 ounces, and that very year the exports amounted to 23,800,000 ounces.

The significance of this fact is that the private use in India, a leading silver-using country, was declining most rapidly, and the exportation of silver, instead of importation, set in and proceeded for a succession of years.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I was interrupted for a moment and could not hear distinctly what the Senator just said. Do the figures of exports and imports which the Senator has been reading apply to India?

Mr. FESS. They do.

Mr. NORRIS. And the Senator is speaking of silver?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FESS. We will now take China.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I apologize for again rising to interrupt the Senator from Ohio. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield. The Senator does not need to apologize.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that when Great Britain determined to debase silver—if I may use that expression—and to force the gold standard upon India, as efforts have been made to force it upon China, one of the methods which she adopted to accomplish that end was to sell silver, so she debased silver and exported large quantities, and bought some gold to replenish the treasury in order to put back of issued paper money a gold base instead of silver reserves, or, rather, to establish a gold standard instead of the double standard which for centuries had prevailed.

It does not seem to me that there is great significance to be attached to the figures quoted, as bearing upon the question of the validity of silver as money, to show that the British Government demonetized silver, sought to debase it, and to throw upon the market millions of ounces of silver. The same was done 2 or 3 years ago in Indo-China, and the evil which was wrought and the harm that occurred to the people in the way of a fall of prices has been very clearly pointed out by a number of writers.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, let me state again that the Senator from Utah is at perfect liberty to make his own interpretation of these figures. His interpretation is not mine. But he is entirely at liberty to say that this means one thing rather than another. I am not going to deny him that privilege.

Now, as to China: As is well known, silver is the favorite metal in that oriental country. It circulates, whether in coin or bullion, as gold circulates in gold-standard countries.

It can be used for barter as well as a medium of exchange. For that reason it is very difficult to designate the proportion of silver which goes into uses other than the monetary use.

China's net imports or exports of silver, compared with the percentage ratio of the index of China's volume of exports and the index volume of her imports, is illustrated by a graph which I have before me.

If we take the period from 1900 to 1905, for example, and use the ratio of exports and imports, indicating whether there is a balance of trade for or against the country, and then compare the currents of that ratio with the net silver import or export, there can be drawn, I think, a very important conclusion.

I will start in the year 1900, with the percentage of silver at 130. The export-import percentage ratio was at 130, while the net silver imports or exports were about 115. If we follow the course of the export-import ratio, it will be found that there was a very sharp decline by 1905, when it fell below 80. It fell from 130 to 80, while the net silver imports or exports fell from 115 to only 80. There was a less range in the case of silver imports or exports. But the export-import percentage ratio showed a sharp increase in 1905, and by 1910 it had jumped from 80 to 145, while the net silver imports or exports jumped only from 80 to 120.

That variation continued, while both were going in the same direction, one further than the other, until the time of the war.

In 1919 the highest point was reached, which was nearly 160. Then they immediately began to separate, so that the one dropped to 50 by 1931, while the other, having reached the high point of 161 in 1929, the boom year, dropped from 161 to about 125 in the 2 years following, from 1929 to 1932.

A study of these currents will indicate there is a similarity in direction, but to say that they are the same is not at all borne out by the facts. If we take for example the mine production of silver of the principal producing countries of the world from 1929 it will be found that there is a similar percentage of variation, which will indicate that the price current is not determined by Government decree so much as it is determined by the law of supply and demand.

For example, the world mine production on a 5-year basis in the period 1900–1904 was 168,000,000 fine ounces, of which 56,000,000 ounces were produced in our country, 61,000,000 in Mexico, 4,000,000 in Canada, and about the same amount in Peru.

A variation will be shown from year to year, until we get down to 1925–29, when the world production leaped to 254,000,000 fine ounces, the production in the United States being 61.8 million fine ounces, while in Mexico it went to 102,000,000 plus, in Canada to 22,000,000, and in Peru to 20,000,000.

If we take the percentage of world totals the United States is found to have produced in that first period 33.3 percent of the silver production of the world, while Mexico has produced 36.4 percent. Then our production began to decrease.

In the next 5 years it was 29,000,000 ounces. The next 5 years a little more than that. Then in the 5 years beginning 1915 and going to 1919, which included the World War period, there was an increase of at least 7,000,000 ounces in the United States. In the period 1920 to 1924 there was a falling off of 8,000,000 ounces. In the next period there was a still further falling off of 5,000,000 ounces.

So if we take the current of production of silver and the current of price it will be found that there is a similarity with the live currents in the case of any other metal which may be taken as an illustration, or with the world average of commodities, or, if one wants to single them out for comparative purposes, with the products of the farm.

It would, I think, be of interest for the Senate to follow a graph which I have. It shows a comparison of the production of silver in the United States with that of copper and lead. We will take silver beginning in 1900 at 60. By 1915 it had gone to about 72, while copper, which in 1900 began as low as 30 had, by 1915, gone to 90. That means that copper started 40 points below silver, and in the period of 15 years it had gone to 30 points above silver.

Then the graph shows that a decline set in and copper had a greater fall than either silver or lead, until the year 1929 when it went up and reached its high point.

Mr. President, this graph is very instructive. In 1929 the graph shows that copper was at the 100 point. It took a precipitate fall after that and by 1933 had fallen to about 28. In that 4-year period it had fallen from 100 to that low point of 28.

But, while in the same year, 1929, silver stood at 60, it dropped even a little below copper. The fall was not so great because the starting point was away below that of copper. Lead, however, started still lower than copper, but reached a little higher point than did silver in 1929 and fell just about as low as silver in 1932. So taking those three commodities, which are used for different purposes but are all metals, it will be found that the current of prices does not widely differ.

If we take the world production of silver and gold and compare the prices of those two commodities with the prices of all commodities, it will be most interesting. For example, the current production which marks the price of silver, is a little more variable than the current production of all commodities. The one thing that seems to have the least variation is the average price of all commodities; that varies less than silver; but, on the other hand, if we take the price of gold we find that has a greater variation than the price either of all commodities or of silver. I am certain that that statement is a surprise to a great many persons, but it is demonstrated here by the actual figures; and it is this point which I think is hazy in the minds of the public.

The same situation applies with reference to the refinery production of silver in the principal silver-producing countries. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate to interpret these figures, but will ask unanimous consent to have them inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, there is another very interesting fact from the standpoint of the United States, and that is the countries that have the control and management of the production of silver. In the production of silver American capital is far in the lead of the capital of any other country in the world. The countries that control the production of silver are the United States, the British Empire, and Germany, especially those three. It is interesting to follow the figures in reference to that control. It is, however, of no particular interest in this discussion, and so I ask unanimous consent to insert those figures in my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I will omit a discussion of the question which has been rather confusing to me, as to the price of silver in countries other than our own, and come directly to the price of silver as compared with the price of other commodities not only in our country but, on the average, in other countries of the world. I will use as an example the price in New York, taking as a basis of comparison with silver, first, the prices of all commodities; second, the price of nonferrous metals, and, third, the price of farm products—especially the latter, because that is interesting to us all. An examination of the chart I have before me will show that the prices of all these four commodities have not had a uniform movement but a corresponding movement. In other words, if the price of one goes up, the other is likely to go up, but the prices do not go up to the same extent, while, if the price of one decreases the price of the other is likely to decrease, but the prices do not decrease to the same extent. If we take silver——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Ohio will suspend for a moment, the Chair respectfully asks Senators to refrain from conversation or to retire to the cloakrooms. There is a tremendous amount of confusion in the Chamber.

Mr. FESS. I do not know, Mr. President, whether that situation is more embarrassing to me than it is to our visitors, but I will not be embarrassed, if any other Senator wants to talk, if I may just have the attention of the Presiding Officer; that is all I want.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is glad to give his attention, but he is also distracted by the conversation which he can hear even from remote distances. There must be quiet in the Chamber, please.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am tempted to make just a brief observation. Training in the other House, where a Member is permitted to take a position in the well of the House and address his colleagues face to face unfits one so trained to follow the rules of the Senate.

Here a Senator has to stand at his desk unless some colleague gives him permission to stand at his desk, and unfortunately a Senator's remarks must be addressed to the Presiding Officer. For that reason, if the Presiding Officer can, without difficulty, give attention that will have to suffice, no matter how much inattention there may be all around the speaker. The truth about the matter is the United States Senate is the worst place in which to make an address of any place in the world.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I would not want the impression to be created that the Senate lacks in according attention to speeches made by the learned Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. If he will pardon me, I shall say that only yesterday I happened, by great favor, to come into possession of a book written by the learned Senator more than 20 years ago. It is entitled "History of Political Theory and Party Organization in the United States." I confess—and I do it with some shame—that I never read this book before, but I spent more than 3 hours last evening reading it, and I read nearly 200 pages thereof.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator need not worry about lack of attention. The Senate is peculiar in that most of its Members are speakers; they are busy, and what they do not hear they read in the RECORD; I do not belong to the Senator's political party, and am opposed to most of his political theories; but there is no Senator whose speeches are read with more avidity, and, I might say, from which more information may be gleaned, than the speeches of the able Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator very much. I think he is endeavoring to salve a situation in which a Senator is placed when he is dealing with figures which are interesting to but very few.

Mr. President, to resume where I was interrupted, if we will follow the price currents of silver and compare them with the price currents of all commodities, compare them with the price currents of nonferrous metals, and especially with the price currents of farm products, we will have an awakening to the fact that while the currents are in the same direction they are not uniform, and yet the difference is only in degree. That is well demonstrated especially by the price movements of farm products. Starting at the price index for farm products of 50 as compared with the silver index price starting at a hundred, and making it the base, by 1905 the farm price index varied very little, while the silver price index first dipped about 10 points and then recovered, and even went beyond a hundred. By 1915 the price of silver, undulating, reached the low point of 81, while the farm price went from 50 to just slightly below 80, a little below the silver price. Then the war came, and the index price of silver jumped from 81 to 180, while the farm price increased from about 70 to 155, about 25 points as yet below silver. Then the rapid decline started, and the price of silver dropped from 180 back to 100, while the farm price dropped down to about 90. They both start off again in a rather uniform undulation, with a little less variation in the farm price than in that of silver. Then when the unfortunate relapse came in 1929 a precipitate decline started and both went down almost identically, the price of silver a little below that of the farm price. That is true not only of these two commodities but it is true of the other two.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. Has the Senator the market price of silver in those days?

Mr. FESS. No; I have not.

Something has been said about the ratio indicating the comparative value of gold and silver. The ratio from 1866 to 1870 was 15.6 to 1; from 1871 to 1875 it was about 16 to 1; from 1876 to 1880 it was 17.9 to 1. I am giving the ratio of silver to gold. From 1881 to 1885 it was 18.6 to 1. There was a greater decline in silver or else a greater increase in gold, depending upon which we take as the base.

In the 4-year period, 1886 to 1890, silver was 21.1 to 1; from 1891 to 1895 it was 27 and a fraction; from 1896 to 1900 it was 33 and a fraction; from 1901 to 1905 it was 36 and a fraction; from 1906 to 1910 it was 35 and a fraction; from 1911 to 1915 it was 36.8 to 1; from 1916 to 1920 it was 23 to 1, a tremendous increase due to the fact that that was the period including the World War, silver jumping from a ratio of 37 to 1 to a ratio of 23 to 1. Then the decline started again. During the next 4-year period it dropped to a ratio of 31 to 1.

Then, taking it year by year, in 1926 the ratio of silver to gold was 33 to 1; 1927, 36 to 1; 1928, 35 to 1. In 1929, the boom year, there was a decrease in the ratio of silver to 39 to 1, and in 1930 it went to 53 to 1. Then came the great drop to 71 in 1931, and in 1932 it dropped further to 73.3 to 1.

Of course, those who are proponents of the preferment of silver contend that it is not the silver variation, but the gold variation; that silver is not becoming cheaper, but gold is becoming dearer. However, that is a point of controversy which I think it is hardly worth while for me to answer.

The price of silver shows less variation, as indicated by the chart I have just interpreted, than does the price of nonferrous metals. Since the war farm products have been more stable than silver. Since 1926, when prices began to fall, commodity prices fell at a slower rate than silver.

In the early part of the period the prices of farm products and nonferrous metals fluctuated more than the price of silver. After 1932 silver remained at the same level as in 1931, while general commodity prices, especially farm and nonferrous metals, continued their steep descent since the year 1931. I have a chart which shows that fluctuation.

It is not always safe to use the price of silver sold as a commodity as a basis for our comparison, but it is safe to measure the price of silver by its purchasing power. It is hard to convince people that really the high wage is not a high wage. When measured by its real value it must be on the basis of how much of goods necessary for consumption the high price will buy. Frequently we are confused about whether silver is going down or gold is going up. One of the things that will help us in that situation is to use the purchasing power of silver instead of the price of silver, the purchasing power of silver meaning how much the silver will buy of the things we have to have. Let us take that as a basis of comparison.

The value of silver in purchasing power compared with the purchasing power of gold and nonferrous metals, with which we have made a comparison, will be found to be as follows. I shall take silver and gold, omitting the nonferrous metals. Beginning in 1900, starting at 180, gold had a gradual decline. There was no upward trend from 1900 until about 1903, when there was a very slight upward movement of gold, immediately followed by a downward movement until 1910, while silver had a sharp fall from 180 in 1900, reaching the low point of 142 in 1904. Immediately it took an upward curve to such a point that in 1906 silver was above gold by about 5 points, gold gradually declining in purchasing power. In 1906 silver began to take a downward trend so that by 1910, while gold had reached 141, silver had dropped to 120.

In 1910 gold took a slight upward trend, as did silver also, but silver went further than gold. Immediately a reversion set in and gold slightly declined while silver greatly declined. Silver declined from about 138 to 128, while gold declined from 152 to only about 146. This decline continued until 1915, which was 1 year after the World War broke out in Europe. Now, we will see a most remarkable trend on the part of gold.

In 1915 the purchasing power of gold stood at 140. By 1920, including the period of the war, it had dropped from 140 to 64. Silver in the same period declined, but not so much as gold. In other words, the statement in purchasing power would be that gold had gone up as measured by the amount it would buy, although that seems ridiculous.

Then if we follow the curve we find that gold jumped from 64 in 1920 to over 100 in 1922 and remained almost uniform at that figure until 1927. In 1929 the curve went upward and reached the high point of 148 in 1932, while silver reached the low point of only 64.

Mr. President, that movement, which marks not the price of gold and silver except as measured in goods they will buy, what we call purchasing power, is most interesting during that particular period.

This chart shows that silver is not the only commodity whose purchasing power has fallen. The relative position of silver, if measured in commodities, taking for comparison 550 commodities sold at wholesale, is but 0.1 of 1 percent of the value of the articles in which we are dealing.

Had the wholesale value of silver been compared with the total value of commodities in the United States in any one year, the proportion would have been less. Of whatever importance silver has been, it has not suffered at least as much as many of the important commodities in which it is measured.

I have selected a group of the 550 commodities to which I refer, and have indicated first the percentage of average converted to a purchasing-power index, and the value of these various commodities of the United States as elements of production. Silver is 0.1 of 1 percent of the total production, silk and rayon represent 2.6 percent, hogs constitute 2.7 percent, and the grains constitute 3.6 percent. Silver, as I have stated, is only 0.1 of 1 percent.

I therefore summarize what, in my judgment, these figures indicate, as follows:

First, that silver, though unstable in price, is more stable than a great many other commodities.

Second, the price level of many commodities corresponds very well to the price level of silver. During the present depression, nonferrous and farm products have declined in price further than silver has declined. The same thing is true of the purchasing power of many of these commodities.

I have before me, if it should be thought of any importance, a comparison of the value of silver with the values of other minerals in the same silver-producing countries. I was surprised to find that iron constitutes 12.3 percent of the value of all the minerals produced in the mineral-producing sections of our State, while silver, which we regard as quite important, constitutes only 0.6 of 1 percent in value of the minerals produced in the country. Bituminous coal amounts to 18 percent, while petroleum amounts to 21 percent.

These figures as to the comparative value of all minerals produced in the United States in contrast with that of silver, I think, are important; and while I do not care to read them, I ask that they be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Value of principal minerals produced in the United States, 1925–29 [1]

[1] Compiled from Mineral Resources of the United States.

Mr. FESS. In our country, therefore, from the standpoint of value, silver constitutes six-tenths of 1 percent of the total production of minerals. The value of our total mineral production is but 3 percent of the entire income of the United States. As less than 1 percent of the total revenue from the mining industries comes from silver, its production must necessarily be regarded as of somewhat minor importance. Since the United States produces one-fourth of all the silver produced in the world, the world supply is of comparatively small consequence.

I have here the figures of the mineral production of Mexico and Peru. I do not see any particular value in taking the time to read them, but I should like to have them inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[2] Values originally in Mexican pesos were converted to dollars at the average rate of exchange for each year.

[3] This value figure does not include the production of all minerals. According to reports to the U.S. Department of Commerce by its representatives in Mexico, small quantities of cement, clay products, sand, and stone, for which no official data are available, are produced in Mexico. The Statistical Year Book of the League of Nations, 1932, p. 128, also shows that Mexico produces annually a small amount of cement.

Mr. FESS. I think the most difficult problem we have in dealing with silver—not if it were kept simply as a commodity, but especially if it is to be used as a monetary factor—is the price it is to command at the agencies that produce it. Has the decline in the price of silver in India and China, the two great silver-consuming countries, reduced their purchasing power in foreign markets, and thereby largely aided in bringing about the present depression?

That is the biggest question I have in mind. The statement that that is the case has been made by the author of the bill, and also by Senators like my good friend from Utah [Mr. KING] and others who are well versed on the subject. Their statements led me to believe at one time that in all probability we ought to have a more facile use of silver in order to share the markets of the Orient. I stated when the other bill was under consideration that I thought there ought to be a greater use of silver; that I looked with some favor upon silver legislation, for the following reasons:

First, because silver is an American commodity, and when its production can be encouraged without any injury to the public it ought to be done.

Secondly, I had the feeling that we would be justified in accepting silver in payment of a certain amount of the foreign debt. I do not need to state why I was willing to have that done.

Thirdly, the thing that made a greater impression on my mind than anything else was the claim that a larger use of silver would largely facilitate our trade with the Orient; and at the time that seemed to me rational. I have since gone into the subject more thoroughly, however, and I have serious doubts about it at the present time, to say nothing of the fact that the commerce of China is only 2 percent of the world's commerce, so that it is comparatively inconsequential. Assuming it to be large, however, which I doubt very much when I take the facts which have been prepared by Dr. Kemmerer—who ought to be the best-posted man on silver that we have in this country, at least, because he was called to China to take charge of her financial situation for a period of time—I raised the question, "Has the decline in the price of silver in India and China reduced their purchasing power as has been alleged, and, therefore, been a major cause in the depression?"

China continues to import silver in spite of the depression. This means only one thing, that is, that she maintains a favorable balance of trade, which indicates that she has not suffered from the low price of silver, since she has not been purchasing foreign goods with silver, but has been importing silver.

I desire to give here the figures which will detail the current of trade in China, showing the net imports and exports of silver from 1890 to 1932.

The net imports in the 4-year period from 1890 to 1894 were six and a fraction million fine ounces.

In the next 4-year period the net imports were 11,000,000 ounces.

Between then and 1904 there were no imports, but exports of nearly 6,000,000 ounces.

In the next 4-year period, up to 1909, there were further exports of 15,000,000 ounces.

Then began the large imports.

In 1910 China imported a little more than 26,000,000 ounces.

In 1911 she imported 46,000,000 ounces, almost double the amount of the preceding year.

Then there was a drop in 1912 of 23,000,000 ounces.

In 1913 there was an increase of 20,000,000 ounces, which is an increase of almost 100 percent.

In 1914, the year of the war, the imports were entirely wiped out, and China exported 16,000,000 ounces, and she continued to export until 1917. That year she exported 25,000,000 ounces.

Then, in 1918—which was the year, as Senators will recall, when we passed some silver legislation on behalf of India—China imported 28,000,000 ounces, and the next year considerably over 100 percent more, 64,000,000 ounces, and in 1920 111,000,000 ounces of fine silver. This is what China imported at the very time we are talking about her trade being so depressed.

She cannot import if the balance of trade is against her. She imports because the balance of trade is favorable.

In 1921 she imported 39,000,000 ounces; in 1922 she imported 47,000,000 ounces; in 1923 she imported 81,000,000 ounces. The increase continued. In 1927 the importations amounted to 78,000,000, and in 1928 to 128,000,000. In 1929, our boom year, the importations amounted to 127,000,000.

Then began the drop. In 1930 China imported only 81,000,000 ounces, in 1931 only 55,000,000, in 1932 only 29,000,000. It is evident that if the decrease continues, the necessity for importations will cease, and she will be exporting.

Mr. President, I cite these figures as a refutation of the theory that the failure of the business of China is due to silver, because her business is constantly increasing, judged by the favorable balance she shows, and that is displayed in the large increases in imports of silver.

I ask that the table to which I have been referring be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

China's net imports and exports of silver, 1890–1932 [1] (in millions of fine ounces)

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, another study most significant is a comparison of the net imports of silver with the net imports of gold. Especially is that true where the allegation is made that silver is discriminated against on behalf of gold.

If we take the same period, beginning with 1900 and running to 1931, confining our attention to the imports of the two metals to China, we find that in the 4-year period from 1904 there were no imports of silver, but there was an export of about 3,000,000 ounces. There was also an export of gold of eight-tenths of a million ounces.

In the next 4-year period there were no imports of silver, and there were fewer exports of gold. There were, however, about 10,000,000 ounces of silver exported and three-tenths of a million ounces of gold exported.

From 1910 to 1914 there were net imports of silver of 14,000,000 ounces, while eight-tenths of a million ounces of gold were exported.

From 1915 to 1919 the imports of silver amounted to eleven and one-tenth millions, while the imports of gold amounted to twelve and seven-tenths millions. It is difficult for me to understand how that happened. During the preceding 4 years there was an export of gold of eight-tenths of a million ounces, and in the next 4 years there was an import of nearly 13,000,000 ounces of gold at the very time when there was an import of silver of only 11,000,000 ounces, less than the imports of gold, while gold had been constantly exported, and that continued after that year. It must be explained by the fact that that was the period of the war from 1915 to 1919.

Immediately following that, from 1920 to 1924, there was a large import of silver, about 50,000,000 ounces, but an export of gold of 8,000,000 ounces.

From 1925 to 1929 there was an importation of 56,000,000 ounces of silver, and an exportation of about a million ounces of gold.

Mr. President, this indicates that if gold is being used as the money of exchange, then the export of gold would indicate that the balance of trade was against China. But if silver is being used as the money of exchange, it would indicate that the balance of trade is favorable to China. The evidence, taken from the earlier figures, is that China has a balance of trade favorable to her. That is the reason why China does not look with favor upon the proposal of this country to increase the price of silver. That will not be to her advantage, but rather to her disadvantage, a matter with which I shall deal later on.

I ask that the table to which I have been referring may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

China's net imports of silver and gold, 1900–1931 [1]

[2] Net exports are indicated by the minus sign; net imports are shown as positive numbers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator what part of China is objecting to the advancement of the price of silver?

Mr. FESS. I have to assume that the voice of China will probably be heard from Shanghai, which is the great center.

Mr. BORAH. What I intended to convey by my question was that those who are interested in establishing cotton mills and other industries in China, and who are taking away the trade of England and of the United States and of India in the cotton business, are interested in cheap silver in China, there is no doubt, but, outside of them, I doubt whether there will be found any great support.

Mr. FESS. That subject would be worth investigation. I must confess that I have not gone into it.

Mr. President, the price of silver in New York and the present-day ratio of the index of the volume of imports into China to the index of the volume of exports from China for 1931 show the relationship between the price of silver and China's ability to purchase foreign commodities. The ratio tends to vary inversely with the price of silver, which indicates that imports relative to exports tend to increase in volume when the price of silver is relatively low, and to decrease when it is relatively high.

Does it not follow that if the ability of China to purchase in foreign countries were determined by the price of silver alone, there would be a direct correlation between the price and the ratio; that is, that a decline in the price of silver would be accompanied by a decrease in imports relative to exports, and vice versa? It seems to me obvious that China's capacity to purchase foreign goods, so far as imports indicate, has been enhanced, rather than curtailed, by the fall in the price of silver. That is a conclusion which, it seems to me, these facts warrant.

Mr. President, if we consider the variations in the foreign trade of China and the United States, and in the trade between these countries from 1925 to 1932, we will find, I think, significant conclusions to be drawn. I have here the figures of the imports and exports of China as compared with the imports and exports of the United States. They indicate only what I stated a while ago in interpreting the chart about which I was speaking. Instead of taking the time to read these figures into the RECORD, which are confirmatory of the statement I have just made about the low price of silver being an enhancement of trade, rather than a deterrent of trade, I ask unanimous consent to have the figures printed in the RECORD, instead of reading them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

[1] Data are from Foreign Trade of China, Chinese Maritime Customs, Shanghai. The original figures in Haikwan taels have been converted into fine ounces at 1.20665 ounces per tael. Figures are 5-year averages through 1909 and on a yearly basis thereafter.

[2] Minus sign indicates net exports.

There being no objection, the figures were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Basic data are from the Foreign Trade of China, Chinese Maritime Customs. The original figures in haikwan taels were converted into dollars at the average rate of exchange for each year.

[2] Basic data are from Commerce Yearbooks, 1925–32.

[3] Statistics of the imports and exports of China for 1932 are not complete. Figures of imports into and exports from the Manchurian ports cover only the first 6 months. During 1928–31 imports into and exports from these ports on the average comprised 15 and 33 percent, respectively, of China's total imports and exports.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the table shows that the decline in China's foreign trade was no greater than that of the United States on a gold basis. In 1932 the imports and exports of the United States fell to about the same level, while in China exports dropped far below imports. In 1932 the gold value of Chinese imports from the United States was 54 percent of the value of accrued imports from this country during 1923 to 1925, while the corresponding figure for the United States imports from China was only 16 percent.

This indicates that Chinese imports were sustained. The decline in the foreign demand for Chinese goods, rather than the fall in the price of silver, probably explains the decline in the gold value of Chinese imports of recent date.

The table shows that China imported 19 percent more goods in 1931 than she did on an average from 1923 to 1925, while, on the other hand, exports declined both in volume and value during 1930–31. While the price of silver was falling drastically, there was considerable increase in the ratio of imports to exports.

In contrast, the principal volume of imports into the United States shows a decrease, while the physical volume of purchase of the United States from all countries has shown only a slight absolute reduction.

The demand of the United States for China's commodities during that period had sharply declined. On the other hand, the volume of China's purchases from the United States has remained quite large.

These facts, it seems to me, indicate that the fall in the price of silver has not only had no appreciable adverse effect on China's ability to import foreign goods, but that her capacity to purchase in foreign markets would have been greater had foreign countries been able to purchase more from her, and that is the cause of the falling of the trade rather than the change in the price.

The facts which I have just mentioned are demonstrated, in my judgment, by the figures I have before me, using the years 1923 to 1931, showing import index compared with export index and the percentage as to China being compared with the import index, export index, and percentage index of the United States. I do not care to take the time to read these figures in demonstration of the statement, but will ask unanimous consent to have them printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

[1] The indexes of Chinese imports and exports for 1923–30 are those of Franklin L. Ho, Quarterly Journal of Economics and Statistics, March 1932, pp. 128–49, Nankai Institute of Economics, Tientsin. The index numbers for 1931 have been computed by the writer. (For further explanation regarding Ho's and the writer's indexes see table VII, p. 149.) Indexes of imports and exports of the United States are those of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, U.S. Department of Commerce. The methods used in computing these indexes are described in Commerce Yearbook, 1925, pp. 76–77. The indexes of the exports to China from the United States and of imports from China into the United States are from F. D. Graham, The Fall in the Value of Silver and its Consequences, Journal of Political Economy, August 1931, p. 433. All the indexes have been converted to the common base 1923–25 by the writer. Computed from the Specified Indexes of Physical Volume of Trade.

Mr. FESS. Also, Mr. President, the import-export price comparisons with a single city's exports and imports, namely Shanghai's, is of significance, but in identically the same line as if the whole of the Republic of China were taken for comparison purposes. I am, therefore, asking unanimous consent to insert these figures without reading them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Indexes of import and export prices are from: Shanghai, the Shanghai Market Price Report, 1925–32, National Tariff Commission, Shanghai; United States, Commerce Yearbook, 1925, pp. 76–77 and later volumes; Canada, Prices and Price Indexes 1913–29, Canada Dominion Bureau of Statistics, p. 216, and Canada Year Book, 1932, p. 700. For commodities included in the Canadian indexes, see Price and Price Indexes, 1913–26, pp. 169–170. The indexes for India have been computed by the writer by dividing the relatives of value (in rupees) of India's imports and exports by the writer's indexes of the physical volume of imports and exports, respectively.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in times of depression demand for raw materials falls more rapidly than the demand for finished products. This statement can be demonstrated by a study of the currents of trade. Countries producing raw materials suffer greater decline than those exporting manufactured articles. Hence the more rapid decline in China, India, and Canada, because they are raw-material exporting countries, than we find in the United States, because we are the exporter of finished products rather than raw materials. This is not due to fall in monetary value of either gold or silver but to fall in demand for foreign goods, especially raw materials, which is most greatly felt in China, India, and Canada, which countries export raw materials.

Mr. President, I have the figures upon the exportation of raw materials as compared with the exportation of finished products, giving the ratio of index of raw-material price to index of finished-product price, covering the years from 1926 to 1931, and I think the study of those figures will demonstrate what I have stated.

I therefore ask unanimous consent to have them inserted in the RECORD without reading them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Comparison of wholesale price indexes of raw materials and of finished products in the United States, 1926–31 [1]

Year	Index of raw-material price	Index of finished-product price	Ratio of index of raw-material price to index of finished-product price
1926	100	100	100
1927	97	95	102
1928	99	97	102
1929	98	96	102
1930	84	88	95

[1] The index numbers are those of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U.S. Department of Labor.

Mr. FESS. Study of these figures will indicate the general truth of the statement I made a while ago that in times of depression the countries which export raw materials suffer much more than the countries which export finished products. And since our country is an exporter of finished products, and China and India are raw-material exporting countries, the suffering in those countries would be greater by the falling off of this trade than any effect that the monetary factor would indicate.

In the discussion of silver from the international standpoint, India and China are linked together, as they always are, because they are on the same monetary basis. India has been on gold exchange from 1901 to 1931. Since 1931 she has been on the sterling exchange standard. The Indian rupee since the Currency Act of 1927 has tied its value to the pound sterling at 1 shilling and 12 pence, or 18 pence circulation at 18 pence regardless of the silver content. The price of silver does not seem to affect the purchasing power of the rupee in foreign commerce.

I know that Senators listening to me doubt that statement, but I believe that the study of these facts indicating the current of trade between us and those two countries will demonstrate the accuracy of that statement.

In fact, the price of silver in India in 1931–32 fell less than the general commodity price. The index price ratio will show that the purchasing power of silver actually increased when confined to domestic trade. It is not so, of course, when it comes to foreign trade, where silver has declined more than the price of imported articles, such as finished products, which are India's chief imports. But as India has been a consistent importer of silver it would seem she has not suffered from the necessity of sending silver abroad for finished goods. Since India's holdings of gold are larger than those of silver, she would protect herself against loss by exporting gold instead of silver at a loss.

This certainly is borne out by what actually takes place.

This trend can easily be illustrated by an examination of the facts. Mr. President, I have here a table showing the price of silver in Bombay and New York compared with wholesale prices of general commodities in Calcutta, affording a comparison of prices between these two centers. I do not care to take the time to read the figures, but will ask to have them inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

The price of silver in Bombay and New York compared with wholesale prices of general commodities in Calcutta, 1926–32

Calendar year	Wholesale prices in Calcutta [1]	Silver price in Bombay [2]	Silver price in Bombay as a percentage of wholesale prices in Calcutta	Silver price in New York [2]	Silver price in New York as a percentage of wholesale prices in Calcutta
1926	100	100	100	100	100
1927	100	91	91	91	91
1928	98	93	95	94	96
1929	95	85	89	85	89
1930	78	75	96	62	79
1931	61	68	111	46	75
1932	45	61	136	46	102

[1] Compiled from Indian Trade Journal. Since the suspension of gold payments by Great Britain toward the end of September 1931, India has not been on the gold-exchange standard. To make the index numbers subsequent to the suspension comparable with the earlier index numbers, which were on a gold basis, the index numbers from October 1931 on have been adjusted by multiplying them by the corresponding index numbers of the rates of exchange of the rupee in terms of the dollar.

[2] The relatives for 1927–30 were computed from data taken from the Annual Market Reviews published by Premchand Roychand & Sons, Bombay. The original figures represent the average price in Bombay per 100 tolas (ready). The relatives for 1931–32 were computed from data compiled from Cotton and Finance, Bombay. They represent the annual average of monthly prices. The original figures were quotations in Bombay at the end of each month per 100 tolas (spot). Like the index of wholesale commodity prices, the monthly relatives from September 1931 on were adjusted to make allowance for the decline in rupee exchange rates on the United States in consequence of the abandonment of the gold standard by England.

[3] Computed from data obtained from Annual Report of the Director of the Mint, 1932, p. 127.

Mr. FESS. That India's foreign trade has not suffered from a depressed price of silver is shown by statistics. It is demonstrated that if a low price of silver will adversely affect foreign trade, then a high price of silver would improve foreign commerce. This would require the price of silver to correspond to the ratio of imports to exports. But a chart of the foreign trade prices shows that the tendency is adverse; that as the price of silver declines the import ratio varies adversely with that of exports.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has been speaking of India and the silver question in connection with India. Will the Senator object to my reading a paragraph from Sir Osborne A. Smith, president of the Imperial Bank of India?

Mr. FESS. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. BORAH. He says:

> The economists throughout the world are agreed that maldistribution of gold and overproduction of goods are two of the fundamental causes of the depression. If we consider the fact that the great masses of the Orient are half-starved and less than half-clad, one cannot say that there is overproduction in terms of requirements, but rather that there is overproduction in terms of purchasing power. Our job, then, is to recreate purchasing power, and we have the instrument at hand in silver, of which these masses are possessed. The remonetization of silver will furnish us with a needed purchasing power, and will cause to disappear, through consumption, the world overproduction of goods.

Mr. FESS. That is a statement by Sir Osborne A. Smith, who says that the economists of the world are agreed. I shall indicate before I get through that that is not true.

Mr. BORAH. I think myself that Sir Osborne Smith spoke rather freely when he said that the economists were agreed on anything.

Mr. FESS. I think so, too. However, I did not wish to convey the inference that the Senator did about economists when I suggested that I did not think that was true, but I do agree with what he inferred. When one can get economists to agree one can succeed in getting oil and water to mix.

Mr. President, the graph that would indicate the price of silver as compared with the import-export percentage ratio is worthy of study. I am convinced that anyone who will look over it as it is demonstrated in the actual figures, showing what the imports and the exports are, will agree with me that the price of silver does not have the effect which so many of our friends are claiming for it.

This graph shows that silver fell in 1926–27 while the ratio of imports to exports rose; silver increased in 1928 and the latter decreased; silver declined in 1929 while import ratio increased in 1929 but decreased in 1930–31. This drop was largely due to boycott of goods by Indian patriots and a general trade movement due to a world decline in demand for raw materials, the chief supply of export goods to be exchanged for imports of finished products.

The foregoing facts compel the conclusion that the decreasing foreign trade of the two chief silver-consuming countries is not due to the falling price of silver, for the imports of finished goods of those two countries have been fairly well sustained throughout the depression, and, notwithstanding the decline in the world demand for raw material, China has been continuously importing silver on net balance, and India for hoarding purposes.

It is the judgment of economists that instead of attributing the world depression to the inability of the Orient to purchase from the Occident because of the fall in the price of silver, it should be stated that what little brightness there is in the economic gloom of the world is partly due to that degree of sustained capacity of these two silver countries still to make a market for our goods.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in mentioning Mr. Smith referred to the economists. Mr. President, I have in my hand the resolution adopted by the Executive Committee of the Economists' National Committee on Monetary Policy. These economists, to the number of about 100, I regard as being the best thinkers in our country on subjects of economics, including money. This group of a hundred men and women, through their executive committee, adopted the following resolution touching silver legislation, not as to this particular bill but as to the claims for a larger use of silver:

Watching with grave concern the various silver measures introduced and proposed in Congress, the executive committee of the Economists' National Committee on Monetary Policy wishes to go on record as opposing these notoriously unsound proposals to do something for silver, whether they involve the introduction of bimetallism or symmetallism, or the purchase of silver for the purpose of increasing our silver reserves or the circulation of silver or silver certificates.

The adoption of this resolution, Mr. President, suggests a growing opinion, as expressed by the frequent discussion throughout various parts of the country, toward uniting silver and gold not as two metals but as one, so as to have symmetallism instead of bimetallism. I do not believe that it is worth while to repeat any argument on the possibility of bimetallism on the part of our country alone. I said yesterday that I would be glad to see bimetallism inaugurated if with our country the leading commercial countries of the world would join. Under such circumstances I think it would be an advantage; but to operate alone or to proceed without regard to other countries, it seems to me, would be fatal.

Now the proposal is that we can avoid the confusion of attempting to have two metals circulate by combining them. There seems to be in some sections of the country a great deal of interest in that possibility. I notice that in high circles there is now being discussed the feasibility of having an international currency, of having, instead of an American dollar, an international dollar, or pound sterling, or whatever it may be called. There has been much talk of that, and some expressions in high circles in our Government in favor of taking the step under this legislation of impounding all the silver just as we have impounded all the gold, and making it illegal for an individual to possess silver under the limitations we have provided in connection with the possession of gold.

Then, after we have all the gold and all the silver impounded, it is contended in some places that we should proceed to inaugurate some kind of an international currency, having the governments of the world join us, because we stand ready to buy all the gold and all the silver that might be offered to us. I do not know how much there is in that rumor, but it is sufficient to say that such a plan is being talked about, and, at least, when we are to vote on nationalizing silver, as provided in this bill, giving authority to the President to take all the silver, as he has authority to take all the gold, we want to know just what is to be the policy to be inaugurated to carry out such a plan. At any rate, it is too uncertain to enable me to act with freedom.

Now, proceeding further to read from resolution of the executive committee of this group of 100 economists:

Recognizing that those various prosilver proposals are extremely dangerous, if the lessons of monetary history and the principles of money are to have any place in the consideration of monetary legislation in this country, this committee resolves:

1. That no additional silver should be purchased at any price except for the necessary fractional silver coins as provided for under the laws enacted prior to the Thomas amendment of May 12, 1933.

2. That the purchase of silver bullion at artificial prices will not promote sound recovery, but, on the contrary, will add to the liabilities of the Government and reduce confidence in the Nation's currency.

3. That the restoration of bimetallism at the market ratio would cause national injury and retard recovery.

4. That the restoration of bimetallism at a ratio of 16 to 1 would be a national calamity.

5. That a rise in the price of silver benefits materially neither domestic industry nor the foreign trade of the United States.

These are the resolutions adopted by this group of economists.

Then the argument proceeds:

Perhaps a brief survey of our experience with bimetallism and of the past efforts to do something for silver will be of some service in enabling the public to see the present proposals before Congress in their proper perspective.

Mr. President, the history of bimetallism in our own country is of such common knowledge that I do not intend to take the time of the Senate to repeat what is well known to every person who has any acquaintanceship whatever with the history of the monetary question in the United States; but, after reciting the history of bimetallism and its effect, this group of economists proceed:

On four occasions, however, the silver interests have managed to get through Congress legislative measures which gave them a Government subsidy. In 1878 the Bland-Allison Act, passed over Hayes' veto, commanded the Treasury to buy not less than $24,000,000 worth of silver bullion per year and to coin it into silver dollars.

They might also have stated not less than $24,000,000 worth and not more than $48,000,000 worth, because that was the provision of the law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Bland-Allison Act and the Sherman Act, silver-purchasing acts, were not the acts or measures which the silver people were advocating; they were compromises and were never satisfactory to the advocates of silver. They were never believed in as a remedy for the silver problem. They were the result of a compromise dictated in large measure by Mr. Allison and by Mr. Sherman, both of whom were against silver.

Mr. FESS. The Senator does not mean that Mr. Bland, of Missouri, was against silver, does he?

Mr. BORAH. No; but I mean to say that the proposition which Bland made resulted not in the passage of his measure but in the adoption of a compromise.

Mr. FESS. The Senator is correct in that statement. The bill was introduced by Bland in 1878 and was a simon-pure free-silver bill, such as I would have assumed the silver people would have approved, but when it got to the Senate it was modified through the influence of Senator Allison and reduced to not less than 2,000,000 ounces per month nor more than 4,000,000 ounces per month. I assume that 4,000,000 ounces per month or 48,000,000 ounces per annum would be about the production of silver at that time, which meant, if it would have been carried out as the authors had in mind, that it would cover about all the silver mined.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Permit me to say at this point that I think the principles upon which the Bland-Allison Act was based, and those upon which the Sherman Act was based, were unsound. I think it was an attempt to deal with silver as a commodity and to peg the price of silver. I do not believe in any such method. I think any measure that deals with silver merely as a commodity and undertakes to restore the price of silver by pegging it as one would a commodity price, is wholly unsound. That is an inherent defect of this bill.

Mr. FESS. In other words, the Senator believes that if we have any measure of value used as a medium of exchange, the commodity element ought to be eliminated entirely. The Senator, of course, is taking the position that the value of money therefore has no inherent element, but is wholly due to the promise of the Government to make good its pledge.

Mr. BORAH. No; I am not taking that position.

Mr. FESS. If we eliminate the commodity value I do not see what other value there is in it.

Mr. BORAH. I would deal with it purely as a monetary proposition and not undertake to peg it as the price of a commodity may be pegged. We do not eliminate the value in gold because we treat it purely as a monetary proposition.

Mr. FESS. It is true we do not eliminate the value of gold, but we aim to take all the gold that is mined and mint it.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly, and that is precisely what I would do with silver. Silver is as good money as gold, and was so regarded until it was legislatively destroyed.

Mr. FESS. What would the Senator do with gold?

Mr. BORAH. I would do the same thing with gold. I believe that today there are not sufficient precious metals in the world to constitute more than a sound basis for our monetary system. We need both precious metals.

Mr. FESS. Of course the Senator there indicates a philosophy upon which he and I are just as far apart as the poles. His idea is a quantitative value or philosophy in money.

Mr. BORAH. Then, as I understand the Senator, if there was but a thousand dollars of gold in all the world, that would be a sufficient basis upon which to base a monetary system?

Mr. FESS. It might be. It depends entirely upon the confidence in the government of the people who are using the money, as to whether they want the metal rather than a representative of the metal.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, if we do not have more than a thousand dollars' worth of gold, upon that amount of gold we could base a sufficient monetary system upon which to transact the business of the world, including Great Britain, France, Germany, and the United States.

Mr. FESS. No. All I mean is that if I want to sell 100,000,000 bushels of wheat I do not need 100,000,000 bushel baskets with which to measure it. One basket should do it. We would need enough baskets to measure it conveniently, but I would not need a bushel basket for every bushel of wheat I have to sell.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly, but if the Senator has sufficient faith in the promise of the Government when it has only a thousand dollars' worth of gold upon which to base its monetary system, he is going to reach the point, I am afraid, where he would be willing to accept the faith of the Government and issue paper alone.

Mr. FESS. No; not I.

Mr. BORAH. If it is a matter of faith, and that is all it is, if all the wealth and all the integrity and all the good faith of the United States is behind its paper money, is it not worth more than a thousand dollars in gold?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I did not want to be diverted from the remarks I am now making to a discussion of this question, but I am afraid I shall have to be. The Senator is going to lead me into a discussion of a point that is very controversial. The Senator is going to take the position that in order to facilitate trade it is not necessary to depend upon the working element of currency, but it is necessary to depend upon the amount of currency we may have.

Mr. BORAH. No, Mr. President. Let me state my position. I concede that the mobility of currency is an essential element in the problem. If it were not for that fact, then all the gold and silver of the world would be wholly insufficient upon which to base the monetary system. I do not eliminate that question from the problem by any means. But mobility is not all there is to the money question.

Mr. FESS. Of course, it is difficult to discuss a matter of this kind when there is involved a matter of degree. The Senator asked me whether I was willing to risk a currency system with only $100,000,000 for all the world. That involves a matter of degree. Now, the Senator has said he is not for the unlimited printing of paper money. I know he is not. Just where we are going to reach the degree which is the point of separation between us is a problem. Everybody knows, as was so well illustrated by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] yesterday, that we have $13,000,000,000 of monetary value, either in metal or the representatives of metal, and yet of the $13,000,000,000 we have only a little less than 50 percent of it which is actually doing work.

Is it conceivable that our solution of the situation is in increasing the amount of money rather than increasing the use of the money we have? We have more money today than would be necessary, twice over, at the most active point of business the country ever had. It is not the amount that gives us prosperity and it is not the lack of the amount of money or currency that is giving us lack of prosperity. It is our failure to find a way the money we have can be put to work. We may talk until we are blind, we may enact laws to increase the amount of silver, to increase national bank notes, to increase Federal Reserve notes, to increase Federal Reserve bank notes—we may enact legislation to increase all of them and dump them out into our business world, but we will not have prosperity until that money actually works. The amount does not mean anything.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. If we could have an answer to the question by those who are opposed to silver, if we could have an answer to the question of how they are going to make that money work, how they are going to restore faith so the banks will put out their credits, and so forth, it might simplify the issue very much. In 1922 to 1929, as the Senator knows, there was a heroic effort made to get back on the gold standard with all nations on the theory that when we did, confidence would be restored throughout the business world and the money would begin to work. All the leading nations went back onto the gold standard, with one exception, and still it did not work; still the liquidation went on and unemployment increased.

Mr. FESS. When did that occur?

Mr. BORAH. I mean immediately after we went back on the gold standard in 1929.

Mr. FESS. We never went off the gold standard.

Mr. BORAH. I am speaking of world conditions.

Mr. FESS. Oh yes.

Mr. BORAH. It did not restore confidence. Unemployment continued to increase and business continued to be demoralized. The question is, if the able Senator from Ohio will discuss it, How we are going to restore confidence and get this money to work? He said we have sufficient money if it will work, but how is it going to work if we keep it in the banks and in the vaults and hidden? Gold has become so sacred that if a man is found with a $20 gold piece he may be sent to jail. It has become a sacred thing. It serves the public in no sense whatever. It might as well be in the mines as where it is. How are we going to get it out and put it to work?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I will tell the Senator how to get it out. Stop this foolish legislation that is frightening every holder of money that otherwise he would be willing to invest in any productive industry and employ the unemployed if he knew, first, the amount of exactions that is to be demanded from him; secondly, if he knew what is to be the purchasing power of the dollar in which he is to be paid when he makes today a contract that is to be executed a year from now. Until we do stop this travesty of uncertainty in this program of nostrums, no risk will be taken by any sane man in investing a dollar in anything.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator will have to admit that this manifestation of distrust and want of confidence, this depression, began at a time when the questionable legislation of which the Senator speaks had not even been discussed. It began at a time when we had the most conservative legislation, when we had the gold standard, when we had the monetary system for which the Senator is now asking. It began under the conditions which the Senator would restore.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the gold standard was interrupted by a world convulsion which included every country of the world. We went on an artificial basis. We made no effort to hold value anywhere near price. Prices became inflated. Farms sold at $400 an acre. People were fools enough to pay that kind of a price, and to offer a mortgage upon the farm they bought, or the farm they had before they bought the additional farm. What was done on the farm was done everywhere. It was done in every business. It was done in Florida, where the only thing purchased was air and sunshine, offered at such prices that nobody who had any sort of poise of mind financially would have bought them had not the atmosphere been such that anyone who stayed there for 24 hours would become crazy and buy anything. That condition was common, and it existed all over the world. It was not confined to the United States. We were on the most artificial basis that any nation in the world had ever seen.

At the time this was going on, the war was over. Germany was required to pay reparations. The total amount was first fixed at $32,000,000,000. Afterward, a commission appointed to study the ability of Germany to pay decided that the total of reparations ought to be cut down to $12,000,000,000; and the commission stated that there was not any way for Germany to pay these reparations unless the allied countries would extend to her long-term credits in order to enable her to get on her feet. They fixed the amount at $250,000,000 and asked the United States to lend $110,000,000 of the $250,000,000, and required that the balance of it should be supplied by allied countries such as Britain and France and Italy.

When Germany received the long-term credits, she immediately reorganized her entire industrial life, including her railroads, and her industry became semigovernmental, with the government giving a certain amount of security in operation, at least, if not in ownership; and Germany, in issuing securities for rebuilding her industries, sold those securities in the market in the United States.

We were on this abnormal basis. Everybody had money. Everything was quoted at three times its actual value. From five to six billion dollars of securities were floated in the greatest financial market in the world, much of which was unstable. The buyers of these German securities—and I mention them only as an example—gave to Germany the money, took the securities in exchange, and used these securities as collateral in borrowing from American banks the money needed by the purchasers of the securities

What happened? With this abnormal level, this unstable basis of doing business the world over, the largest bank of Austria collapsed, a bank which had been established as far back as 1856 by the famous Rothschild family. It was an international institution. It had its accounts in every country of Europe. It went to the wall.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. Just a moment, if the Senator please.

Another bank went down with it. Then, with these two banks gone, the Anglo-Austrian bank, the third one, went down, and the central empire of Austria collapsed, and Germany was collapsing with it. When Germany announced that she could not make the July reparations payment, it was an announcement of bankruptcy; and the holders of the German securities which were clogging the banks and which had been deposited as collateral for loans realized that they would become worthless overnight; and such a fright as never before occurred in the world took place. It even took Britain off the gold standard, but not until there was mutiny in the navy.

Two days after that Britain went off the gold standard. Austria was down. Germany was about to collapse. Britain was off the gold standard. Money that had been deposited here in America was leaving us; and it looked as if we were about to go off the gold standard, although the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] said that in his judgment there was no particular danger of our going off the gold standard, and some others held the same view.

Mr. President, the gold standard or any other standard—the silver standard, the gold and silver standard, bimetallism, symmetalism, or what not—never could have sustained business under such cataclysms. They were the result of the overstimulus created by the war; and we are now in the backwashes of that condition in this country. It will take time to get out from under it.

If anybody wants to know why Europe went off the gold standard, there is the answer. There was no possibility, under such a situation as that, of any government that was in the meshes of it maintaining herself, although France still clings to the gold standard, and four other governments in Europe cling to it. They might about as well be off it. They might about as well have the kind of money that I have here. Somebody yesterday handed me a rubber dollar. I do not know where he got it. [Laughter.]

[At this point Mr. FESS exhibited to the Senate a rubber bill similar in appearance to United States currency.]

Mr. FESS. That is the answer as to why these countries could not stay on the gold standard. The question in my mind is, How long will the abnormal situation produced by those effects continue?

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] was almost brutally frank yesterday, and I admire him for it. He gave us the figures, and came to the conclusion which he frankly stated, that he sees no way out of this difficulty except by shaving down in some way the indebtedness under which the world is laboring now.

I recognize as well as anybody does the force of that contention. My only difficulty is as to the method of doing it. If we should take the step of some form of bankruptcy that we could claim was more or less justified by events that could not be controlled, like the forces of war, where so many billions of dollars were totally destroyed, how could we do it without untold injury as well as injustice to a great many citizens who would not be benefited by it but would be seriously harmed by it? What I am pleading for is something different from the rubber dollar that we have.

I do not think this legislation will do it. I do not believe there is any possibility of any substantial recovery outside of starting the industries of the country to employing labor through normal investment and normal employment, and we can never accomplish that by putting the sword of Damocles over the head of every man who wants to take a risk, telling him that we cannot indicate to him what is to be the future if he takes this risk.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Would the Senator advocate going back on the gold standard now?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I would advocate going back on the gold standard. I think we would have to go back on the basis that the dollar has been devalued.

Mr. BORAH. Go back on the gold standard, and have all our money then redeemable in gold?

Mr. FESS. Yes. It is not a question of the money being redeemable in gold. The Senator does not want the gold if he knows he can get it.

Mr. BORAH. I know I might not want it if I knew I could get it, but I am uneasy if I do not know where I can get it. That was the situation when the depression came. The world knew that there was a very small quantity of gold with which to do business and at the first tremor everybody sought gold, and it turned out that Great Britain and France and the United States had all the gold. No wonder the Bank of Austria failed. So purchasing power failed.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if that is the theory of the Senator, he will never get what he wants by the pending bill.

Mr. BORAH. I do not expect to get what I want by the bill, but I expect to use it as a starting point to get what I want. This is but the first step.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator mean by that that he is in favor of the country going on the silver basis?

Mr. BORAH. No; I mean that I am in favor of the country going on the gold and silver basis.

Mr. FESS. How?

Mr. BORAH. I am in favor of going back to the gold standard, restoring silver as money at a ratio which would mean that we would be upon a basis of 16 to 1, taking into consideration the present status of gold.

Mr. FESS. Then the country would be on a silver basis?

Mr. BORAH. No; it would not.

Mr. FESS. Yes; it would be.

Mr. BORAH. It would not. We were on a bimetallic basis until '73.

Mr. FESS. The country would be on the silver basis. Every dollar of gold would go out of circulation if we did that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in the fact of all history, that is untrue.

Mr. FESS. In the face of all history, that is true. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me say just a word further.

Mr. FESS. Very well.

Mr. BORAH. I stated yesterday—and I looked the matter up again last night—that Great Britain was on a gold-and-silver basis for 199 years, both of the metals being used freely in business at a ratio which was established by Sir Isaac Newton. That is one instance in which gold did not leave the country and silver stay.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, this is the first time I knew the Senator from Idaho stood on the 16-to-1 platform. He did not do so in 1896.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is mistaken; I did.

Mr. FESS. The Senator did?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I am disappointed. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. I am sorry to disappoint the Senator, but if it had not been for the discovery of gold in Alaska and in Australia and in the Rand, if it had not been for the supply of gold from those sources, the 16-to-1 proposal would have won, in the end.

The only thing that changed the situation was an increase, by a vast amount, in gold as the circulating medium.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, "the past rises before me like a dream."

Mr. KING. Some dreams are true.

Mr. FESS. "Did you ever see a dream walking?"

Mr. KING. The Senator presented that the other day, and I thought he was walking.

Mr. BORAH. I have heard a dream talking. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. The Senator is unfair. He did not ask me the privilege of saying that, and that is what I was about to say.

Mr. President, I have achieved one thing: We are reviving the interest of 1896. This is a voice of the past. I thought it was stilled forever, although I knew that the moment the country got into a depression the same old thing, though under another name, would be brought forward. We may bury this argument today as deep as it was buried in 1896, and it will sleep only until there is another cycle of distress, then we will hear the nostrums of the money cure-all offered from many stumps in the country.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, instead of saying "another cycle of distress", why not say "another result of the single gold standard"?

Mr. FESS. No, Mr. President; if the Senator were wise, he would not make a statement of that kind. We had cycles of depression during the time when we were under bimetallism and during the time we were on the silver basis—cycles of depression then just as we have them now. Cycles of depression are not due to the monetary question. The monetary question becomes a question because of the cycle of depression. It is an effect and not a cause. We will have the cycle of depression as long as we are unable to keep production and consumption within proper limits. One of the arguments our socialistic brethren have always urged is that we have to take control of production in order to insure that it will not go beyond consumption. Otherwise there is depression.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator says we must take control of production.

Mr. FESS. No; I said the Socialists said the Government must take control of production.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand it, the Senator joins the Socialists. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. No; I do not. Certainly I do not; not on that.

Mr. BORAH. Then let me answer the Socialists' argument.

Mr. FESS. Very well.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says that the Socialists, as contradistinguished from himself, believe that the Government must take control of production in order that we may not have more than is consumed.

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. At the present time it is pretty well established that 80 percent of the human race are living below the poverty line. Does the Senator think we are producing more than would be consumed if the human race were eating and wearing what they should have?

Mr. FESS. Do not put the argument of the Socialists in my mouth. No; certainly not.

Mr. BORAH. If the Socialist does not answer that, then what is the Senator's remedy for taking care of the 80 percent who are living below the poverty line? The Senator does not claim that it is overproduction, does he?

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. BORAH. There are 40,000,000 people in this country who are living close to the poverty line.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, that question is not one which can be determined by legislation. That is a question to be determined by normal laws, common-sense practice of life. If there is more wheat than we can either consume or sell, the remedy is not for the Government to say, "You dare not raise more wheat", but for the man to say, "If I insist upon raising wheat, I will pay the penalty of having no price." That is the solution.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but the Senator says "more wheat than we can use or sell."

Mr. FESS. I said if we raised more than we could use or sell.

Mr. BORAH. It cannot be sold to this 80 percent who are living below the poverty line, because they have nothing with which to purchase. They have no medium of exchange. They have no currency. The only medium of purchase they ever had has been taken away from them.

Mr. FESS. The Senator is getting the cart before the horse. It is not currency; it is a chance to work for the currency the 80-percent need.

Mr. BORAH. How can they get a chance unless there is money in circulation in order to create the chance?

Mr. FESS. In other words, if there are 80,000,000 people at work there must be $80,000,000 to circulate?

Mr. BORAH. No; it is not a question of 80,000,000, but there must be an adequate medium of exchange in order to make things move. Nearly half the human race have been deprived entirely of any medium of exchange whatever.

Mr. FESS. How has that happened?

Mr. BORAH. They are living upon a basis of barter.

Mr. FESS. How has that occurred? It is not because the money is not in existence. It is because they have no work for which the money will be paid.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator heard me read a while ago the statement of the president of the Imperial Bank of India. I have on my desk a statement of Sir Montague Webb, who has studied the India question for the last 20 years. He states that the misery and the suffering in India today are owing to the fact that the people were deprived of their money—the silver rupee. He ought to know something about it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, he says that; others say that that is not true. I have given the figures here showing that it is not true.

Mr. President, there is no need of the Senator and myself entering into a controversy of this sort. The Senator is asserting that our trouble is the lack of quantity of money. He does not take into consideration the fact that it makes no difference how much money the country has, if it is not used, there is not a chance for the man who lacks work to get work. It is not a question of money; it is the chance to work for the money that we lack today. We have the money.

Mr. BORAH. We have the money? Who has the money?

Mr. FESS. The lack of work is not because we do not have the money; we do have the money.

Mr. BORAH. We have the money? Who has the money in the United States today? Where is this money? It is in the banks. It is in the vaults. It does not circulate among the people. The people cannot get it. Business cannot get it. The banks will not lend it. Who has the money about which the Senator talks?

Mr. FESS. Suppose the Senator were a banker and had the money. How could he get it to the man who wanted to work and could not find work?

Mr. BORAH. Under the system of the Senator from Ohio, I would not do anything. I would do exactly what the bankers are doing; I would be afraid to put the money out. It is the system of which I am complaining, not the individual banker.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I do not think I can understand the Senator from Idaho. I insist that he stated that the trouble is not the lack of a chance to work, but that it is the want of a quantity of money that is troubling us. That is an error, if that it what the Senator means to say. We have the money. What the man who is out on the street wants is a chance to work. His capital is his ability to serve, and if he has no chance to sell his ability, no matter how much money we have, are we going to give it to him? The fundamental problem is the problem of setting the money to work.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says that the problem is to set the money to work. If the question, Mr. President, as to how to set the money to work can be answered, I think it will shorten this discussion very much.

Mr. FESS. Permit me to ask the Senator a specific question.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to have the Senator answer mine first and then I will have a chance to think over his.

Mr. FESS. All right.

Mr. BORAH. How are we going to set this money to work under present conditions?

Mr. FESS. Just give a breathing spell for a time to the man who would be willing to invest capital in the employment of labor.

Mr. BORAH. What does the Senator mean—give a breathing spell?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, we are spending $7,000,000,000 more this year than we take in. There is no way to take in any money except by way of taxation. Taxation is limited to the man who is employing labor in business. If he has no assurance that this increased expenditure for government, which has become shocking, is not going to continue to be assessed on him in addition to the already heavy burden of taxes, he will not invest a dollar in business, and he would be a fool if he did. Until we give some assurance to the business man that he will have a chance, so that what he invests will not mean an assured loss, but that he will have some reasonable chance to avoid a loss, he is not going to invest any money either in a new business or in his old business. And it is not difficult to see that he will not.

We are now complaining about the business man. We ask why he does not do this. And at the same time we are charging him with being responsible for the trouble concerning which we are complaining today. I state again that no recovery is possible except the normal recovery which must come from the employment of labor in the normal industries of the country which are producing the things required by the wants of the people. Those industries are not going to be revived unless the man who takes the risk of conducting business, who risks his money in investing the capital in business, knows what he is to meet in the future. No man knows that today. And he is not properly chargeable with the results complained of by many people who are making complaint against him because of his not investing new capital in the employment of labor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is undoubtedly true that we are spending a vast amount of money, and it may be that in expending this vast amount of money we are expending some money which ought not to be expended, but I do not see how it would be possible to stop expending this money when we have from ten to twelve million people who would go upon the highway the next day after we cease doing it.

Mr. FESS. It is not possible to stop it.

Mr. BORAH. No; it is not possible to stop it. Therefore there should be no complaint because this money is being expended. It is being expended because it is necessary to save human lives. That part of it we ought to dismiss.

I agree with the Senator that business is not to be assailed for not making long-time contracts, and so forth, because we do not know what is going to happen. But we do not know what is going to happen here, and they do not know what is going to happen anywhere else in view of conditions which now confront us, and until we change our monetary and banking systems we shall never have any different condition, in my judgment, from what we now have.

The Senator spoke about 1896. We had at that time a distressed condition such as we have at present, except that at that time it was not on so large a scale. What was said to be the cause of it? We were told at that time it was because of machinery, overproduction. If one will go back into the record of that time he will find that the same argument was made at that time which is being made now, that our trouble is that machinery is supplanting men; that there is overproduction, and so forth, and so forth. Now what happened? It continued until when? It continued until the gold from Alaska and from the Rand and from Australia began to pour into the coffers of trade, and there was never any revival until that happened.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have heard that many times before.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator dispute it?

Mr. FESS. Of course, I dispute it.

Mr. BORAH. Then what did revive trade? What did revive the situation from 1896?

Mr. FESS. Allowing business, which had been largely harmed by the legislation of 1893, which the Senator is well aware of——

Mr. BORAH. The legislation of 1893 had been repealed long before.

Mr. FESS. Oh, no; I am not talking about the Sherman Repeal Act. I am talking about the Roger Q. Mills' Act of 1893, whereby disturbances caused by a change of the tariff schedules throughout the country suspended business for a time until people could recognize what the prices would be. That always happens.

Mr. BORAH. Then, as I understand the Senator, an adequate tariff bill would revive industry at the present time?

Mr. FESS. No; but industry will not be revived by a change of the tariff downward.

Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Idaho state, if he could, how he is going to get this money he proposes now to issue to the man who has no work. I should like to know how he is going to get it.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator just complained a few minutes ago that we were spending billions and billions of dollars. No trouble about getting the money into circulation.

Mr. FESS. Will the Senator answer my question?

Mr. BORAH. That is exactly my answer to it.

Mr. FESS. Well, that is no answer at all.

Mr. BORAH. The Government is expending and putting out vast sums of money continually, and it is securing it by means of taxation. The Government could put out any reasonable amount of money it desired; these silver certificates or any other money that it desired.

Mr. FESS. Then the Senator means that when a man is working for the Government he ought not to be paid by a Government check; that he ought to be paid with money instead of a Government check; that we should do away with checks?

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no; not at all, but the Government may place its money on deposit anywhere it desires and have checks issued against it, but there must be money.

Mr. FESS. That is what the Government is doing. That is what it is doing now.

Mr. BORAH. Where is it getting the money?

Mr. FESS. It makes $3,000,000,000 gold by fiat.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; and the Senator does not complain of that, does he?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I do.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator does?

Mr. FESS. Yes; certainly I do.

Mr. BORAH. Well, I do not.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, what an argument! Here we have $4,000,000,000 of gold in the country. We put it in the Treasury. In tonight's paper appears the statement of the Treasury's condition this morning, which is that there is $4,000,000,000 of gold in the Treasury.

Tomorrow morning's statement is that it is $7,700,000,000, without a dollar of increase of wealth. And the Senator thinks that is money! The Senator thinks that is wealth! That wealth can be made by decree. If it can be done that way, then for God's sake let us stop all this business, and instead of devaluing the gold at 50 percent let us devalue it again, and instead of it being $7,000,000,000 in the Treasury, let us make it $14,000,000,000; and then devalue it again and instead of being $14,000,000,000 make it $28,000,000,000; and then devalue it again and make it $56,000,000,000; and just go on and create money.

That is a nice kind of an argument. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator said a while ago that if we had $1,000 in gold it would be sufficient upon which to base the monetary system of the world, so why not——

Mr. FESS. No, Mr. President, I did not say anything of the sort.

Mr. BORAH. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. FESS. Oh, no.

Mr. BORAH. The RECORD will show that that is what the Senator said.

Mr. FESS. Oh, no; the Senator used some figure and asked me whether that would do, and so on.

Mr. BORAH. Well, the Senator said it would.

Mr. FESS. If I did it was just to appease the Senator—or stop him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I cannot imagine how in the face of what every Senator knows we can listen to this kind of an argument from the Senator from Idaho. Here we have so much money in circulation. The Senator is convinced that we must have more, and he introduces a measure known as the "Borah amendment", to increase the national-bank circulation, without realizing that if we pump additional money out of the Treasury, unless there is use for it, if it goes out it only goes out to displace other money. Take the Federal Reserve System today. I had the statement of the Treasury of yesterday here a while ago.

We have $3,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes issued on a reserve of 40-percent gold. I do not understand why the Senator, if he really believes in the quantitative theory of money, does not devote his powers to induce the Government to take this step: We have $3,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes today, issued on a 40-percent gold reserve. We have more than $7,000,000,000 of gold in the Treasury. Suppose we should proceed to issue Federal Reserve notes on the basis of 40-percent gold reserve and use the $7,000,000,000 as such reserve, we would increase the Federal Reserve note issue almost two and a half times what it is now. In other words, we could issue $8,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes without calling on a single other agency in our governmental system to increase the quantity of money.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FESS. Just a moment, if my friend will wait. We could have $8,000,000,000 of this kind of money. Suppose we should do that, what would happen? If we should issue a certain amount of money, that portion of it beyond what is needed would force other kinds of money to retire. Why have we not been issuing additional money? Already we have $13,000,000,000, and yet only a little over $5,000,000,000 are in circulation. Why do we not have $13,000,000,000 in circulation? Is the Government at fault? Is the administration blamable? Certainly not. Money cannot be pumped into business unless there is demand for the work of that money, and the $13,000,000,000 now available are merely resting in the vaults, not because someone is controlling a corner on it, not because there is a gold-standard control, but because there is no need of more money for the work that is now being done. The minute the work which the money can do is increased, the money flows into work, and when the work is lessened the money flows back. That is the basic character of any wise system of money; and we have the finest system of any country in the world today.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. I now yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. The Senator has made a statement which I have made on the floor of the Senate a number of times, that we could issue now from eight to ten billion dollars of money on our present gold stock without inflation. The Senator agrees with that statement, I take it?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I agree with it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FESS. I will yield in just a moment. I have before me now the last daily statement of the United States Treasury, which shows that there are outstanding Federal Reserve notes amounting to $3,330,000,000 against which there are $18,871,000 in commercial paper, $364,300,000 in Government bonds, and $3,004,771,000 in gold certificates. Those Federal Reserve notes are issued on a 40-percent gold basis. There could be, of course, a great many more of them issued.

In answer to the question of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], $3,300,000,000 Federal Reserve notes are on a 40-percent gold basis, and if we should issue up to the full reserve of $7,700,000,000 gold, the issuance of such notes would go way beyond anything like $7,700,000,000.

Mr. LONG. That could be done today on the basis of 40 cents gold for every paper dollar, and we would still be on a standard monetary basis, as I understand?

Mr. FESS. It could be done, because if they wanted to go even beyond that they could supplement it by Government bonds of which there are now plenty.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. What the Senator from Ohio says is true only theoretically. It is not true that the Government could issue, based upon the amount of gold now in reserve, amounting to something like $7,000,000,000, sufficient currency to have outstanding money enough to represent all that could be issued on a 40-percent basis. As a matter of fact, before the gold dollar was devalued and the dollar value of gold in reserve was increased, we had never, as I recall, issued all the money that could be issued upon the 40-percent basis computed on the old dollar value.

Mr. FESS. That is because we did not need to do it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very largely, that is true.

Mr. FESS. That is the only reason. We could have done it.

Mr. BARKLEY. My recollection is that the provision in the Gold Devaluation Act prevents the Government from issuing gold certificates based on gold in reserve, taken over from the Federal Reserve System, except to the Federal Reserve System in lieu of possession and ownership of the actual gold; so that, to that extent, we would be limited in issuing gold certificates or paper money based upon that amount of gold.

Mr. FESS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. While it is true that theoretically we could issue eight or ten billion dollars more of circulating money, and not go beyond the requirement of 40-percent gold as a basis for every dollar issued, as a matter of fact, that money, under the present system, will not be issued and will not be called for, and the Government of the United States could not issue it except upon the demand of the Federal Reserve Board——

Mr. FESS. Precisely.

Mr. BARKLEY. As a result of the demand from the Federal Reserve banks.

Mr. FESS. From the member banks.

Mr. BARKLEY. In their respective districts, based upon a wider demand for money to be used in commerce and business.

Mr. FESS. That statement is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the caution that everybody recognizes is prevailing in all the banks and their unwillingness to make loans because of the fact that they have had their fingers burnt in the last 4 or 5 years, and on the theory that a child, even a banking child, dreads the fire when its fingers have been burnt, does not the Senator believe that the issue of additional money based upon this silver proposition of 25 to 75 might in some way inspire a little more confidence, so that money that is already in existence, in vaults or in banks or wherever it may be, might loosen up somewhat and result in a more rapid turnover of the money that is now in existence and in bringing about a more rapid revival of business?

Mr. FESS. The Senator means that confidence would be inspired because there would be a metallic value in the money that would be issued on a metallic basis?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not necessarily, for there is a metallic value in all our money theoretically, based upon the fact that there are 40 cents in gold back of every dollar that is issued. What I am driving at is, would it not be possible, by reason of the wider utilization of silver as a basis for money, and some advantage coming to the silver nations that might reflect itself in larger purchases of the surplus commodities of the United States, operating as a sort of a priming of the pump, to bring about a loosening of credit and a more rapid turnover of money, so that the indirect benefit of this additional circulating medium might be to bring about a better credit situation and a currency more responsive to the real needs of the country?

Mr. FESS. A direct answer to the Senator is that I think whatever amount of money under this proposed legislation should be issued would force a retirement of that much or comparatively that much of some other kind of money, such as Federal Reserve notes. If we should issue a billion dollars of money such as is contemplated under this bill, my fear is that, instead of having $3,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes, we would, in due time, have $2,000,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, as I understand, there is no mandatory increase in the amount of paper money that will be in circulation after the enactment of this bill over what there is at this time.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me to make a statement with reference to his remark as to there being no mandatory provision, the only thing that would lead me to look with any favor upon this proposed legislation is that it is purely permissive, that it does not command that anything be done. In other words, the President is not under compulsion, any more than he is to proceed under the act which now gives him the authority in an unlimited way, if he wanted to use it, to fix the ratio to suit himself. He has never resorted to it. When that measure was before us I opposed it vigorously because I did not want to give any man such power as that. The President has not used that power and I am of the opinion that he will not use it.

The bill now before us is on exactly the same basis. It does not compel the President to use the power. I wrote to about 20 of my friends over the country asking their opinion as to why there is so little interest in legislation of this character. In nearly every case the answer came back, "I believe it is because of the confidence the people have in the President that he will not use the authority."

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that. I realize that the authority is only permissive. I have not yet been willing to go so far as to say that I would vote for it if it were not permissive. In other words, if the bill compelled him to do it I am not prepared to say I should support it. I realize that in the permissive status, unless he did use it, it might be possible that the only direct benefit coming from the bill would be to increase the price of silver, which would be beneficial, of course, and that would not occur probably except as a speculative venture unless the President did make some use of the power granted by the bill.

I am wondering whether the enactment of legislation of this kind, even though it is not used, or at least not used to any great extent, would tend to revive confidence among other nations than our own to such an extent that they might be in a better position to benefit us by buying larger amounts of our products, both of the factory and of the farm, and in a way, though indirectly, bringing about some revival of our languishing industries.

Mr. FESS. I do not see the connection and how it would bring about any additional confidence. If the bill shall pass, whatever may be done under it, that money will be the only money that is based upon any commodity which has an inherent value. Gold is out of circulation now. It is impounded. Silver would be the basis of the new money and the bill provides that silver certificates shall be redeemable in silver. That, of course, makes it immediately a basic kind of money and it would be the only basic money we would have.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I want to correct one statement the Senator made, which was concurred in by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and that is that the measure is entirely permissive. If the Senator will read the bill he will find that the policy is declared by the Congress to be that we shall have 25 percent of our money reserves in silver, and that the President is authorized and directed to purchase silver until our reserves reach 25 percent in silver and 75 percent in gold.

So it is not permissive. The President is directed to do it. It is only discretionary in the matter of the time within which he is to do it. It must be assumed under the provisions of the bill that the President will be given only a reasonable time within which to do what he is authorized and directed to do under the bill. No other interpretation could be placed upon it except that he is authorized and directed to do it, and must do it within a reasonable time under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator. I think he has corrected an error that was made. The original idea was that it was to be purely permissive, and evidently that was what was in the minds of the people to whom I wrote. The almost universal response was that there is no interest in the particular bill in business circles, because it is believed the President will not use the power, as there is no requirement that he shall use it.

Mr. WHEELER. One reason why there is opposition to it will be disclosed to the Senator if he will read an article which appeared on the financial page of the New York Times of yesterday. He will find there an article indicating that certain banking groups in New York met and denounced the bill. But generally I believe the sentiment of the country at the present time is so much in favor of this kind of legislation that that is why he has not heard of any particular opposition.

Mr. FESS. I should like to say to my friend from Montana that I believe the reason why there is no particular interest is that the rapidity with which we are doing heretofore unheard of things has had the effect of absolutely making everybody dizzy. I cannot keep up with them, to say nothing of understanding them, and I believe the public has the same feeling. I doubt whether any kind of a radical proposal would very much arouse the public interest today. That is my honest judgment.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree with the Senator entirely in that statement because of the fact that I believe the people have gone so far ahead of the Senator from Ohio in their views that they have become liberal in their views, whereas the Senator from Ohio has been standing still. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. It was said that if we did certain things we would get certain results. We have liberalized conditions, and yet the results have not come about. So it is said that if we will pass this bill and give permission for certain issues and certain changes in the monetary system certain results will ensue. I am wondering whether the uncertainty which prevails by reason of the proposed change in the law does not more than offset any possible benefit or confidence which may come about under the bill.

Mr. FESS. That is precisely my fear. In other words, we lack in the country today a very essential element which we must have if there is to be any substantial recovery, and that is the element of confidence. So long as every movement is accompanied by a degree of uncertainty, when nobody knows what is going to happen, when people are inquiring "Where are we going?" there is bound to be a lack of confidence. Nobody is going to make any venture under such conditions.

Nobody has any right to complain because no one will venture under those conditions. It is all right for those who never made a dollar in their lives, and who would fail before night if they were to try to stand on their own merits, to tell the world how to do business, but the man who has to face loss without any possibility for recouping is not going to take that kind of advice. Everything that is being done brings about an additional lack of confidence, additional uncertainty. Under the bill now before us we cannot be certain, first, whether anything is going to be done; or, secondly, what will be done, and certainly we cannot be sure of the results of anything that might be done.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me suggest, as was suggested a few moments ago, that we now have 10,000,000 unemployed and we find the statement creeping into the public press that undoubtedly we are going to be required to face that more or less as a permanent condition.

Mr. FESS. That is my fear.

Mr. DICKINSON. Not as an emergency situation.

Mr. FESS. That is my fear.

Mr. DICKINSON. We will have to find a way by which we can meet the situation and work it out along those lines and under those conditions.

Mr. FESS. That is my fear. Already all through the country people are making demands as a matter of their own right. Their demands today are that we shall appropriate money to keep them. From all over my State demands are coming that we shall vote money from the Federal Treasury to pay off the depositors in the closed banks. I have said to the people who have written me, if under its legitimate functions the Federal Government is to give money out directly for the benefit of the people, I do not know of any way by which there could be a wider use of the money than by employing it in that way.

But when a Senator, for instance, has money tied up in a closed bank, or has money tied up in building-and-loan associations, he naturally asks, On what basis could he demand that the taxpayer shall give, out of the United States Treasury, the funds to pay him off because of his misfortune in having his funds tied up in a closed bank? Yet, the people are demanding it as a right.

The unemployed in many cases regard the Government as responsible for their unemployment, and they demand as their right either that they be given work or else be paid a dole. I repeatedly argued against the dole when it first was proposed. Under the Hoover administration when the question first came up I urged time and again that the dole was dangerous because it was not for the unemployed, but it was for the unemployable. As we increased its use, we increased the number of unemployed and we have now reached the point where it is demanded as a matter of right. Of course, I know we cannot stop it now. We have gone to the point of destroying the local agencies which theretofore had supplied the needs of the communities. With those local agencies destroyed, of course, we have to keep it up. I want to know when it is going to stop and what is to be the outcome of it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. Does not the Senator think that when we decided to start the dole we decided not to stop it?

Mr. FESS. The Senator has stated the situation in a cryptic manner which is beyond my ability to equal.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask those who criticize the starting of this program what they would have done. Would they have permitted the people to starve? The program was not initiated until people were in dire distress, until they could not get work, until want stared them in the face morning and night. What would Senators have done? Would they have refused to have fed and to have clothed and to have taken care of the people under those circumstances? I do not think so. The Senator is talking against an actuality, a thing that existed. It was not a theory. It was a condition and the Government had to meet it. It is having to meet it now. Can the Government at this time stop this program of relief?

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly not. Well, we might just as well stop it now and let them starve, as not to have started it and let them starve in the first place. It is a condition which the Government will have to meet, and there is no use complaining about it.

Another thing, Mr. President: This idea that by helping the people of the United States we are making them loafers and worthless people I think is a wholly mistaken one. Give them an opportunity to work, and there is not one out of a hundred who would not infinitely prefer to have a job than to accept charity. It is a condition which confronts them and confronts the Government, and it must be met as it is being met.

Another thing: Senators are saying we must restore confidence. I call their attention to the fact that this depression began at a time when confidence was at its height. I recall a book that was written in 1929, consisting of articles contributed by the great industrialists and financiers of the United States, and the introduction was written by a man who afterward became President of the United States. We were told in that book that we had not reached our industrial height; that we were going to make more and more industrial progress in the United States; and yet in the very midst of that condition, when confidence was universal throughout the United States, when investments were being made everywhere, when business was going forward, the depression began the world over.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho will very well recall the rather intense controversy which he and I had when, by his aid, this program was launched. I said then, "We are starting something that we shall never stop." I say that now, and the reason why we shall never stop it is seen from the manner in which it is operating.

Let me use as an example a certain town in my State. Up to last year the unfortunate people of that town who had not employment were cared for. Not a single person froze. No one starved. No one suffered to any serious extent. The town took care of all of its people at a cost of $40 a month for one person at the point of distribution. All the work was voluntary. All the supplies were contributed. Nobody thought of charging rent for the headquarters where the community interests were administered. It was all a voluntary effort. It had always succeeded. No one not familiar with a situation of that kind can fully understand what we lose by destroying the community interest which indicates the willingness of those who have to help those who have not.

What happened last year? The first person who come into that town to administer relief was a Government man at $150 a month. He has an assistant at $90 a month, and some clerks. The aggregate salaries run up to $320 a month. The Government pays rental for the headquarters, and the whole thing is Federalized. What had heretofore been done at a total cost of $40 a month, all local, all voluntary, every dollar contributed, the Government is doing at a cost of $320 a month, to say nothing about the cost for rental. That is what happens. There is not a dollar, so far as I know, contributed by the local people. That sort of thing destroys the very best element in our civilization.

Mr. President, that is what we have done; and these social settlement leaders regard it as a great humanitarian movement. Just in the degree that it is so regarded it has become permanent. From now on the Federal Government will be called upon continuously to perform as a duty a function which the community ought to have performed; but we shall never get from under it now. We have destroyed those functions at home, and there is nothing left for us to do but to vote the billions out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I think much that the Senator from Ohio has said is correct; but I think he should concede the fact that practically all these local governments have completely broken down. Here is the city of Chicago, one of the richest and one of the biggest cities in the United States, unable even to pay her school teachers.

Mr. FESS. Oh, Chicago could take care of her people.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, Mr. President; but she did not take care of them.

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. WHEELER. New York City could take care of her people, but she did not take care of them. Various other cities and States could have taken care of their people, but they did not do so. They could not get the money to take care of them, and there was a complete breakdown.

Mr. FESS. I admit that that element is there. They did not do it, but they could have done it.

Mr. WHEELER. As I say, in the city of Chicago they did not even pay their school teachers. They had to close the fire department in the city of Chicago. The city government was completely broken down long before the Federal Government started in.

Mr. FESS. The Senator states that they could not pay the school teachers, which is true. Does he think we ought to inaugurate the policy of having the Federal Government pay the school teachers of the cities?

Mr. WHEELER. No; I do not think the Federal Government ought to pay the school teachers. I am simply calling attention to the fact that the city governments all over the country were completely broken down. The fire departments were breaking down. The police systems were breaking down. We had a complete demoralization of the State governments, the city governments, and the county governments, which could not collect enough taxes to keep up their organized activities. If the Federal Government had not stepped in and done a great many of these things, I tremble to think what would have occurred in this country.

Mr. FESS. The Senator may be right about that, but I have not felt that there is any community that could not have taken care of its unemployed. What I fear is that we shall add to this sort of thing. We are about to start in on the teachers. There is no doubt about it. The propaganda from my State by the teachers' associations indicates their position to be that education is a Federal matter, and we cannot afford to let the schools be closed, and the Federal Government must come to the rescue in the way of appropriations. I have no doubt that that propaganda will win in time; and that is not all. The Federal Government will be the source from which almost all sorts of funds will be demanded; and tell me where the money is to come from!

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not wish to take issue with the Senator, but the Relief Administrator was before one of the committees this morning in connection with relief appropriations; and, speaking of one phase of the matter, rural relief, he stated that the Federal Government is now bearing only about 50 percent of the load which it originally carried. In other words, there is a distinct improvement in that field.

Mr. FESS. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Many of the other activities in which the Federal Government was forced to engage last fall and winter are diminishing. They are on the downward side. While I do not mean to say that the Senator's remarks are not apt in many cases, it is only fair to say that the relief situation is improving, and not increasing, as to expenditures.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I attended the entire hearing this morning to which the Senator from Maryland has referred. The Senator from Maryland was there for only a short time. I desire to suggest that the Administrator told us that it would take $110,000,000 a month for the entire next year, which is over a billion dollars, to carry on the relief program as the authorities now have it organized.

What I rose to suggest to the Senator from Ohio, however, was that when the States were tabulated—and it does not seem to me that there can possibly be this difference in the capacity of the various States to take care of themselves—it developed that there are some States in the Union in which 99.7 percent of all the money that has been used for relief has been furnished by the Federal Government. There are other States in which less than 15 percent has been furnished by the Federal Government. The percentages run all the way between those two extremes. I do not see how anyone can insist that there is so much difference in the capacity of the different States to take care of themselves that there is that variation in the percentage required to take care of the Federal relief problem in the respective States.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator from Iowa for his observation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. While the Senator stated an outside figure, he did not qualify his statement with the fact that the money which the Federal Relief Administrator requested for relief purposes is not to be expended in grants or direct gifts. It is to be used in many cases for loans upon physical property to rehabilitate these people and get them off the permanent relief roll. That constitutes a very large proportion of the amount which the Senator from Iowa indicated.

Further than that, the Senator from Iowa knows, and I know, that the relief load in the large cities of the country is diminishing. The Senator further knows that many of the States have not any credit. There is not a banking house or an investor in the world who will lend them money. Further than that, the Senator from Iowa himself voted the other day for a bill to permit municipalities and counties to go into bankruptcy.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, let me suggest further that I did not vote for that bill, and I was one of its opponents on this side of the Chamber. I think it was one of the most vicious things this administration has permitted to go through the Senate. I also desire to suggest that the Administrator told us that there are more than 4,000,000 families on relief right now; and the item to which the Senator refers with reference to loans amounted to less than $25,000,000 out of one and one-eighth billion dollars.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. If I have done the Senator from Iowa wrong in saying that he voted for the bill, I apologize; but let me point out that his eminent friend and colleague on the other side of the aisle, and of the same general wing with which the Senator usually goes into action, begged and pleaded with us, coming from Detroit, to pass that bill in order that Detroit and other towns in Michigan might have the benefit of it, because he said there was no doubt that if we did not pass the bill they could not raise a dollar and could not liquidate their obligations.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FESS. I yield, and then I must continue.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the trouble is that there is plenty of food to eat and plenty of things to wear, but we have allowed a few men to have them and have left the balance of the people to starve. These wealthy men will not share their wealth. I have proposed a bill to correct that.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in speaking of this very serious problem, I have referred to the administration inaugurating a policy the wisdom of which I doubted, stating that if we began it we could not stop it, though I have a good deal of confidence in what has been suggested, that in all probability those in control are trying to reduce. That is quite important.

I hope also that we will not take lightly the statement that the locality cannot take care of its needs, and that therefore the Government must do it. In other words, there ought to be something of matching appropriations by the localities where the Government is extending assistance. If that is not done, local communities are simply going to say, "The Government owes it to us, and we will depend on the Government." It is a very easy thing to say, "We cannot do it, therefore you must do it." If we yield to that kind of argument, it will be simply too bad for this Nation in the future, because I can see what this is building up among our own people.

Mr. President, on the question of the use of silver as under the Sherman Law, which was enacted in 1890, in substitution for the Bland-Allison Act, which was passed in 1878, the dollar bill was redeemable, not in silver alone but in coin. The obligation that was written on the face of the certificate was, "This note is redeemable in coin", which meant either gold or silver.

But when the holder of a Sherman note came to the Treasury and demanded gold, the Treasury could have said, "This is redeemable in coin, and we will give you silver, but we will not give you gold." It was thought that that discrimination would immediately react in favor of gold, and would at once throw the country on a silver basis. It was that fear which led President Cleveland to call the special session of 1893, and to ask for the repeal of the law. I have never seen a stronger statement made than the statement of the President on that occasion. This is what he said:

> Twice in our recent history we have signally failed to raise by legislation the value of silver.

Please note that the usual argument of all people who are interested in this question is that the legislation will increase the value. I have no doubt that, to the degree to which the Government can make demand for silver there will be an increase in the price, though not in the value, because it will be partially fiat. President Cleveland said:

> Twice in our recent history we have signally failed to raise by legislation the value of silver. Under an act of Congress passed in 1878 the Government was required for more than 12 years to expend annually at least $24,000,000 in the purchase of silver bullion for coinage. The act of July 14, 1890, in a still bolder effort, increased the amount of silver the Government was compelled to purchase and forced it to become the buyer annually of 54,000,000 ounces, or practically the entire product of our mines. Under both laws silver rapidly and steadily declined in value.
> Every dollar of fixed and stable value has, through the agency of confident credit, an astonishing capacity of multiplying itself in financial work.

That is a statement which some of the advocates of the quantitative system of money will deny. Let me read it again:

> Every dollar of fixed and stable value has, through the agency of confident credit, an astonishing capacity of multiplying itself in financial work.

That means that if there is a hundred million dollars of business to be done, it is not necessary to have a hundred million dollars in circulation. There would have to be only a small fraction in circulation.

> Every unstable and fluctuating dollar fails as a basis of credit, and in its use begets gambling speculation and undermines the foundations of honest enterprise.
> * * * I cannot rid myself of the belief that there lurk in the proposition for the free coinage of silver, so strongly approved and so enthusiastically advocated by a multitude of my countrymen, a serious menace to our prosperity and an insidious temptation of our people to wander from the allegiance they owe to public and private integrity. * * *

President Cleveland made other penetrating comments in his message to Congress of August 8, 1893, when he asked that the silver-purchase provision of the law be repealed. He said:

> The people of the United States are entitled to a sound and stable currency and to money recognized as such on every exchange and in every market of the world. Their Government has no right to injure them by financial experiments opposed to the policy and practice of other civilized states, nor is it justified in permitting an exaggerated and unreasonable reliance on our material strength and ability to jeopardize the soundness of the people's money.

Mr. President, think of that statement, when President Cleveland said that people are entitled to a sound and stable currency. We have boasted that it mattered not what kind of money we have; that it does not make any difference whether it is the gold certificate or the gold coin; that it does not make any difference whether it is the silver dollar or the silver certificate; that it does not make any difference whether it is the national-bank note, the Federal Reserve bank note, or the Federal Reserve note; that it does not make any difference whether it is greenbacks, limited in amount today, as it has been for years to $346,000,000; it does not make any difference what it is, under the law of 1900 we aimed to make every dollar interchangeable, and the basis was the gold value. It did not make any difference whether any form of that money was in Ohio, New York, California, Mexico, Patagonia, the islands of the sea, the Orient; it made no difference; it rang sound, 100 cents on the dollar, over every counter of the world.

Now what is it? I displayed a note here a moment ago, a rubber dollar, with no basis, resting on nothing, with no redeeming quality.

There was a consul here the other day who told me that our Foreign Service could not live because, while we talk about the dollar here purchasing so much, over in Europe the dollar is converted into the money of the country where our foreign servants are located, and instead of a dollar being worth in purchasing power what it is here, it is worth whatever the foreign government is willing to give for it in its currency. We were compelled—and it was right for us to do it—to give to the President the authority to make up the difference in the salaries of our Foreign Service between what the American dollar once bought and what it buys now. While it seems an anomalous thing for us to do, we did it, and properly so. We will be called upon to do it for our own citizens in our own country in due time. When the wage earners and the salaried men, representing over 70 percent of our people, undertake to buy goods which are higher priced, owing to the cheapening of the dollar, and find that living costs have advanced 30 percent and wages and salaries remain the same, they will realize the penalty that has been imposed upon our officials in the Foreign Service; they will see what they have suffered, and will ask that some relief be granted to them.

Mr. President, that is the danger of tampering with the basis of a monetary system; and when we start out to say that we are going to enact legislation in order to increase the volume of money on the theory that such legislation is going to make money more abundant for the people of the country, we are very badly mistaken, except where there will be further or increased use for the money. This will happen: In the degree that under this proposed legislation we issue new money, other money now in circulation will be retired, and there is no possibility of keeping it in circulation unless there is work to do. There is no work to do outside of business.

The President proceeds:

At times like the present—

That is 1893—

when the evils of unsound finance threaten us—

And that can be said today—

the speculator may anticipate a harvest gathered from the misfortunes of others, the capitalist may protect himself by hoarding or may even find profit in the fluctuations of values; but the wage earner—the first to be injured by a depreciated currency and the last to receive the benefits of its correction—is practically defenseless.

That is what I am talking about.

He relies for work upon the ventures of confident and contented capital. This failing him, his condition is without alleviation, for he can neither prey on the misfortune of others nor hoard his labor.

Mr. President, that was sound policy in 1893. That is just as sound today. And those words ought to go ringing down the corridors of time as a warning against these new nostrums based upon the unsound philosophy that all that is needed is to print money, or to devalue gold, or to increase the volume, without any regard to the one essential thing—the increase of business or the increase of the work of money.

Mr. President, this bill is, first, a declaration of national policy, to increase the use of silver in our monetary stocks with the ultimate object of maintaining 25 percent of the monetary value in silver and 75 percent in gold.

Second, for the purchase of silver at home or abroad, by the Secretary of the Treasury, to give effect to the declared national policy, at prices not to exceed the monetary value, $1.29 per fine ounce, but at not more than 50 cents per ounce for silver situated in the continental United States on May 1, 1934. Under the provisions of the proclamation of the President dated December 21, 1933, the Treasury Department is authorized to buy at least 24,000,000 ounces of silver newly mined in this country annually, at 64½ cents per fine ounce, pursuant to which authority approximately 6,600,000 ounces have been purchased to date, as reported to me.

Third, for the nationalization of silver, in a manner similar to the recent nationalization of gold, if and when such action is necessary in the judgment of the President, said silver to be coined into standard silver dollars or otherwise added to the monetary stocks and to be paid for in standard silver dollars or currency to an amount equal practically to the bullion value of the silver surrendered, the surplus coin value being retained by the United States, under the term of seigniorage.

Fourth, for the issuance of silver certificates, against any portion of the silver acquired, to be backed at face value by standard silver dollars and silver bullion at monetary value; said silver certificates to be full legal tender.

Fifth, for the control of imports and exports of silver by regulation and licensing and by the imposition of heavy penalties for violations.

Sixth, for a Federal tax, originally as the bill was printed, of 50 percent of the profit on transactions in silver, so as to avoid too much speculation.

Mr. President, commenting upon the bill, as its purpose has now been announced, the present value of gold in the United States, under the new valuation of $35 per fine ounce, is in round figures $7,800,000,000. This amount of gold will permit the issue of $2,600,000,000 monetary value of silver to establish the basis of 75 percent gold and 25 percent silver. Since the present stock of silver, that is, silver certificates, silver dollars, silver bullion, and subsidiary coin, amounts to $1,339,828,000—circulation statement March 31, 1934—it is possible, therefore, under the legislation proposed, to increase the stocks of silver by approximately $1,260,000,000.

It is this figure of $1,260,000,000 additional stocks of silver to which we must give consideration when judging the merits of the proposed legislation.

I know that there is a vast difference of opinion as to whether there is any inflation involved in this legislation. Some people claim there is not any. Others strongly argue that inflation is here.

The present standard silver dollar contains 412.5 grains of silver 0.9 fine; say, 371.25 grains of pure silver. There being 480 grains to the ounce, the amount of pure silver in a silver dollar is coined at the rate of $1.29 per fine ounce. At $1.29 per fine ounce for silver, which is the monetary-value price, the purchase of 976,744,190 ounces of silver would be required to make up the additional stocks of silver to a monetary value of $1,260,000,000.

At 50 cents per fine ounce for silver the total cost of 976,744,190 ounces of silver would be $488,372,095, resulting in a clear profit to the United States of the difference between $1,260,000,000 and the cost of $488,372,095, or $771,627,905.

That is the argument which is offered by the proponents of the bill as an additional inducement why the bill ought to be passed—because there is an actual profit to the Government which will be made exactly as we made a profit by the devaluation of gold. It is a profit that is flat.

At 65 cents per fine ounce the cost would be $634,883,723 and the profit $625,116,277.

At 75 cents per fine ounce the cost would be $732,558,142 and the profit $527,441,858.

Admitting all these facts, it seems to me there is no economic need for such legislation. In the first place, it would be charged that it is in the interest of the silver-producing States, and to that degree is class legislation. However, I do not regard that as a legitimate objection, if it could be shown that by benefiting those States we are not doing an injury to the public at large.

It is stated that if silver should reach a certain price the Government would have the difference in the value between that price and the price originally paid. I do not know how the Government could utilize that value, because there is not to be any sale unless the silver reaches the price of $1.29, and that sale provision, of course, is put in there so as to prevent the Government's having to pay more than $1.29. If the price of silver reaches that point, the Government could then enter upon the sale of silver and defeat the effort to pile the silver of the world upon the United States; but the question is whether additional currency to the extent of $2,260,000,000, or any part thereof, could be absorbed by business at this time, and whether its issuance would not force out of circulation an equal volume of other currency now in circulation which is redeemable in character, such redeemable currency being principally Federal Reserve notes.

Federal Reserve notes are now outstanding to the extent of over $3,000,000,000, and the amount of currency which would be issued under this bill would almost certainly displace an equal amount of Federal Reserve notes. I think that conclusion is not to be controverted. It has been proved a thousand times, by a thousand experiences, and we never had a better proof of it than the experience we have right now in the United States with twice and a half the amount of money stock as against the money that is now in circulation.

Mr. President, I recognize the force of the argument of those who are espousing this bill on the basis of its giving a new market for silver. I do not agree with those who state that the new market which will raise the price of silver is going to be beneficial to the country at large. I do not believe that it is going to give any additional urge to our foreign trade. All the argument I have heard has been based, I think, upon a false premise. I have tried to take the time to give the figures and to indicate that the claim of those who say that the use of silver is going to enlarge our oriental trade is wholly without foundation.

Mr. President, I am not in favor of increasing, beyond what we already have, facility to add to the monetary stocks of the country. This bill will do it, but it will not be of any value to the country.

I am opposed to the element of uncertainty that is involved in the passage of this kind of legislation. I am not in favor of inflation. I am not saying that the element of inflation is here involved, but there is a possibility of it, and it may so result; it will depend entirely upon what the President may do.

I am not in favor of the contention that there should be given to silver an artificial price and thus enlarge the profit on it, as has been done in the case of gold. I think that is a very unsound and unsafe procedure. It is going further to tie up business, and the difficulty is that we cannot see any bright spot in the future if something is not done to increase the confidence of business so that business may revive.

I am afraid of so much power being put in the hands of any one man. I thought it very unwise to give to the President the power to devalue gold. We limited him to 50 percent, and then later we put a maximum limit on his power in that direction, but if that process is a correct one, then we can devalue again and then again and again. If that is the proper course, that is the easy way to make money.

Here is a proposal that has the same element in it; and there is also written into it the nationalization feature, which will permit the President to impound all the silver in the country. What I want to know, and what every Senator ought to know, with the impounding of all the gold and the impounding of all the silver, and taking both of them out of circulation, what is to be used after that? Is it a suggestion that we are going to have the world find some new currency, based upon the two metals, under the direction of our Government, which has the major portion of gold and silver? That possibility is in this measure. I do not know what may be in the minds of those who are to administer the proposal, but I have a right to know when I vote to give authority how far the authority is going to reach.

Mr. President, there is no finer authority on the subject anywhere in America than Dr. H. Parker Willis, the man who collaborated in the original creation of the Federal Reserve System. I assume that everyone will admit that in the discussion of such problems he is probably the highest ranking expert we have in America. Recently in the Bulletin of the National Association of Purchasing Agents, Dr. Willis discussed the silver problem under the heading Another Perplexing Problem Discussed—Silver. I should like all Senators to examine the statement of Dr. Willis, and I am, therefore, not going to read it, but I ask unanimous consent to have it inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

[From the Bulletin of the National Association of Purchasing Agents, May 23, 1934]

ANOTHER PERPLEXING PROBLEM DISCUSSED—SILVER

By Dr. H. Parker Willis

Silver legislation is apparently once again on the schedule at Washington; at the moment of this writing dispatches indicate that there is certainly a distinct possibility, if not an actual probability, that Congress will act in the matter before going home. Current accounts assert that the measure will be largely "permissive" in character, carefully avoiding any compulsion upon the President to do any specific thing within any given period of time. Yet, if those who are close to the situation in the National Capital are correct in their understanding as to what is likely to be in the law if and when adopted, Congress is planning to lay down a general policy with respect to silver and our monetary system which if accepted and acted upon by the President would have important consequences.

It is likewise true that a great many misunderstandings exist on the subject among those in the business community who are well acquainted neither with the so-called "silver question" as such nor with the true inwardness of the monetary aspects of the problems involved. Apparently there are a good many who suppose, or at the least would like to have the rest of us believe that any significant action taken by the Federal Government in respect of silver would constitute, or result in, a species of inflation much more potent in its effect upon prices both in the stock market and the whole business structure than the type of inflation that has been proceeding unnoticed or unrecognized in our midst for years past. Yet it would be difficult indeed to adduce good evidence in support of any such view. Various other unfounded ideas about the probable effects of silver legislation of the sort now proposed are current. It would be a good thing if the business man would sit down with paper and pencil and figure some of these matters carefully out for himself.

PERMISSIVE AUTHORITY VS. MANDATORY POLICY

Apparently the bill now under advisement would authorize and direct the President to buy silver in the open market until such time as either the price of the metal rose to $1.29 per fine ounce—the price of silver as represented in the silver dollar—or until our metallic monetary reserve consisted of 25 percent silver and 75 percent gold in terms of value. Apparently, however, the President may begin such action at any time in the next decade that may suit him. There is also a good deal of discussion of what is known as "nationalization" of domestically owned silver. By this it is meant that the Government would take possession of all such silver, paying the owner in some one of the several forms of money, possibly silver certificates issued against the silver itself, at a price determined either by Congress or the President. Another feature of current discussion is the idea that the Government would coin all such silver into dollars with the present metal content of such dollars, or else issue silver certificates against it at the present rate of value of the metal for monetary purposes. It is more or less idle at this time to undertake to say whether all these provisions will be embodied in any legislation adopted at this session of Congress or not. What is clear is that the President is already empowered, under the so-called "Thomas amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933", to do any or all of these things at his discretion.

The real question at issue, then, is whether or not the President would accept the "policy" of Congress as expressed in legislation to this general effect as mandatory upon him within reasonable time limits. As to this, no one can give a definite answer except the President, even if he could. Perhaps it would be helpful, however, as an aid to clarity of thought about this whole much-bedeviled subject to assume that the President would act with dispatch in the event of the passage of some such law at this session, and then proceed to estimate the probable results particularly upon the monetary situation and through it upon the price structure.

First the facts. They are rather simple. No one knows with any great degree of exactitude what the stocks of so-called "free silver" in this country really are. Silver advocates in Congress expressed the opinion some weeks ago that they did not exceed about 250,000,000 ounces. This estimate has been generally considered as good as any. Since that time the Government is known to have bought some 35,000,000 ounces. Suppose we give the inflationists the benefit of any doubt that may exist, and say that the domestic stocks of silver available for purchase by the Government at the present time are 225,000,000 ounces. Our production of the metal in 1933 amounted to about 62,000,000 ounces. Suppose, for the sake of the discussion, it were to rise again under the stimulus of Government buying to 150,000,000 ounces annually, a figure which would be somewhat above the 1929 rate—a rather fantastic assumption, probably, since so much of the production comes from ores refined for other metals. Our net imports in 1933 were slightly less than 100,000,000 ounces, a strange phenomenon for this country. We are normally large exporters of the metal, and in 1929 exported around 100,000,000 ounces in excess of imports. Assume, further, however, that we continued to import silver during the next 12 months at such a rate that another 100,000,000 ounces arrived during that time. Suppose finally that consumption in the arts and industries continues at the 1933 level of some 25,000,000 ounces.

To the existing stocks of 225,000,000 ounces we should then have to add 150,000,000 ounces of domestic production, and 100,000,000 ounces of imports, and must then subtract 25,000,000 ounces to arrive at what one would suppose would be a liberal figure for the silver that would be available to the Treasury during the next 12 months. This gives a figure of 450,000,000 ounces. Now, should the Treasury issue silver certificates for the silver thus acquired at the rate of $1.29 per ounce, it would make possible the issuance of $580,000,000 in silver certificates. Currency in circulation at the present time amounts to somewhat more than $5,300,000,000. Of course, what would happen if silver certificates in the amount already mentioned were issued is that they would simply replace other forms of currency outstanding, leaving as a net effect merely another increase in the already fantastically large excess reserves of the banks. But, even if such substitution did not occur, the addition of another $580,000,000 to the total outstanding currency circulation would still leave the "money in circulation" far smaller than it was at this time last year.

Those who are counting upon "inflation" immediately upon the launching of a program of silver subsidy would thus do well to check over the facts a little more carefully.

ULTIMATE EFFECT DISCOUNTED

Now as to the ultimate future. The establishment of the metallic monetary reserves of the country upon a basis of 25 percent silver and 75 percent gold would, according to Treasury estimates based upon present monetary gold stocks, require the purchase by the Government of something more than 1,300,000,000 ounces of silver. The facts already presented make it clear enough that, regardless of what the policy of the Treasury may be, it would probably take it at least 2 or 3 years to acquire so much silver. Let us, however, concede that it could accomplish this change in our metallic monetary reserves in the course of the next 2 years, and would issue silver certificates at the rate of $1.29 per ounce for all silver purchased. This would mean an addition to the volume of outstanding silver certificates amounting to $1,677,000,000, during the course of the next 2 years. No one need doubt that, unless for some other reason there was a great increase in hoarding, these silver certificates too would merely replace Federal Reserve notes or other forms of currency now outstanding so that, at the end of the period, we should have no more money in circulation than we have now. Of course member bank reserves, which today stand at about $3,700,000,000 and are vastly larger than are being used, would be substantially increased, but experience has shown, clearly enough, that mere excess reserves do not alone produce what most people call "inflation"—that is, enlargement of bank portfolios and rising prices.

Where in all this is there any support for the popular idea that silver legislation of the type now being urged would at once cause a sharp rise in commodity prices?

Of course it need hardly be added that nothing that has been said in the course of this discussion is to be construed as an argument for silver legislation. Far from it. There are many and weighty arguments against such action on the part of Congress and none in favor of it. What has been done in the course of this presentation is merely to give chapter and verse to show that even the "inflation argument" that is currently brought forward in support of silver legislation of the type proposed is fallacious. The real argument or reason behind the effort to "do something for silver" is what an American public man, advocating shipping legislation a generation ago, called "subsidy—just plain subsidy."

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, Dr. Edwin Walter Kemmerer is probably the best authority on the question of silver in the Orient. He made some remarks on the silver plan which were printed some days ago under the heading Economist Says Scheme Will Waste Millions and Weaken Confidence. I ask unanimous consent to have that article inserted in the RECORD.

KEMMERER ASSAILS SILVER PLAN—ECONOMIST SAYS SCHEME WILL WASTE MILLIONS AND WEAKEN CONFIDENCE

The administration's latest program of doing something more for silver is one more step down the inflation path, weakening confidence in the dollar and wasting millions of dollars in the purchase of useless, dead silver at a time when other nations are selling, not buying, and in a depression when there is a large Government deficit, declared Prof. Edwin Walter Kemmerer, Walker professor of international finance at Princeton and noted monetary authority, in an interview with a Sun reporter here today. Professor Kemmerer was on his way to speak on sound money in Indianapolis.

The President, Dr. Kemmerer said, should stop temporizing with the silverites and cease making compromises which get nowhere, declaring that the steps so far taken for silver had already gone too far and that further steps would be dangerous. Professor Kemmerer, in analyzing the latest silver bill, discussed it from three angles. First, from the standpoint of international agreement on broadening the monetary base; second, whether we need a broadening of that base; and, third, if we did need a broadening of the base, would silver do it? To all these Professor Kemmerer said the answer was no.

Professor Kemmerer observed that there was little interest outside the United States and little interest outside the silver group in the United States broadening the monetary base. Certainly there was no chance of enlisting the interest of the leading nations in any far-reaching international agreement. There has been no bimetallic country in the world since 1873, he pointed out, and the only silver-standard countries are China, Hong Kong, and Ethiopia. China, he explained, is looking forward to the gold standard as soon as political and economic conditions in the country will permit.

LITTLE OUTSIDE INTEREST

Emphasizing his point that there was little interest in the world, outside the silver group in the United States, in broadening the metallic base, Professor Kemmerer said:

"It is significant, in connection with the President's message of May 22 recommending broadening our monetary base by inclusion of 25-percent silver that, in response to a questionnaire recently sent to all members of the American Economic Association, the leading association of American scientific economists, 85 percent replied 'no' to the question: 'Do you favor an increase in the silver base of our currency by additional purchases of silver?' and 95 percent replied 'no' to the second question: 'Do you favor an increase in the silver base of our currency by bimetallism?'

As to the second point, does the country need a broadening of the monetary base, Professor Kemmerer said: "My answer is distinctly, 'No.'" The United States, he declared, now has virtually the same stock of gold it had in the boom times and "even then we had more than we needed." Devaluation of the dollar had changed the ratio of gold to other kinds of money, every old dollar of gold having become $1.69 in new dollars. Referring to the March 31 circulation statement of the Treasury, Dr. Kemmerer pointed out that there was actually today 40 percent more monetary gold in the country than there was of all kinds of money in circulation. In addition to this, he declared that the banks were bulging with unused funds, that excess reserves were 40 times what they were in 1929; that the banks had plenty of paper eligible for discount at the Federal Reserve banks and that the Federal Reserve banks themselves had high unused reserves. In addition the Treasury has large amounts of idle money.

"The country is just glutted with money", said Professor Kemmerer, "but the great trouble is it's not moving. It is not moving because of lack of confidence on the part of the business public in Washington."

Dr. Kemmerer referred to the study of world gold hoarding compiled by the Bank for International Settlements and observed that there was no dearth of gold, but that hoarding during periods of depression temporarily decreased monetary supplies, the metal coming out of hoarding in periods of prosperity. Emphasizing the lack of any shortage, Dr. Kemmerer pointed out that monetary gold in central banks and governments at the end of 1921 was $8,023,000,000 and at the end of 1932 was $10,297,000,000. For the 19 years 1913–32, he said, this world stock of monetary gold increased 144 percent or an annual average of 4.8 percent compared with an annual average increase in physical volume of basic commodities, as estimated by Dr. Carl Snyder, New York Federal Reserve Bank statistician, of 3.15 percent. In 1932 the world's annual production of gold was the largest up to that time in history and the 1933 production slightly exceeded that of 1932. "Under normal conditions", said Dr. Kemmerer, "there will be no need of the world's stock of monetary gold increasing as rapidly as the world's production of basic commodities or its physical volume of business, because of continually increasing economies in the use of gold."

The third point, if one wanted to broaden the base, would silver do it? Dr. Kemmerer said, was answered by the mention of the fact that the chief purpose of redemption of a money in gold was international payments, and since silver was a means of payment in few countries it would not generally be acceptable. Nor would there be any incentive for anybody to redeem silver certificates at the rate of $1 in certificates for about 35 cents worth of silver. Redemption in silver bullion would be inconvenient and unpopular. A reserve that is not actually used for redemption purposes and which does not thereby serve to adjust the supply of money to the changing demands of trade is dead and useless. Such is our silver reserve today held against the silver certificates. Such was the large silver bullion reserve held against the Sherman Treasury notes of 1890, which were largely responsible for the economic crisis of 1893 and such will be the silver reserves now being built up at great expense to the Government. This silver would merely pile up in the Treasury, dead. Dr. Kemmerer said:

"It is a rare occurrence for the public to present silver certificates in any considerable quantities for redemption in silver dollars—the exchange is nearly always in the other direction—and the privilege of redeeming a dollar silver certificate in a silver dollar worth say 35 to 40 cents gold, has no influence whatever in maintaining the gold value of that certificate and will have no such influence unless we inflate our currency to such an extent as to bring the gold value of the certificate down to approximately the gold value of the silver in the silver dollar."

UNITED STATES SHOULD SELL SILVER

With millions of dollars of dead silver on hand, the United States is undertaking to buy more, and buying when other countries are selling. This country, Dr. Kemmerer said, should be selling silver, as India is doing, rather than buying it.

The President, concluded Dr. Kemmerer, today should stand where President Cleveland stood in 1893. "What President Cleveland said then is peculiarly applicable to Congress today. 'The people of the United States', said Cleveland, 'are entitled to a sound and stable currency and to money recognized as such on every exchange and in every market in the world. Their Government has no right to injure them by financial experiments opposed to the policy and practice of other civilized States, nor is it justified in permitting an exaggerated and unreasonable reliance on our material strength and ability to jeopardize the soundness of the people's money.'"

Mr. FESS. On May 24, the leading editorial in the New York Times entitled "This Silver Bill and Others" is a very readable article written by a man who evidently knows the subject. I should like to have that editorial inserted in the RECORD.

THIS SILVER BILL AND OTHERS

Whatever is to be the result of the President's silver message and of the formulated "silver bill", it is already evident that the proposals actually please very few. Some members of the silver bloc recognize grudgingly that a concession has been made to them, but intimate that they have not got what they wanted. In business circles no enthusiasm has been shown for the President's plan, even as an inflation hypodermic. Cotton and wheat, the price of which has often risen temporarily at the idea of silver legislation, have made no response; silver itself has lost ground on the market.

Probably the community at large is merely bewildered. It certainly received little enlightenment from the Presidential message, which contained a good deal of unsupported assertion. Not the slightest evidence has appeared on any hand that the silver agitation, which in 1896 and 1878 stirred whole communities into intense political excitement, has reappeared. If one may judge by the cabled comments, the President's statement that at no time since 1878 have conditions been more favorable for international agreement on a mixed money standard causes only skepticism abroad.

In some respects the present episode has repeated similar past experience at Washington. It is a manifest attempt at political compromise, and in this strongly resembles the ill-fated Silver Purchase Act of the Harrison administration in 1890. That, too, was an era of political dissatisfaction and of rash political experiment; the White House then favored "doing something for silver" because it found that only thus could it insure passage of a higher tariff. It resembles the equally celebrated Silver Coinage Act of 1878 in that large-scale compulsory purchase of silver was on that occasion conceded with the purpose of heading off a congressional demand for outright free coinage of silver with a resultant unlimited increase in the currency.

Both of these older compromise silver acts worked badly. Both resulted eventually in business reaction, embarrassing outpour of gold from the United States. Both were abandoned afterward; none of the benefits promised to the American business situation were realized. As for the Government's own experience with those statutes, the Monetary Commission calculated in 1898 from the Treasury's statistics that the silver bought by the Government under the act of 1878 cost $308,279,000 and that purchases under the act of 1890 cost $155,931,000, which, with cost of transportation, footed up $465,274,000, whereas the market value of the silver thus acquired was $266,769,000 at the end of 1897, indicating loss on the unsuccessful operations of more than 42 percent.

It is doubtless true that loss or waste of public money, in amounts vastly beyond the modest calculations of the nineties, has no such effect nowadays on the public mind as it used to have. Nevertheless, what most impresses thoughtful citizens familiar with our financial history is the seeming lack of knowledge regarding what should be these well-known lessons of the past. Or is it perhaps that our public officials, if not the general public, have come to believe, as they did in 1929, that we are living now in a new era, in which old-time economic rule and precedent no longer apply?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, one of our recognized authorities on the silver question as well as the monetary question generally is Dr. Neil Carothers, of Lehigh University. He has submitted certain observations on the silver issue. He is professor of economics and director of the college of business administration at Lehigh University. His article appears in the American Bankers' Association Journal for May of this year on the subject "Incredible Silver." It is a very readable article, and I should like to have it inserted in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From American Bankers Association Journal, May 1934]

INCREDIBLE SILVER

(By Neil Carothers, professor of economics and director of the College of Business Administration, Lehigh University)

In all history there has never been anything like this so-called "silver issue." Consider one small detail only: The number of nations that use silver as basic money is a simple matter of known fact. It is reported in every almanac, in dozens of Government documents, in hundreds of books and articles. The Chinese are the only people who use silver, and the Chinese are about one-fifth of the world's population, and have about 2 percent of the world's trade.

What would you think if day after day the papers carried quotations from eminent men saying that buttermilk is the standard money of a third or a half of the world's population, and therefore that a rise in the price of buttermilk would revive the trade of the world? It happens that this absurdity would be a little nearer the truth than the same statement about silver. While neither buttermilk nor silver is used by any economically important part of the world, a rise in buttermilk prices would not affect international trade, but a drastic rise in silver prices would greatly injure China and to that small extent reduce world trade. When able and experienced currency experts are confused about silver, what chance is there for the masses of the people, who get their judgments on the issue from the Reverend Coughlin, Will Rogers, Raymond Moley, Senator Wheeler, Harry Elmer Barnes, and the chairman of the committee for the Nation?

Silver is not a currency issue; it is a political issue. It is not a monetary problem; it is a problem in propaganda. It is not a question of industry or trade; it is a question of the capacity of a democracy to govern itself. Books of a thousand pages have been written on the subject. To an audience of intelligent bankers the story can be told in a thousand words. It will be assumed that you already know that for a single nation bimetallism will not work; that no nation in the world has bimetallism; that the adoption of bimetallism at a ratio favorable to silver will immediately destroy the gold standard; and that international bimetallism is not now a possibility. And one word of warning. To understand the silver question it is necessary to understand the coinage history of this country. If you are not willing to learn this dull and dry page from your country's history, do not venture into this muddy field of sectionalism, propaganda, and political trickery. On the next page there is a brief outline of silver measures. If you do not know exactly what each of these measures did, keep off the radio and the printed page.

For a thousand years the world struggled with bimetallism. One at a time all the nations abandoned it as a failure—England, France, Germany, Russia, Japan, Argentina, Mexico, India, and all the rest, save China. In 1792 Jefferson and Hamilton established our coinage, with bimetallism at a ratio of 15 to 1, solely because at that time every other nation had the same system. It was a complete failure, so much so that in disgust President Jefferson suspended the coinage of the silver dollar in 1806, and its coinage was not again permitted for 30 years. From 1792 to 1834 this country depended almost entirely on bank notes and foreign coins.

In 1834 the ratio was changed to 16.002 to 1 and in 1837 to 15.988 to 1. This is the famous 16 to 1. At this ratio the silver in a dollar was worth, in the next 40 years, from $1.01 to $1.05, and silver could not be coined. The laws of 1834 and 1837 put this country completely on the gold standard. It has been on the gold standard ever since. Because of the gradual exhaustion of foreign coins and the negligible coinage of silver at our mints, the country was gradually starved of all small change. In 1853 Congress abolished bimetallism for all silver coins below the dollar and made them subsidiary, mere "tokens" like copper cents. Through a foolish oversight that later caused a national tragedy an incompetent Congress failed to take any action about the silver dollar, at the time a coinage curiosity, too clumsy to be made subsidiary. In 1869 two Treasury employees undertook a revision of all the scattered coinage laws. In the bill the absolutely unknown silver dollar was dropped from coinage. The bill was before Congress from 1869 to 1873. The dropping of the dollar was occasionally mentioned, but in all those years not one Member of Congress ever questioned it.

Thus we have three essential facts, that bimetallism never was in practical operation in this country, that from 1792 to 1934 our silver coinage has never been used as the Nation's basic money, and that the 16-to-1 ratio has never had any significance in American history. But when in an unguarded moment I turn on my radio on a Sunday afternoon I hear a roaring voice declaring that in 1873 English bankers sent $500,000 to Washington to bribe Congress to steal from the common people their cherished silver dollars.

One of the unhappiest events in American history occurred in 1874. The price of silver went down. There had been wild speculation in Nevada silver shares, both in and out of Congress. When the world market ratio went above 16 to 1 the silver interests made a discovery. It was that if the law of 1873 had not dropped the silver dollar, a smelting company could take 90 or 95 cents' worth of silver bullion to the mint and have it coined into a dollar. In other words, if they could by political manipulation restore that 16-to-1 ratio, which had never been in effect and was now a dishonest ratio that would destroy the gold standard and American finance, an unearned profit for silver miners could be obtained, for a little while, at the expense of the Nation's solvency. They set about getting this profit through politics, and for 60 years they have never relaxed the effort.

They have never quite achieved bimetallism at 16 to 1. But they have been very near to it. Failing in this attempt, they have managed to bludgeon out of the Government, at intervals, direct subsidies for silver. In every case they have done this under cover of war, depression, or political crisis. In 1878 they got the Bland-Allison Act. This was a simple measure. It merely ordered the Government to buy $24,000,000 to $48,000,000 of silver bullion annually and coin it into dollars. The amounts just equaled the probable output of the American mines. The Treasury flatly refused to buy more than the minimum amount. But the subsidy encouraged production. So in 1890 the Sherman Act contained a provision which, simply expressed, forced the Government to double its purchases.

It is essential to understand the nature of these dollars that were coined from this bullion. They were full legal tender and were coined at the old weight which made their ratio to gold 16 to 1. But the value of silver was falling steadily, and the actual value of the silver dollar was anywhere from 40 to 70 cents. The coins were thus debased and dishonored pieces, forced upon the people by a venal statute. The people would not have them. The population of the West accepted them for "patriotic" reasons, and the southern negroes, at that time unable to read, preferred them to notes. But the bulk of them poured back into the Treasury, alarming the Government. So a clever scheme was devised, to issue a warehouse receipt for each dollar, bury the dollar in the vaults, and pass the certificate out to the people. In this way the Government could get rid of them. If you have a dollar bill in your purse, it is a silver certificate. It entitles you to ownership of a useless and debased coin that has been lying in the dust of the Treasury vaults for 40 or 50 years.

Passing the dollars over to the people did not save the Treasury. The certificates inflated the currency and drove out an equal amount of gold. The financial world became frightened. In the fall of 1893 India went off the silver standard. A wild panic ensued in New York, developing into the tragic depression of 1893 to 1897. The Treasury narrowly escaped insolvency. In humiliation Congress repealed the Sherman Act.

But the silver interests were not through. They reopened the fight for bimetallism. The nonsense about "the crime of '73", Coin Harvey, and the Bryan campaigns were some of the results. By a narrow margin sanity prevailed. In 1900 Congress pledged this country to the gold standard. The adventure in subsidizing silver gave the country a panic and left as a legacy a liability for redemption of over 500 million dead and buried dollars, worth less than 50 cents apiece. This liability, a menace to Treasury solvency, is constantly referred to by the silver bloc as the "auxiliary silver reserve."

In 1918 war conditions drove the price of silver to unprecedented heights. England badly needed silver and bought 270 millions of the dollars and melted them. At one stroke we got rid of one-half of this useless and dangerous mass of dead silver. But in the confusion of war measures the Pittman Act was jammed through. It forced the Government to buy from American silver miners enough bullion to replace every ounce sold to England and to pay $1 per ounce for it. In the ensuing years, when silver was selling everywhere in the world for 65 cents an ounce, our Treasury was buying the metal at $1 and piling the dollars back in the vaults. The actual cash gift to the silver interests, out of taxes, was about $70,000,000. The Government liability recreated was somewhere between $100,000,000 and $150,000,000.

No opportunity for further plunder presented itself until the present depression. President Hoover was hounded mercilessly by the silver bloc, but he resisted them valiantly. Their opportunity came in 1933. So far they have accomplished the following:

(1) A provision permitting the payment of the allied debts in silver.

(2) A provision in the Thomas Act authorizing the President to restore bimetallism at any ratio he thinks best.

(3) A joint agreement between the United States and four other nations to buy a total of 35,000,000 ounces annually.

(4) An order by the President to buy 24,000,000 ounces as our share of the 35,000,000 at a price of 64½ cents an ounce, 21 cents above the market price, the amount just covering the annual output of American mines.

(5) A provision in the gold devaluation law permitting devaluation of the silver dollar in proportion to gold. In simple terms this is equivalent to authorizing a value of $1.66⅔ to $2 for a silver dollar worth, at the present time, even in terms of the devalued gold dollar, about 35 cents.

There is now before Congress an indescribable medley of bills attempting to do something more for silver. One of them calls for bimetallism at 16 to 1, another for the purchase of one and one-half billion ounces. The others attempt to tie up a subsidy for silver with some such issue as the bonus or foreign trade. All except the suicidal 16 to 1 proposal call for the coinage of more debased silver dollars to be piled in the vaults, and the issue of more certificates, mere fiat money, to the extent of the difference between the money value and the bullion value of the silver dollar. It is a question how long the poor old gold standard, already juggled, mutilated, and suspended, can stand the strain.

This is the story of silver in America, a story without parallel anywhere else in history.

This writer has a solution of the silver problem. He recommends that the Government call a conference of the silver interests and offer complete surrender. Ask them what sum in cash they will take to withdraw from politics—and give it to them. Whatever they ask, the bargain will be cheap at the price.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in conclusion, let me say that the money question will always be with us. I do not have any hope that there will ever be any solution which will be permitted to be considered as final, but all the world has come to the conclusion that we ought to have a medium of exchange that has the least variableness in its price. In the past gold has served, and in the present gold serves better than anything else. Silver has a greater variableness in its production and also in its price currents. The fact that more countries of the world have confidence in gold than in silver would, it seems to me, certainly make gold preferable to silver, because it has a greater value and the smallest compass. If we could use both under the form of bimetallism, that would be a very welcome possibility, but we simply cannot do that unless other nations agree with us on a ratio. It would be fatal to undertake it alone. We need go no further than a mere attempt to inaugurate such a plan in order that we may know the accuracy of that statement.

It is not enough to say that we have all our gold impounded, and therefore have no basis, and therefore silver will not drive out gold. That is not enough. Whatever be the purpose of those in authority today, we must get upon a proper exchange value basis. We have attempted it by stabilizing the dollar at 59 cents for the time being. We do not know how long that may continue. But the step must be taken, and will be taken before we get out of this depression, to fix a definite value of the dollar upon a gold basis. We will be compelled to do that if we are to get out of the depression. It has not as yet been done.

We are operating today with a rubber dollar. When we go on the gold basis, then business in the world will know on what basis contracts can be made and with what money contractors will be paid. Whatever be the purpose of the administration for the moment, we will be compelled to stabilize on the gold basis because that is the basis which other countries of the world will use. When we do that, then we should not disturb it by legislation of this character.

For that reason, among others, I cannot support the bill.

THE CHACO

[Mr. LONG addressed the Senate in continuation of the speech begun by him yesterday. His speech entire is as follows:]

Thursday, June 7, 1934

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a letter has been directed to me by the Bolivian Minister, and I suppose it was handed out to the newspapers before it was sent to me, in which he undertakes to assail some of the statements I made on the floor of the Senate last week.

In my statement to the Senate, I said that the Bolivian and Paraguayan Governments are now engaged in war as a result of the agitation for concessions granted by the Bolivian Government to the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey. I said that the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey had been granted a large number of concessions by the Bolivian Government on territory which was not owned by Bolivia, but which was owned by Paraguay, a territory which was adjudicated to Paraguay by the President of the United States when he acted as an arbiter between Argentina and Paraguay when the conflict in that country centered about the alliance of Brazil and Uruguay and Argentina against Paraguay.

Mr. President, I send to the desk, to form a part of my remarks, first, a list of the concessions which have been granted by the Bolivian Government to the Standard Oil Co., comprising 2,418,131.76 acres, and I ask that I be allowed to have this article translated in the RECORD, the translation to be inserted at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the territory to which I have just referred comes within the award I have mentioned.

I hold in my hand Moore's International Arbitration History, volume 2. On page 1943 there is contained the award made by Rutherford B. Hayes, and I read the award:

NOVEMBER 13, 1878.

Rutherford B. Hayes, President of the United States of America

To all to whom these presents may come, greeting:

Whereas, pursuant to the fourth article of the treaty of limits between the Argentine Republic and the Republic of Paraguay, of the 3d day of February eighteen hundred and seventy-sixth, it was stipulated that ownership in or right to the territory between the River Verde and the principal arm of the Pilcomayo River, including the city of Villa Occidental—

That was later changed to Villa Hayes, after this award—should be submitted to the definite decision of an arbitration; and

Whereas by the fifth article of the same instrument, the two high contracting parties agree to select the President of the United States of America as umpire to decide as to the right to possess the said above-described territory; and

Whereas the high contracting parties have, within the stipulated time, presented their invitation to the proposed umpire—

which was accepted by him, and have, also, duly presented their respective memoirs, and the documents, titles, maps, quotations, references, and all the antecedents which they judge favorable to their rights, as provided in the sixth and eighth articles of said treaty.

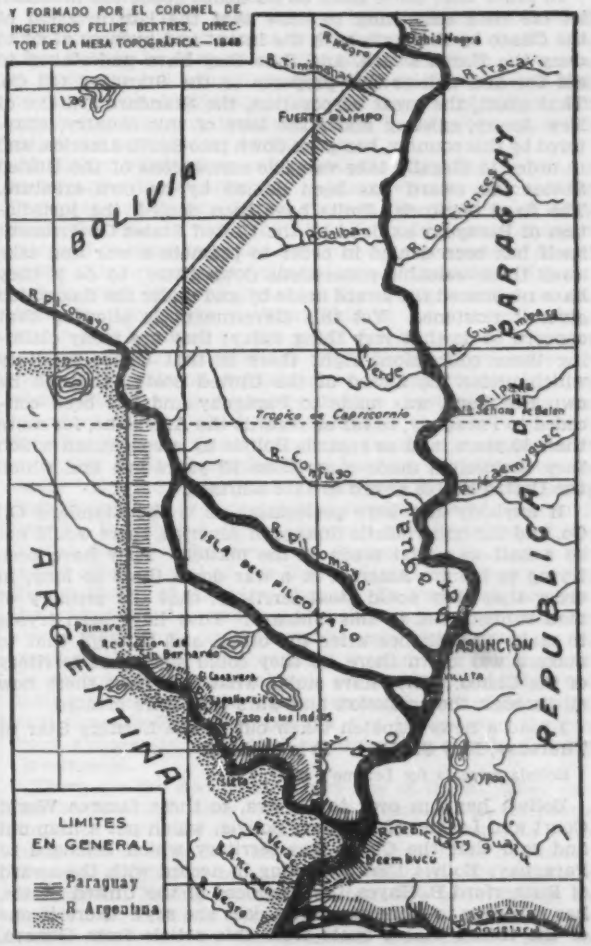
Now, therefore, be it know that I, Rutherford B. Hayes, President of the United States of America, having duly considered the said statements and the said exhibits, do hereby determine that the said Republic of Paraguay is legally and justly entitled to the said territory between the Pilcomayo and the Verde Rivers, and to the Villa Occidental, situated therein, and I, therefore, do hereby award to the said Republic of Paraguay the territory on the western bank of the river of that name between the Rio Verde and the main branch of the Pilcomayo, including Villa Occidental.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done, in triplicate, in the city of Washington, the twelfth day of November, in the year of our Lord, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and third.

R. B. HAYES.

By the President:
[SEAL]



WM. M. EVARTS,
Secretary of State.

Mr. President, the limits of this Chaco territory were therein stipulated, insofar as concerned the southern border, extending northward into the Chaco territory. There was no claimant to the northern part of the Chaco. That part lying between the Pilcomayo River and the Verde River was the only part of the territory that was in contest.

In order to show that this is a most outrageous aggression, that the Standard Oil Co. and the Republic of Bolivia are in the most intense bad faith, that this is a fraud from top to bottom, I present to the Senate a map of this territory, the official map as prepared by the Republic of Bolivia in the year 1848. I want Senators to bear me witness to this, that the award made as the result of the war by Argentina, Brazil, and Uruguay as against Paraguay was made in 1878, and that, as showing why Bolivia was not a party to that war, Bolivia had long before conceded Paraguay's claims as shown by the map Bolivia had caused to be prepared in 1848, and had made its whole preparation and its whole set-up of territory on that basis. Bolivia conceded to Paraguay, as outlined by this map, not only all of the Chaco, now claimed by Paraguay, but it conceded to Paraguay that part of the Chaco lying south of the Pilcomayo River, which was by the Hayes award allowed to the Republic of Argentina, and here is that map.

MAPA COROGRÁFICO
DE LA
REPÚBLICA DE BOLIVIA
CON LA TOPOGRAFÍA DE LAS FRONTERAS LIMÍTROFES
MANDADO LEVANTAR POR EL EXCMO. SR. PRESIDENTE JOSÉ BALLIVIÁN
Y FORMADO POR EL CORONEL DE INGENIEROS FELIPE BERTRES, DIRECTOR DE LA MESA TOPOGRÁFICA.—1848

Mr. LONG. I read this translation copied from a document:

To avoid any doubts from arising in this respect, the Bolivian Government made an express statement in a valuable document.

The President of the Republic, Don José Ballivián, had at the time entrusted Col. Felipe Nertres, director of the Topographic Bureau, with the elaboration of a map that would show the limits of Bolivia with the neighboring countries, in accordance with the position of the Bolivian Government in these matters.

Bertrés performed the work and published it in 1843 under the title "Chorographical Map of the Republic of Bolivia, with the Topography of the Limiting Borders, ordered drawn by His Excellency the President, Señor Ballivián." In it the limits between Paraguay and Bolivia are shown by a pink, straight line that, leaving Bahia Negra, follows a southwesterly direction until it meets the Pilcomayo River, a little above parallel 23 degrees.

This map, to which reference is made only as a means of proving irrefutably the official criterion of Bolivia regarding the riparian zone of the Paraguay River, placed this zone, as may be graphically seen in the following outline, integrally within Paraguayan jurisdiction.

This map, drawn by and for the Bolivian Government, shows, according to its own contentions, that they are invading territory and trying to give the Standard Oil Co., of America, jurisdiction over this territory, which it is shown not only by the Bolivian map belonged to the Paraguayan Government but which was, by the award of Rutherford B. Hayes, President of the United States, acting as the umpire, held within the territorial limits and bounds to the Paraguayan Government.

Nothing could be of greater evidence of the bad faith than the fact that the territory thus conceded and awarded has been invaded.

In order that there shall be no doubt about the mischief, let me read something to show that the late invasion of the Chaco by Bolivia is with the intent and purpose afoot to deny the Hayes award, and thus they have undertaken to act for and deliver this property to the Standard Oil Co. That giant, the great corporation, the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, existing under the laws of this country, chartered by this country, has gone down into South America, and in order to illegally take valuable concessions of the United States the award has been denied by its own creature. The fixed territorial limits have been denied, the jurisdiction of Paraguay as fixed by the United States Government itself has been denied in order to promote a war and take away those valuable concessions down there; to do it they have renounced the award made by and under the flag which gives it existence. Yet this Government is allowing that concern to do that very thing today; they are today claiming those concessions right there in that Chaco territory which under the award of the United States, through its own President, was made to Paraguay and has been conceded to Paraguay, so far as regards the Argentine, for more than 60 years, and as regards Bolivia by a concession which they themselves made more than 90 years ago and which the United States award of 1878 affirmed.

If anybody else were performing as is the Standard Oil Co. and the imperialistic finance of America, there would not be a half-way trial made of the matter. They have been trying to involve America in a war down there so long, in order that they could steal territory, that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. They have been trying to make one alliance after the other, and through that to make a war down there, so they could steal that territory of the Chaco. They have stolen what they have there now all through the confusion and wars that were created.

I read a news dispatch taken out of the Evening Star of Thursday, May 31, 1934. It is entitled:

Bolivia appeals for League's aid.

Bolivia has run over to Geneva, to these famous World Court and League of Nations; Bolivia, which put a map out and said that the Chaco was territory which belonged to Paraguay; Bolivia that was living in accord with the award of Rutherford B. Hayes, the President of the United States, has run over to Geneva. What does she say? Here is one of the things that I quote from this article from Geneva, May 31, 1934:

After a survey of the history of the Chaco War and a brief allusion to it as "a war of oil", the Bolivian representative said the fundamental claim of Bolivia is the right to possess the so-called "Hayes zone"—

The right of Bolivia, he said, is to possess this very territory that Rutherford B. Hayes awarded to the Republic of Paraguay. So here is the Standard Oil Co., of the United States, sailing under the title of Bolivia, putting one of their emissaries on a boat and skyrocketing him over to Geneva to renounce the award of the United States of America and to use armed force in invading that territory and taking it away from Paraguay. Why? Because Paraguay has only one-third the number of people there are in Bolivia, and, in addition, Bolivia has the power of finances of the Standard Oil Co., of America. I continue to quote:

The Bolivian representative said the fundamental claim of Bolivia is the right to possess the so-called "Hayes zone"—the arbitral division of the Chaco by President Hayes, of the United States, in 1879.

"Arbitral division of the Chaco"? They say in plain words "We are trying to take away this particular part of this territory which was given by the award of the President of the United States to Paraguay, and it is our right to possess it", so they say. I complete the reading:

Costa Durels declared Bolivia was not able to recognize the justice of President Hayes' decision and, at all events—

Just notice that. "We are not able", says he, "to recognize the award made by the President of the United States." They are not able to recognize it because the United States has a Standard Oil Co. sailing the Stars and Stripes; it has at times called upon the marines to go to the Tropics and shoot the "spigs" whenever the time has been that it would do them any good. Our soldiers have been there time after time, without any declaration of war to justify it, to maintain their concessions. The great Stars and Stripes of the United States are at one time used to maintain these concessions over great oil fields of that country, but, in order to do it, they have to renounce the laws and the treaties and the awards of the United States of the territory. Such a fraud cries out. The blood of murder stains their hands.

So they have this envoy sailing over to Geneva in order to have Geneva give some motion to justify their acts. They wish to have any kind of a superficial atmosphere about their crime, even a claim that there was an involvement, a colloquy, or a controversy, because they could not contend for it, Mr. President, on the basis of their own calculations and admissions and the awards they have either made, invoked, or conceded.

Costa Durels declared Bolivia was not able to recognize the justice of President Hayes' decision and, at all events, Bolivia insisted upon some compensatory award in connection with the allocation of various sections of the Chaco to Paraguay and Bolivia since, he contended, Bolivia had the right to the whole Grand Chaco.

Now, can you beat that? Can you beat that? Can you beat that, that Bolivia comes in and says "We have the right to the whole Chaco." We who did not claim it, we who sat there and saw a war fought over it between Argentina and Paragrauy, we who drew our own map 30 years before they went to war, not only conceding the Chaco that we now claim, but conceding the Chaco that Argentina won, all to Paraguay, we who cannot now dispute it—had no reason to dispute. And they are suddenly enlivened—by what? Who is it that calls and causes Bolivia to renounce the award of the United States? Who is it? It is the United States' own Standard Oil Co. which has gone to Bolivia for the concessions and to finance their war against Paraguay in order that they can destroy their valiant people.

There are only 850,000 Paraguayans alive, Mr. President. When the war started in about the 1870's there were about 1,250,000 Paraguayans. They fought against Brazil and Uruguay and Argentina until so many of the Paraguayan people were exterminated that only 270,000 individuals in that country were alive. Shades of the Spartans at Thermopylae! When they wound up that war there were only 270,000 Paraguayans left out of 1,250,000 Paraguayans, including all men, women, children, and infants.

And so the Paraguayans started again to build up that little country, with only a quarter of a million people straggling and left to live out of the entire one and a quarter million they had to start with. They entered into a treaty based upon the award made by the President of the United States and started out as a peaceful country.

There is a religious colony known as the "Mennonites", formerly located in the United States. Some of them moved up to Canada. Some wanted to locate at a place where they would be guaranteed freedom from compulsory military service. So they made an arrangement with Paraguay and moved into the Chaco. They moved into the Chaco under the title of the Paraguayan Government, and they are in the Chaco today.

It never was claimed by Bolivia that they had no right there; it never was claimed by Bolivia that she had anything to say about what they did with that territory insofar as concerned the grant that was made there to the Mennonites, but today they are right in there, bombing and undertaking to take the territory away from those people who went in there under that agreement.

I am going to send to the desk and ask to have printed at the conclusion of my remarks the entire article that appeared in the Washington Evening Star entitled "Bolivia appeals for League's aid."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be printed as requested.

Mr. LONG. I have the further information, Mr. President, that when the Hayes award was accepted, by a decree of May 18, 1879, 6 months after the award had been rendered and broadcast to the four winds, Paraguay appointed a commission to take possession of Villa Occidental, within the award, and soon Argentina gave up the town to the great rejoicing of Paraguay. Bolivia once more remained silent. There was Bolivia, with her confines established by her own map, a copy of which I have exhibited here on the floor of the Senate, and which I exhibit now, making no pretensions whatever in connection with the matter, but, on the contrary, to all intents and purposes, being a party consenting in advance.

The further data that I wish to submit to the Senate show that there has never been any interest displayed by Bolivia in developing the Chaco. Railroads have been extended in there from centers of Paraguay; they have built up settlements, they have built forts, and have extended transportation lines and facilities. That has all been done in this part of Paraguay, the Chaco. That has been going on with intensifying development there for a number of years, none of which activities were interfered with by Bolivia, and all of which was in accord with the Hayes award, all of which was in accordance with Bolivia's own confines, as shown here by the map of Bolivia itself.

I have a document here published under the authority of the Pan American organization, which represents all the Latin-American countries in Washington, an article which was published at Santiago de Chile in 1933, the article being based upon this book. The article says:

[Translation]

There is another document, emanating no less than from the Bolivian Foreign Office in 1843, which proves how Bolivia did not possess then, nor aspired to have, the territory of the Chaco Boreal. It is the memoire of the foreign office, submitted on April 23, 1843, by the Foreign Minister, M. de la Cruz Méndez, where it says (pp. 6-7): "Just as great is the need of entering into arrangements of similar nature with the Republic of Paraguay, also a neighbor. The Government intends to make a valuable acquisition in benefit of the future progress of the national commerce and industry, obtaining from the Government of the Republic of Paraguay, as well as from that of the Argentine Confederation and that of His Majesty the Emperor of Brazil, the recognition of the free navigation on the rivers that, originating in Bolivian territory and running through those states, empty their waters into the Atlantic; of the Paraguay and Parana Rivers, through the Plata River; and of the Mamoré, Ucayali, and Beni Rivers, through the Marañon or Amazon River.

"The Government does not doubt that those states will gladly accede to so just a demand, persuaded of the great benefit that they themselves will derive from the use of the rivers of this part of America and of the rich territory which they traverse."

This is a memoire published by the Foreign Minister of the Republic of Bolivia.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Will the Senator permit me to call his attention to a rule of the Senate that forbids a communication from a foreign government being presented here except through the State Department. That is one of the rules of our body.

Mr. LONG. This is not an official communication of a foreign government.

Mr. FESS. Then it is all right.

Mr. LONG. This is a statement issued by the Foreign Minister of Bolivia, which was a kind of unofficial sounding out of sentiment.

Mr. FESS. I thought it was a communication from a foreign government.

Mr. LONG. No; this is not such a communication. It has been published to a considerable extent. It was what might be called a semiofficial document, such as Japan issued the other day when she was announcing her doctrine.

Mr. FESS. I do not raise the point of order in view of the statement of the Senator.

Mr. LONG. It is none the less a semiofficial publication, and none the less it proves, beyond question of doubt, that after Bolivia in 1843 recognized this territory as belonging to Paraguay, following that, their foreign minister said that he was undertaking to negotiate for a right of ingress and egress over this very territory, which, by his own communication, he says belongs to Paraguay.

In other words, they were engaged, according to him, in undertaking to get an outlet to the navigable waters of the Paraguay and Parana Rivers through the territory of Paraguay, the title to which he himself, by his own statement, said had to come from the Paraguayan Government, as well as the title to egress over other rivers on toward the Atlantic had to come from the Brazilian Government and from the Argentine Government. That kind of communication was issued and heralded to the world for as long as 90 years, and still stood uncontested, until finally there were developed valuable oil deposits down in that territory, upon which discovery immediately Bolivia hastened there our Standard Oil Co., which had been able to make it possible for the Bolivian Government to be accommodated with enormous loans. Immediately it became "an American interest", it is a Standard Oil interest that is today stirring up that trouble and renouncing the award made of that territory by the United States through the President of the United States. The award of Rutherford B. Hayes was issued over the seal of the United States of America. The United States of America, through its President, accepted the appointment as umpire, and that appointment and the award made stood until it was brought into dispute as the result of the agitation fomented through the Standard Oil Co. undertaking to get valuable oil territory and other valuable concessions in the Chaco territory; they could not get such through Paraguay, because the Paraguayan Government, apparently, was not so corruptible as was the Bolivian Government.

There are the documents, every one of them. They cannot be disputed; they cannot be denied. The territorial limits are there set forth, awarded, and conceded to Paraguay. There is no way on earth for them to be questioned. There is nothing to be said except that, the United States Government having awarded the territory to Paraguay, the Bolivian Government recognized the award, as did the Argentine Government, the Brazilian Government, and the Uruguayan Government, which were also bound by that award. Bolivia has now repudiated that award, and fire and flame have burst upon the hemisphere of South America as the result of the criminal, murderous tactics of the Standard Oil Co. of the United States taking titles through Bolivia and thus making a scrap of paper out of the award made by the Government of the United States. That is all there is to it.

It is said that we will bar the sale of arms down there. There is only one way we will ever bar the Standard Oil Co. from having arms, and that is for the United States Government to seize this criminal, this culprit, this murderer, the Standard Oil Co. of which I am speaking; the throat of that outlaw we have christened should be seized while we say to them, "You domestic murderer, you foreign murderer, you international conspirator, you set of rapacious thieves and robbers, who have defied the award made under the flag of the United States and who claim existence under its laws, you thieves, you vandals on this continent, stay out of South America whenever the flag of the United States Government attests an award which must be flaunted to justify your aggression!

This Standard Oil Co. is financing the Chaco war, hoping to get two million four hundred and some odd thousand acres of territory which they are exploiting down there today, striving for the right to make their way across that land which has been awarded by the United States to Paraguay and conceded by the other interested countries to Paraguay. And the United States is standing "blissfully neutral" while its favored thief, its favored murderer, goes to take advantage of that poor little race of people, of whom there are but 850,000 left, with tens of thousands in their graves. "Blissfully neutral" is this country that awarded that territory to that valiant little race of people, who are now opposed by the finances and resources of this leading giant of criminality, rapacity, and murder! It has not been satisfied with the murder it has done in America; and God knows it has done enough in the United States. It has done enough of that kind of acts in the United States not to go down and involve us in South America. Take the record of this outfit in Colorado. That is black enough. Take its record in Texas, and that is black enough. Take its record in Louisiana, and that is black enough. Take its record in Pennsylvania, and that is black enough.

Take the record it made when it tied up the railroads of the United States of America by forcing an agreement of the railroads not only to give it a rebate on oil of its own which was hauled, but a rebate out of the oil shipped over the railroads by its competitors. That was black enough. But to allow it to assert its sovereignty under the flag of the United States and to take American finances and American sanction and go into a foreign land in order that it may renounce the awards made under the sovereignty of the United States is entirely too black a record to permit it to make. It is beyond the understanding of all sensible reason that it should be allowed to do that kind of thing in that territory today.

It can make a reply, using one of the Bolivian ministers to write a letter to me telling me that I do not understand why they are doing this and that, but here are their declarations in which they say they are not paying any attention to the Hayes award and that they are taking the very territory Hayes gave to Paraguay. No one need be misled. The facts are too clear to admit of any misunderstanding. The question is whether the United States Government will stand for such a flaunt or whether it will do what it ought to do—call its own culprits back and require that they cease intermeddling in foreign affairs.

[From the Washington Evening Star, May 31, 1934]

BOLIVIA APPEALS FOR LEAGUE'S AID—TWO ARTICLES OF COVENANT ARE INVOKED TO END WAR IN CHACO

GENEVA, May 31.—Bolivia appealed to the League of Nations under two articles of the Covenant today to end its war with Paraguay in the Chaco.

This development came at the end of a League Council meeting after representatives of both nations had spoken to the assembled members.

First, Costa Durels, Bolivian delegate, invoked article 13, whereby disputing nations may ask arbitration.

He was answered by Caballero Bedoya, Paraguayan representative, who said: "We cannot allow arbitration to be a snare for the nation's good faith."

Then Costa Durels appealed for a settlement of the dispute under article 15, which authorizes the Council to make recommendations for the settlement of disputes without the vote of the disputants.

AUTHORIZES REPORT

The latter article is a step preceding the possible application of military measures against an aggressor nation. It authorizes the Council to publish a report of the dispute.

If the Council unanimously agrees on its recommendations, the members of the League undertake that they will not go to war with any party to the dispute which complies with the recommendation.

The Bolivian representative announced that his nation was forced to resort to article 15, declaring that Paraguay had failed utterly to bring any hopeful contribution to a plan of settlement.

He said that, on the contrary, the Paraguayan representative had destroyed all hope of regulating the dispute under processes of mediation.

Earlier in the session he insisted that the proposed international arms embargo would mean the "finish" of Bolivia. He charged that Paraguay has a munitions factory.

Durels proposed that the war no longer be treated under the mediation article of the Covenant, but be passed to the arbitral clause, which means that if his demand is granted the dispute will automatically go to the World Court of Permanent Justice for settlement.

INSISTS ON INQUIRY

Attacking the proposed munitions embargo against the warring nations, which the United States has already approved, Durels insisted an inquiry to determine the responsibility for the war should be held first.

Paraguay, he said, in addition to having a munitions factory, would always be able to obtain arms and ammunition by river shipments, whereas Bolivia, isolated from any port, would be unable to do so.

As the session opened Bolivian communications charging that Paraguay was preparing for chemical warfare and that Bolivian prisoners were being murdered were distributed.

After a survey of the history of the Chaco War and a brief allusion to it as "a war of oil", the Bolivian representative said the fundamental claim of Bolivia is the right to possess the so-called "Hayes Zone"—the arbitral division of the Chaco by President Hayes of the United States in 1879.

INSISTS ON COMPENSATORY AWARD

Costa Durels declared Bolivia was not able to recognize the justice of President Hayes' decision and, at all events, Bolivia insisted upon some compensatory award in connection with the allocation of various sections of the Chaco to Paraguay and Bolivia since, he contended, Bolivia had the right to the whole Gran Chaco.

Caballero Bedoya, the Paraguayan representative, replied mildly, denying that Paraguay possessed a munitions factory or resources for the manufacture of war material.

"Paraguay", he asserted, "seeks an immediate and final settlement of the conflict, but, as Edouard Herriot (Vice Premier of France) said, we cannot allow arbitration to be a snare for the nation's good faith."

He added that Paraguay was unable to accept a treaty of peace unless it is accompanied by serious guarantees of solid measures of security.

EXHIBIT A

STANDARD OIL CO. INTERESTS IN BOLIVIA

At the request of this Bureau the Standard Oil Co. of Bolivia has furnished the following report of its activities:

According to clause 16 of the contract between the Standard Oil Co. of Bolivia and the Supreme Government, signed July 27, 1922, the company was obligated to drill, within 7 years, beginning on the date the contract was signed, one well for every 50,000 hectares of the concession, i.e., 20 wells for the 1,000,000 hectares, to which the company hoped to reduce the area of its concessions.

Accordingly, the company did consolidate the area of its concessions, drilling, before July 27, 1929, the 20 wells shown in the following table:

Name of well	Department	Province	Result
Bermejo No. 1	Tarija	Arce	Dry.
Bermejo No. 2	do	do	Oil.

Total, 21 wells.

Since July 1929 drilling has continued or been started on the following 9 wells:

Name of well	Department	Province	Result
Bermejo No. 7	Tarija	Arce	Drilling.
Bermejo No. 8	do	do	Do.

On June 30, 1930, the company concluded the steps for the conclusion, under the regimen of its contract, of all its concessions, under ownership, renouncing, to this effect, all of its property rights in favor of the State.

The total area of its parcels and concessions, governed by the contract of July 27, 1922, reaches 999,228 hectares, which, as will be seen, does not exceed the million fixed by the contract, the details being as follows:

ROADS

The company maintains constantly the main road from Yaculba to the north to its farthest operations. Besides, it has built first-class roads to all its settlements in Bermejo, Camatindi, Camiri, Machereti, Sanandita, etc.

Having located a new settlement in the Caigua Canyon, where drilling has been started on the first well, it was necessary to build an exceedingly difficult and costly road. The 9 kilometers of this road, from the main road that goes to Villa Montes, run through the chasm of Caigua and parallel to the same canyon.

There are 850 meters of tunnel, in all, to be built for its final conclusion.

Friday, June 8, 1934

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have been informed that the necessary authority has been granted for the printing of the map I presented yesterday, and, though I had intended to discuss the matter further today, in view of the desire to consider a motion in executive session, I will let the record stand as I have made it.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H.R. 8514. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey a part of the post-office site in San Antonio, Tex., to the city of San Antonio, Tex., for street purposes, in exchange for land for the benefit of the Government property (Rept. No. 1345); and

H.R. 8909. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to amend the contract for sale of post-office building and site at Findlay, Ohio (Rept. No. 1346).

ADDITIONAL BILL INTRODUCED

Mr. JOHNSON introduced a bill (S. 3772) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Arabella E. Bodkin", approved May 21, 1934, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

EXPENSES OF FORMULATING CLAIMS OF KIOWA, COMANCHE, AND APACHE INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 74) to authorize payment of expenses of formulating claims of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians of Oklahoma against the United States, and for other purposes, which was, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "appropriated" and insert "expended."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS COLUMBIA RIVER, OREG.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3502) authorizing the Oregon-Washington Bridge Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Oreg., which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, Guy Boyington, judge of the county court of Clatsop County, Oreg., and his successors in office, J. C. Ten Brook, mayor of the city of Astoria, Oreg., and his successors in office, and L. D. Williams, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners of Pacific County, Wash., and his successors in office, all as trustees, are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters', approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act; and said trustees shall own and hold said bridge in trust for Clatsop County, Oreg., Pacific County, Wash., and the city of Astoria, Oreg.; said trustees being known as and functioning as the Oregon-Washington Bridge Board of Trustees, and serving without compensation. Said board of trustees is hereby granted the right to assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon said board of trustees all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operation of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said board of trustees is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 25 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches; the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same; and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the Oregon-Washington Bridge board of trustees to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg."

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS COLUMBIA RIVER, WASH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3615) authorizing the county of Wahkiakum, a legal political subdivision of the State of Washington, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River between Puget Island and the mainland, Cathlamet, State of Washington, which was, on page 1, line 6, after the article "a" to insert "free highway."

Mr. DILL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF COMMUNICATIONS BY WIRE OR RADIO—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. DILL. I submit a conference report on Senate bill 3285, the communications bill, and ask that it lie on the table. I hope to call it up tomorrow.

(For conference report see House proceedings, p. 10969.)

FORT DOUGLAS MILITARY RESERVATION, UTAH

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 1337, being the bill (S. 3618) to grant a portion of the Fort Douglas Military Reservation to the University of Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3618) to grant a portion of the Fort Douglas Military Reservation to the University of Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the University of Utah the following-described land, lying within the United States Fort Douglas Military Reservation and adjacent to the site of said university in the State of Utah, namely: Beginning at the United States Government stone monument at the northeast corner of the University of Utah campus; thence running south along the west boundary of the United States Fort Douglas Military Reservation 2,632 feet, more or less, to the north line of Salt Lake City Reservoir site; thence east along said north line of said reservoir site 715 feet; thence in a southeasterly direction 480 feet, more or less, along the boundary of said reservoir site to the southeast corner of said reservoir site; thence east 100 feet; thence north on a line 965 feet from and parallel to the west boundary of the United States Fort Douglas Military Reservation 3,144 feet, more or less, to a point which is 965 feet east and 50 feet north of the point of beginning; thence west 1,120 feet to the west boundary of the United States Fort Douglas Military Reservation; thence south 50 feet; thence east 155 feet to the point of beginning.

SEC. 2. That any and all right, title, or interest which the United States now has in and to the above-described land, be, and the same hereby are, released and granted to and vested in the State of Utah and the University of Utah, and this act shall be deemed a conveyance in fee simple of the said land: Provided, That the State of Utah or the University of Utah shall improve the said property and maintain the same for university purposes, and not otherwise, and that in case said land shall be abandoned by the State or the University of Utah for said purposes the said land and all improvements thereon shall revert to the United States: Provided further, That the State of Utah or the University of Utah shall construct within 3 years and perpetually maintain a roadway along the eastern boundary of the above-described land hereby granted to the State of Utah and the University of Utah: Provided further, That the grant of said land shall in no manner carry with it any right or title in or to any portion of the waters of the Red Butte Canyon Creek: And provided further, That there is reserved to the United States the perpetual right to maintain, alter, rebuild, and enlarge the sewer which runs from the Fort Douglas Military Post across said tract of land, or to construct, and maintain a new sewer system across the same, should it be or become desirable to do so: And provided further, That there is reserved to Salt Lake City, a municipal corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Utah, a perpetual easement and right-of-way for the operation, maintenance, repair, and renewal of the conduit and pipe line as now constructed over and upon the Fort Douglas Military Reservation in said State, the same being connected with the water-supply system of the said city; and also for the construction, operation, maintenance, repair, and renewal of all valve houses which may be deemed necessary in connection with said pipe line: And provided further, That the University of Utah shall erect and maintain a suitable fence between the military reservation and the tract granted.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah make a brief statement as to the purpose of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the bill provides for granting to the University of Utah a strip of land of about a thousand feet which is no longer of use to the military reservation. The bill has the approval of the War Department, the Secretary of War, the Bureau of the Budget, and also has the approval of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC-PARK LANDS, SOUTH DAKOTA

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3741) to convey certain lands to the State of South Dakota for public-park purposes, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Whereas it has been the policy of the United States to set aside and maintain for public-park purposes areas of the public domain having striking and unusual scenic features and which are more valuable for park than commercial purposes; and

Whereas the State of South Dakota is the only State in the Union that has set aside and maintained as a public park an area which, in point of scenic beauty, unusual features, size, and development, compares favorably with the better class of national parks; and

Whereas said park contains 60,000 acres which are owned by the State of South Dakota, but which are exclusively devoted to the use and benefit of all the people of the United States without discrimination, but which are separated into two areas by intervening national-forest lands; and

Whereas the procurement of additional lands is necessary to consolidate and enlarge said park into an ideal park unit of approximately 100,000 acres, which the State of South Dakota agrees to maintain in perpetuity for public-park purposes; and

Whereas said State has expended $300,000 in the construction of highways through forest lands now attached to said park for game purposes without material contribution from the United States; and

Whereas division of administration and control is not conducive to a proper and ideal development of the area as a public playground and recreational region: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the conditions hereinafter set out there be, and is hereby, granted and conveyed to the State of South Dakota for public-park purposes the publicly owned forest and other lands included in the following Presidential proclamations, with certain exceptions hereinafter referred to, aggregating approximately 40,600 acres, to wit:

(a) The proclamation of the President of October 9, 1920 (41 Stat. 1805), made in pursuance of the act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat. 986), covering the following-described land:

In township 2 south, range 4 east, Black Hills meridian, all of those parts of sections 22 and 27 lying east of the right-of-way of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, north half section 35, sections 23, 24, 25, 26, and 36; in township 2 south, range 5 east, Black Hills meridian; south half sections 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, all of sections 13 to 33, inclusive; in township 2 south, range 6 east, Black Hills meridian; south half sections 7 and 20, southwest quarter section 21; west half sections 28 and 33; all of sections 18, 19, 29, 30, 31, and 32; in township 3 south, range 5 east, Black Hills meridian; sections 3, 4, 5, and 6.

(b) The proclamation of the President of January 8, 1925 (43 Stat. 1981), made in pursuance of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. 632), covering the following-described land:

East half section 13, township 2 south, range 4 east; south half sections 2, 3, 4, and 5, and the north half sections 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, township 2 south, range 5 east; north half section 7, section 8, south half section 9, section 16, section 17, north half section 20, north half and southeast quarter section 21, west half section 27, east half section 28, east half section 33, section 34, and west half section 35, township 2 south, range 6 east; north half section 1, township 3 south, range 4 east; southeast quarter southeast quarter section 21 south half section 22, north half north half section 27, township 3 south, range 5 east; sections 1, 2, 11, 12, 13, 14, 23, 24, 25, and 26, township 5 south, range 5 east all of the Black Hills meridian, except the east half of southwest quarter, and the southeast quarter of section 26, and south half of section 25, township 5 south, range 5 east; north half of section 7, north half of section 8, south half of section 9, all of section 16, and north half of section 21 township 2 south, range 6 east, Black Hills meridian.

(c) The proclamation of the President of January 14, 1929 (45 Stat. 2985), made in pursuance of the act of June 7, 1925 (43 Stat. 632), covering the following-described land:

South half section 21, north half north half section 28, township 3 south, range 5 east, Black Hills meridian.

(d) All the above-described lands, when conveyed, are to be and become a part of the enlarged Custer State Park in the State of South Dakota. The grant and conveyance herein provided for shall be conditioned upon (1) the perpetual use of all the lands herein conveyed for park purposes by the State of South Dakota; (2) the said State maintaining in perpetuity for park purposes not less than 100,000 acres to be comprised of the present Custer State Park and the lands herein conveyed: Provided, That this grant shall not include any land which on the date of the approval of this act is covered by any existing bona fide right or claim under the laws of the United States, unless and until such right or claim is relinquished or extinguished.

(e) The State of South Dakota shall have the right to acquire by contest, relinquishment, or purchase any valid mining or other claim now existing therein.

SEC. 2. That existing contracts entered into by the United States Forest Service for the cutting of timber upon the lands described in section 1 shall remain in full force and effect and shall be carried out and administered by said Service under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Timbering as carried on by the United States Forestry Service, under existing regulations, may be continued by the Department of Agriculture within the areas above described after such lands are formally transferred to the State of South Dakota, but no contract for the cutting of timber shall be made which will permit the removal of timber after the expiration of 7 years from effective date of this act: Provided, That the scenic beauty along highways and trails shall be preserved, and no timber adjacent thereto shall be cut without the consent of the State of South Dakota.

SEC. 3. That such special-use permits as are in force at the time of the actual transfer of the above-described lands to the State of South Dakota covering cabin sites upon which substantial improvements have been made shall continue in force so long as such sites shall be used by the permittees then occupying the same for the purposes and in the manner specified in such permits, subject to such reasonable annual fees, rules, and regulations as the State of South Dakota may impose.

SEC. 4. The United States reserves all coal, oil, gas, or other minerals in the lands conveyed under this act with the right, in case any of the conveyed lands are found by the Secretary of the Interior to be more valuable for minerals therein than for park purposes, to provide by special legislation for the disposition and extraction of the coal, oil, gas, or other minerals therein: Provided, That in passing such legislation due regard shall be had for the rights of the State of South Dakota in the premises.

SEC. 5. In the event of the failure on the part of the State of South Dakota to maintain the above-described lands for public-park purposes the title to the lands granted by this act shall revert to the United States, and the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior are hereby authorized to determine the facts and report to the President, who may then declare a forfeiture and reversion, whereupon such lands shall be restored to the public domain.

SEC. 6. That the State of South Dakota shall cut no timber in the Rushmore Reservation, within which the National Rushmore Memorial is located, but shall maintain the same in its natural state and in its present wilderness condition and protect it against forest fires. The Rushmore Reservation contains 1,420 acres and is described as follows:

In township 2 south, range 6 east, Black Hills meridian, the northwest quarter southeast quarter and north half southwest quarter section 8, the south half and the southwest quarter northwest quarter section 7, the northwest quarter and west half southwest quarter and northeast quarter southwest quarter and west half northeast quarter section 18, the west half northwest quarter and southwest quarter northeast quarter northwest quarter and northwest quarter southeast quarter northwest quarter section 19; in township 2 south, range 5 east, Black Hills meridian, the east half southeast quarter and southeast quarter northeast quarter section 12, the northeast quarter and north half southeast quarter and southeast quarter southeast quarter section 13 and east half northeast quarter section 24.

SEC. 7. That the grant and conveyance of the lands described herein from the United States to the State of South Dakota shall become effective when the conditions herein are accepted by the State of South Dakota. The President shall then issue a proclamation declaring that the conditions precedent herein required have been complied with, whereupon said conveyance shall be and become complete, subject to the conditions provided in this act.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] is detained from the Senate by illness.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are unavoidably detained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, this matter has assumed such a phase that I think it my duty, as Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, to review the facts and then let my colleagues decide whether or not this procedure is the proper one.

Some time in the late winter or early spring there was sent to me by the Secretary of Agriculture a joint resolution proposing the creation of the position of Under Secretary of Agriculture. It was accompanied by an explanation of why he wanted this additional official.

I will state here and now, so that it need not be repeated, that having been associated with that Department since I have been in the Senate—for 25 years—I did not think an Under Secretary was necessary. Of course, that was my own personal opinion, but I intended to submit the matter to my committee, as it was my duty to do. I not only did not think an Under Secretary was necessary but I did not like the idea of America aping certain procedures of Great Britain.

However, we had a vast accumulation of very important legislation. I called the committee together from time to time, as every member here will testify. The matter was not long delayed; but I had expressed myself unofficially to certain individuals who were interested, as I have already expressed myself here, to the effect that I did not think an Under Secretary was necessary, especially in view of the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture had informed me that the appropriation for that Department had been considerably decreased, and functions which theretofore had been discharged by it had been turned over to other departments. That statement confirmed my belief that an Under Secretary was not needed.

Before I had time to lay the proposal before my committee, however, unless I had precipitately done so, I found that it had been handed to another committee, I believe the Committee on Appropriations, and had been introduced as an amendment or a rider to a bill that was handled by this other, foreign committee, and that the bill had been passed and signed by the President before a single member of my committee, save one, knew a thing about the inclusion in the bill of this amendment.

Mr. President, the matter of creating the office of Under Secretary—who, according to the functions he was to discharge, was to be tantamount to another Secretary of Agriculure—was taken in charge and passed upon by another committee than the committee having jurisdiction of it, and passed the Senate at a time of which I was totally ignorant, and of which, to my astonishment, every member of my committee save one was ignorant, and the President signed it, and it became law. That, of course, was done with due respect to the Agricultural Committee. The most important function that could be granted to that committee was taken away from it, and the creation of this office was railroaded through by another committee, and it became law without those who are charged with that responsibility having an opportunity even to discuss it and advise this body as to whether it was wise to appoint an additional Secretary of Agriculture, with $2,500 per annum added to the salary of the man who since then has been nominated for the position.

I said nothing about that, except that I did state to some newspaper men that I proposed to introduce a joint resolution to repeal that part of the appropriation bill which was enacted without the knowledge or consent of the committee to which the subject matter rightfully and legally belonged.

That was number 1. I suspected then, and I was confirmed in my opinion later, that Mr. Tugwell would be the Under Secretary. His name was sent to the Senate. I was opposed to him then, and I am opposed to him now, and I proposed to use every effort that was legitimately within my power to keep him from being Under Secretary.

It is my duty here and now to say that I know nothing of Mr. Tugwell personally. I have met him only casually once or twice. I have no personal feeling toward him as a man. I do insist, however, that the Under Secretary and the Assistant Secretary and the others who are to discharge the administrative and executive functions of the Agricultural Department should be men of the soil, who understand the problems that confront the farmer, and which nobody except a practical farmer can understand.

Every man within the sound of my voice knows that a man who has been trained technically may be put where the machinery which has revolutionized our whole economic system is fabricated, and he may be so acquainted with the mechanism that he can step from the schoolroom into the actual shop and manipulate the machinery. Why? Because it is man-made, man-controlled, and man-managed.

I desire to state here that so far as Professor Tugwell's academic acquirements are concerned I congratulate him on his attainments. I am the last man to inveigh against academic training. I think it is essential.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SMITH. I do.

Mr. LONG. Before the Senator discusses Mr. Tugwell, I should like to ask him to state what has been done in the committee and what effort has been made to have the committee pass on the matter.

Mr. SMITH. I am coming to that. Just give me a little time. I shall discuss that. I desired first to clear myself of having any personal feeling toward Mr. Tugwell. Why should I have any such feeling? He has certain theories which he has voiced in his writings and in his books. I have no objection to Mr. Tugwell's entertaining them to his heart's content, and publishing them where he pleases, and holding on to them with the tenacity of a fanatic; but I do object to his trying them on those I represent.

I shall discuss, before I am through, the radical and irreconcilable difference between natural production and artificial production; but the name of Mr. Tugwell came before our committee. Of course, I was opposed to his confirmation. The fact is, I am opposed to the creation of the office of Under Secretary of Agriculture. We met more than a dozen times after the nomination was sent in, and not a member of the committee moved to take it up for confirmation.

Let me state that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] one morning suggested—merely suggested—that we consider Mr. Tugwell. I objected to the suggestion. It had more or less the appearance of a joke, the Senator from Montana seeming to take great pleasure in seeing the zeal with which I opposed even the suggestion.

Subsequent to that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] mentioned one morning the fact that perhaps we had better consider it. He did not make a motion. I think that was out of respect to the chairman and his feelings, but he did not make the motion, and I was delighted that he did not do so. Opposed to the nomination as I was, I would have been a stupid ass if I had encouraged members of my committee to do what I was trying to keep from being done. I have no apology to make. But had any member of my committee moved to take up the nomination I would have acceded. No such motion was made either in the committee or out of the committee.

I have not quite told all that happened. One day my good friend, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], out of the kindness of his heart and out of the abundance of his experience, related to me how he had passed through Gethsemane, but had held his temper and held his equanimity. Well, I was delighted to have that expression from my colleague, of whom I am very fond, but his experience, and the manner in which he met it, was GEORGE NORRIS'; my experience, and the manner in which I met it was E. D. SMITH'S, and I have met things in the way I have thought right, and I shall continue to follow that course.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. The Senator has stated what certain members of the committee have had to say in the committee room. I do not know whether what I have said was uttered in committee meeting or not; I think, however, it was. I do recall very definitely having stated to the chairman of the committee, and to some other members of the committee, that it was my view that Professor Tugwell should be brought before the committee and given a hearing, that the members of the commitee who had questions to ask should be allowed to propound them to him, and that he should be permitted to make any explanation which he had to make concerning any objections which might be interposed. I think I made that statement in the committee meetings.

I feel, however, in justice to the chairman of the committee, that it should now be stated that insofar as I know—and I believe I attended each and every one of the committee meetings—no motion was ever made by any member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to bring the nomination of Professor Tugwell up for action by that committee.

Mr. SMITH. I thank the Senator. I think I have done Mr. Tugwell a favor in not calling him in and having him questioned. That may be necessary, and I am perfectly willing, at any time when the members of my committee seriously ask me, to have this man brought before my committee and have him interrogated. I have not tried to keep the committee from considering the matter, except telling them that I was against it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. In that connection, I should like to ask the Senator whether he ever laid the nomination before the committee?

Mr. SMITH. No; I did not, because I was against the nomination. I would have been a fool to do it, and I did not do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator has been requested a great number of times to call the committee together for the purpose of considering the nomination. Is not that true?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the leader on our side says that he called my attention to that several times. With all the sincerity and honesty of my soul, I do not recall either him or any member of my committee asking me to do that thing.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, within the last week——

Mr. SMITH. Oh, I am coming to that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Within the last week I have asked the Senator from South Carolina repeatedly to convene the committee and give the committee an opportunity to pass on this nomination.

Mr. SMITH. Very well, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Prior to that time, from day to day, and frequently, I made the same request. Nothing whatever was done about it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I state here and now that the first intimation—and I swear to this statement if it be necessary, before my colleagues, to show how deeply I feel—the first intimation I had that this was a matter of serious interest was when the leader, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], called me over the telephone and asked me what we were doing with Mr. Tugwell. That caught me; it rather knocked me off my feet, for the reason that I am generally able to give a pretty straight answer, but I wondered in my mind what was happening. I did not know. I am not in the counsel of the gods enough to know what is going on, except to discharge my duty. He said to me then that he had mentioned it to me several times. I have no recollection that he did; perhaps he did. I know that he mentioned to me several times the agricultural amendments, and I discharged my duty about them to the fullest of my ability, feeling toward them pretty much as I felt toward Mr. Tugwell, but they were matters relating to the law, and the other was a matter relating to a person.

The Senator from Arkansas said to me over the telephone, "Now, if you do not do this, I am going to move to discharge the committee." I said, "Move to discharge the committee." That move has been made, in the face of the fact that the committee is charged with the responsibility, and not the leader. I did not mean to shut off the committee if they really, seriously, wanted this matter considered. We had not adjourned; the committee was still there in its integrity, ready at any time, under its chairman, to discuss this matter if any members of the committee had come and said to me, "Now, call the committee together, and give us a chance to vote. We want to vote."

Mr. LONG and Mr. McGILL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH. I yield first to the Senator from Louisiana, since he rose first.

Mr. LONG. I wish to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question, and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Arkansas.

It seems to me that the committee has been a little careless in its own councils about moving to take up the nomination. There are about 15 or 20 members of the committee, and it looks to me as though we should not get into a snarl and make Mr. Tugwell an innocent victim of something for which he is not responsible. It seems to me that if a majority of the committee desired to consider Mr. Tugwell's nomination, the chairman ought to be willing—and I am sure he is—to call the committee together and give the matter early consideration, and let us have a report on it. Otherwise, it seems as if we will get Mr. Tugwell, whether we are for or against him, into a rather unfortunate snarl.

I should like to make this suggestion. Apparently a majority of the committee desire to consider the Tugwell nomination. Perhaps they have been afraid to tell the chairman, or, rather, for some reason did not want to.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I hope there is no member of my committee afraid to approach me and talk to me about any question. I was pretty touchy about this matter.

Mr. LONG. I mean that in the sense that they are more or less embarrassed, though not fearing that the chairman would be aggressive toward them; but I was going to suggest that apparently there is a majority of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry who wish to consider the Tugwell case, and the chairman seems willing to consider it. There is no reason why the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry should be so nice among themselves. This is their duty; this is their responsibility. Let them now make it known to the chairman that they want a meeting and let the meeting be held. If they want to interrogate Mr. Tugwell, let them interrogate him. That ought to be a matter of hours only.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator will excuse me, let us cross that bridge when we get to it. What I am endeavoring to impress on my colleagues is that I have not had a real request from my committee to hold a meeting and pass on this nomination. Had members of the committee come to me in all seriousness and said, "We have discussed this matter, and it is of such importance that we want you to call the committee together", I would have been the last man to deny them that right. The truth of the matter is that I do not think they were any more enthusiastic to have the nomination considered than I was.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from South Carolina if one or more members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry request a meeting of that committee to consider the nomination of Mr. Tugwell, whether the Senator from South Carolina is ready to call a meeting of the committee for that purpose?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am not going to commit myself to anything until the Senate decides whether or not, upon the evidence which I have given of the manner in which my committee has been treated, both in the instance of creating the under secretaryship and then calling the nomination up under such conditions as it is now called up, such action should have been taken. Let us cross that bridge first. The Senate has heard me say and the committee knows that had any Senator at any time asked me seriously to consider this nomination and told me they wanted to vote on it, action would have been taken. Senators who know me and who have been associated with me, know that it would have been taken. But when it comes to a question of coercion like this—no; I will not answer that until we cross this bridge. Let us cross this bridge first.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. I am in hearty accord with what the Senator has had to say relative to the manner in which the measure which created this office was passed. I fail to understand why a measure creating an Under Secretary of Agriculture was not referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; why it was referred to some other committee, and I should be glad to be enlightened on the subject of why it was done.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The provision authorizing the creation of the Under Secretary of Agriculture was reported in the agricultural appropriation bill. It was sponsored by members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry who served on the subcommittee. The bill was in charge of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], who handled it with notable ability and promptness. There is nothing in that proceeding which should provoke resentment or even criticism on the part of Senators. It is pursuant to a practice which has prevailed for a long period in the Senate of the United States.

With respect to the statement of the Senator from South Carolina that no formal motion was made to take up this nomination in the committee, I wish to point out, with the indulgence of the Senator from South Carolina, that it is not, in my judgment, within the province of the chairman of a committee to suppress freedom of action on the part of the membership of his committee.

Mr. SMITH. Right there I challenge the implication in that statement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, this is my time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes, of course; the Senator can decline to yield.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator does not decline to yield, but I do not want the Senator from Arkansas to give the impression that I denied my committee the privilege of voting on that nomination.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH. I did not suppress freedom of action.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. During the last 3 weeks at least five members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry approached me and asked me to make an effort to get that nomination out of the committee. I will not quote at this time the statements which were made as a reason for that very extraordinary action.

I was about to say a moment ago that under the uniform precedents which prevail in the committees of the Senate, the chairman lays before the committee nominations which are submitted to the committee, and that gives the committee an opportunity for action.

The Senator's statement shows that he started out to do everything he could to prevent the confirmation of Dr. Tugwell. All I am asking is that the Senate be given the right which it ought to have had some time ago, to vote on Dr. Tugwell's nomination. If the committee shall be discharged we will have that opportunity. I am not willing, under the state of the record, that this nomination shall go to the committee now and that hearings shall be had until the end of the session soon to close, and Dr. Tugwell denied the right to a vote by the Senate. If the committee——

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the committee should take prompt action it would be all right.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator can make his speech in his own time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; and I thank the Senator for yielding. Perhaps I should not have trespassed on his time.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SMITH. In just 1 minute. The statement just made is all right, but I have laid the facts before the committee. The committee need not have denied itself the privilege of voting, had they come to me, as they went to the Senator from Arkansas. They did not come. I challenge any of them to say they did. They are all here.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield? If so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, without participating in any of the excitement or vehemence on either side of this question, as Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate I think perhaps I ought to say that the Appropriations Committee did not wittingly or at all usurp any of the functions of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. As a matter of fact, the Senate itself is responsible for the action taken, because only the Senate took the action. The effort to create this office was made on the floor of the Senate by means of an amendment to the agriculture appropriation bill, and the Senate itself voted to establish the position of Under Secretary at a given salary, as I recall. The Senator from Georgia, who was chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations dealing with the agricultural bill, offered the amendment on the floor of the Senate, and the Senate itself was responsible for the action and not the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am glad to have the situation cleared up; but the fact remains that the proposal did not go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and none of the members of my committee knew anything about it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. As everyone knows, I have the highest regard for the Senator from South Carolina, but the Senator will recall that I asked him to bring up Dr. Tugwell's nomination in the committee, and I hope the Senate will not get the impression that I was not serious when I asked the Senator to bring up the name of Dr. Tugwell. Candidly, I brought it up in the committee and asked that we have a meeting, and that we take up the name of Dr. Tugwell at that particular meeting. I have felt constantly that Dr. Tugwell was entitled to have a vote of the committee as to whether or not his nomination should be reported back favorably, and I so stated in the committee, and asked that the nomination be taken up and reported.

Mr. SMITH. We will discuss that also later. Members of the committee are here. It was never brought up in anything more or less than a joking manner.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me for the purpose of asking a question of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMITH. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] if it had been desired that the nomination of Tugwell be taken up in a meeting of the Committee on Agriculture, what was to prevent the Committee on Agriculture, if it was in favor of reporting out the nomination, taking up the subject and reporting out the nomination? What was to prevent it if the committee wanted to do so?

Mr. WHEELER. There was not anything to prevent any member of the committee from moving to take up the nomination of Dr. Tugwell. But I do not want the Senate to get the impression that members did not ask the chairman to take up the nomination. In deference to the Senator from South Carolina, whom we all respect, we did not move to take it up, but I asked him, and I know of one other member who asked him to take it up.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I want the Senator to be fair. It was in a vague and indefinite way that the remark was made. I call on other members of the committee who may be here to confirm that it was more or less in the way of "Are we going to?" "Will we do it?" There was no request made that we take up this nomination. There are other members of the committee here who can confirm the statement. The only three who mentioned it at all were the three I have named.

I want to repeat that I was opposed to the creation of the office of Under Secretary. I was opposed to the name that was sent in, which at the proper time I will discuss at length. I would have taken it up at any time that a Senator had said, "I think the time has come and I move that we proceed to the consideration of this nomination."

I desire to make a further statement in this connection. There were coming in to me from practically three-quarters of the States of the Union letters of protest against this nomination, and I had an idea that when I did call the committee together, having heard from all these people—and there are doubtless Members of the Senate who have heard from the people also—that I was going to lay the matter before the committee and say, "In the light of these protests what are you going to do?" The farmers were entitled to be heard from, and they were being heard from. If necessary I could bring here by the hundreds and thousands letters and telegrams demanding that one of their own people, one who understands the vexed problem of agriculture, should be in this position. I am not now going into that phase of the matter.

Mr. WHEELER. I have not anything further to say except that the Senator infers that other members of the committee who are present who would determine the facts as to whether I seriously brought up the name of Dr. Tugwell. I have no interest in Dr. Tugwell, but I will say frankly the Secretary of Agriculture spoke to me about it and I said to him that I would bring up the matter in the committee. I brought it up in the committee. I appreciated the fact that the chairman was bitter against it, but I asked that it be taken up. Other members, if I recall correctly, also suggested that they felt the name should be taken up in the committee. I specifically remember the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] mentioning it, and I think some others mentioned it.

Mr. SMITH. That was later.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no. It may be the Senator from South Carolina felt that I took it up in a facetious manner, but I can assure him that was not the case. I have always felt, and said, not only in the committee, but said to him privately, that the nomination ought to be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. SMITH. I admit, and I believe members of my committee will bear me out, that I really thought the Senator was speaking facetiously to see me blow up. [Laughter.] I so thought, and that is the truth. I thought he brought it up to see if he could not start something, and he did. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, I knew the Senator would blow up.

Mr. SMITH. Yes, and he did; but the Senator from Montana never made a motion, and no other member of the committee ever made a motion to take up the matter.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I simply want to say it seems to me that a Member of the Senate or of any other legislative body makes a poor mouth when he comes in and says that he tried to take up a matter, but the chairman would not permit it, when there had been a meeting at which the Senator had the right to make the motion, but at which he did not make the motion. It seems to me to be a very late time for a member of the committee to come in and say that the chairman would not let him take it up.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that I am not going to stand on the floor of the Senate and let the Senator from Missouri get away with anything of that kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Several Senators are on their feet. To whom does the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from Missouri cannot put me in that attitude.

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I simply desire to state that if, as a Member of the Committee, I desired to bring up a matter and did not make a motion to bring it up, I certainly would not later come to the floor of the Senate and claim that the chairman had prevented my having an opportunity to have the matter considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Five Senators are on their feet. To whom does the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. I object to Senators interrupting and making speeches while the Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I would have objected to that myself, but I was too modest. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. I am not complaining that the Senator gave me no opportunity to take up the nomination. I am simply answering the statement to say that I did take it up. I am not complaining because he did not take it up. If I had wanted to take it up I know I could have done it, and I had the intestinal stamina to have done it whether it was the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator may have that stamina, but he did not do it.

Mr. WHEELER. I did not want to do it.

Mr. CLARK. That is a complete answer.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized. He still has the floor.

Mr. SMITH. Senators have heard all the facts. Members of my committee are here. This is one of the few times in all the history of the Senate when a committee in charge of a nomination has been called upon to relinquish its handling of the matter and bring it to the floor of the Senate. My committee is composed of the peers of any man on this floor. They are charged with a duty which they are men enough to discharge at any time. There is not a man here who will rise and say that I have not treated every member of that committee, insofar as my treatment of him be paramount, with anything but the utmost respect.

The committee still exists and the chairman is still on the job. [Laughter.] At any time—not right now, no; but at any time after this boiling water subsides, after it gets cool, so far as I am concerned Senators may proceed by a simple request in the matter; but not one of them ever came to me with such a request.

Mr. President, I am here to say it is a serious matter even for the leader of our side of the Chamber to say, "Unless your committee acts I shall move to discharge it." If he had asked me to call the committee together and let him come before it, I should have been delighted to do that. If the committee or any number of the committee, yes, if any one member of the committee, had come and said, "I want to vote on this matter. I want you to call the committee together and let us vote on it", I would have called the committee together for that purpose.

I frankly admit that I did not think this under secretaryship ought to be created.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator from South Carolina will permit, in order that there may not be any misunderstanding in regard to the amendment to which the Senator has referred, I should like to say that I offered the amendment on the floor of the Senate under instructions from the Committee on Appropriations. It was not done surreptitiously, nor was there anything mysterious about it. It was done in the utmost good faith and in open session the amendment was read by the clerk and adopted by the Senate.

I certainly would be the last person here to infringe on the prerogatives of the Senator from South Carolina or his committee. I knew nothing about the pending bill to create an Under Secretary. Not being a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I had no opportunity to know. The Senator from South Carolina is a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, however, and he did have ample opportunity to know the amendment would be offered.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from South Carolina was never notified that they were going to meet or what they were going to consider when they did meet.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not have knowledge as to that, but to enable the subcommittee to have the benefit of the Senator's long experience on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I specifically requested the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations to notify the Senator, and was advised by the clerk that he not only sent the regular written notice to the Senator from South Carolina, but in addition he telephoned his office and advised him of the fact that the committee was meeting. He did not state that he talked to the Senator personally on the telephone, but that he had notified the Senator's office.

Mr. SMITH. That this specific proposal was coming up?

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, no; but that the subcommittee of which the Senator was a member would be meeting to hear matters relating to agricultural appropriations.

In addition to that, the hearings before the subcommittee, before which the Secretary of Agriculture appeared as a witness, were printed. The fact was widely heralded in the press of the land that the Secretary of Agriculture had appeared and requested provision for an Undersecretary of Agriculture, and the amendment was read on the floor by the clerk after committee action. By reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the day on which the amendment was read and adopted I find that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] was the last Senator who had made a statement upon the floor of the Senate before the amendment was read. He occupied the floor immediately prior to the time the amendment was read and adopted, and was the last Senator to address the Senate before its adoption.

I am not greatly concerned about the discharge of the committee or the confirmation of Mr. Tugwell, but I do wish to assure the Senator from South Carolina and all the Members of the Senate that there was nothing mysterious or sinister or in deviation from regular parliamentary procedure in the adoption of this amendment. If it offended the Senator from South Carolina, I deeply regret it, for I hold him in high esteem, and would not willingly offend him; but the amendment was offered in good faith, after consideration by the subcommittee of which the Senator from South Carolina was a member, and after consideration by the entire Committee on Appropriations, of which the Senator from South Carolina is a member when considerating the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH. I exonerate the Senator from Georgia, because he is a new man here, and does not understand all these things. [Laughter.] He will later on. How the amendment got into the bill I do not know. Under the miserable budget arrangement we have of having our committees all divided up until we do not know which is which, it is impossible for a man to keep up with all the divisions and subdivisions. I exonerate the Senator from Georgia, however, from any sinister motive. If I had been here when the amendment was offered and adopted, or if I had been advised that the thing was to be done, I certainly should have taken cognizance of it. Not a member of my committee, save one, knew anything about it. Neither did any of the press, so far as I know, because I had told them that I did not know what would become of the under secretaryship; and the first I knew about favorable action on the matter was after the bill was passed and the President had signed it. Then some of the press representatives said, "Well, what about this?" I replied, "Why, this is the first I have heard of it"; and I added, "I believe I will introduce a joint resolution repealing it."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH. I do.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from South Carolina has been here for some quarter of a century. Has it been the Senators' observation that it has been the practice of the Senate for the Appropriations Committee to report out an amendment obviously subject to a point of order, being new legislation on an appropriation bill, without giving notice to the chairman of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. GLASS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to preface my question with the same remark with which the Senator from Missouri prefaced his question. The Senator from South Carolina has been here for 25 years. During that time, does he recall an instance in the Agricultural Committee or any other committee where, when a nomination came to the Senate and was referred to the committee, the chairman of the committee did not lay the nomination before the committee?

Mr. SMITH. I have not charged my mind with it, but the Senator has such a case now.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; this is the first.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator has such a case now. I was opposed to the nomination, and did not lay it before the committee. They discussed it. They had every right and privilege in the world to deal with it if they were so enthusiastic about it. I should not have stood in the way.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I am chiefly interested in this discussion to acquit the Appropriations Committee of any irregularity.

I will say to the Senator from Missouri that the Appropriations Committee did not report this amendment. The amendment was offered on the floor of the Senate. I may say, however, that the likelihood, if not the certainty, is that the Appropriations Committee would have reported it had it not been subject to a point of order which would have involved a recommittal of the entire bill to the Appropriations Committee; but, as a matter of fact, there has been nothing irregular about the procedure. No under secretaryships of any department in Washington have been created except in this way. I have the facts before me.

The office of Under Secretary of the Treasury was created on an appropriation bill.

The office of Under Secretary of State was created on an appropriation bill.

Now the office of Under Secretary of Agriculture has been created on an appropriation bill.

There was nothing irregular in the procedure in respect to the Appropriations Committee and certainly no intention on the part of any member of the Appropriations Committee to be disrespectful to the Chairman of the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina further yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH. I do.

Mr. CLARK. I have no desire on earth to impugn the motives of the Appropriations Committee. I based my statement on the statement of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] that he offered this amendment himself on the floor of the Senate, as chairman of the subcommittee, by direction of the subcommittee and by direction of the Appropriations Committee, which amounts to making it a committee amendment.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Georgia was chairman of the subcommittee, and he was authorized by the committee to offer the amendment. He was not directed by the committee to do so. He was given leave by the committee to offer the amendment on the floor, with the understanding, of course, that no member of the committee who assented to that procedure would raise the point of order.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator, of course, is familiar, as I am, with the fact that when a committee authorizes a member in charge of a bill—whether he be a Member of the House or a Member of the Senate—to offer an amendment, it becomes in fact a committee amendment.

I desire to say before I sit down, in reference to what the Senator from Virginia said about the creation of the office of Under Secretary, that I well remember, as the Senator from Virginia does, when the proposition to create the Under Secretaryship of State, which was the first, was defeated by the unanimous vote of the Democrats in the House of Representatives, including the Senator from Virginia, with the addition of a number of very independent Republicans, so-called "insurgents" at that time, in the House.

The Senator says that every one of those under secretaryships has been created by a rider on an appropriation bill. I think that is true; and I think it would have been a fine thing if the point of order had been made against every one of them. I do not think the practice which has been followed of creating super under-Cabinet jobs by riders on appropriation bills which are subject to points of order should be taken as a precedent for such action as this.

Mr. GLASS. I agree with the Senator from Missouri. It never should have been done in that way, and I am not implying that I particularly care to vote for it. The fact is, I did not give the matter much consideration, and I do not know that I did vote for it, or was present when it was voted on, and I do not know that I am in favor of it now.

Mr. CLARK. I should like the Senator from Virginia to know that I am not undertaking to reflect on his committee.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, I know that.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have made my statement of facts. I am now going to leave with my colleagues the decision as to whether or not, in the light of all the facts my committee should be discharged from the further consideration of this nomination, which would be tantamount to saying that the members of the committee either have not the courage or have not the enthusiasm to come to their chairman and ask for a call of the committee. I say they have not done so.

I have stated the case. So far as I am individually concerned, every Senator here knows my position. I do not change it now. I had the feeling then which I have stated. I have it now. I believe that the farmers of the country are entitled to have this office filled by one who knows the problems of the farm.

There is not a man who, with the best academic training in the world, can ever make a success in agriculture without bitter experience. Academic training helps him to think logically, to think clearly, and equips him the better to meet and solve these problems; but the changing seasons of every year, and of every month of every year, make it impossible for any man to know the problems of the field who has not been closely identified with those problems.

In considering the scientific application of machinery, we must reflect that it is man-made, and a man can be trained to run it, but in the field, where the forces of nature shift and change, as they have done in the West, overwhelming it with a horrible disaster, we must have men familiar with nature's work. It has upset the calculation of every man in the West. The rain in my section is upsetting the calculation of everyone there. The man at the head must, by experience, know how to meet these changing conditions, and the problem is not the problem of the schoolroom; it is not the problem of the blowpipe and test tube and retort; it is the problem of the bitter, everyday experience in the field.

Thank God, we have men in this country who, despite the fact that they are still farmers, are capable of solving more perfectly these vexing problems than any academic experimenter.

Mr. President, I feel so profoundly and so deeply on this subject that I think it is an insult to the agriculturalists and the farmers of this country to put at the head of their affairs a man who has had no experience in their industry.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have been working in a subcommittee, and I have not been able to hear the Senator's argument. How long has this name been before the committee?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know; I think about 2 months.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the objection to the committee letting the Senate vote on it?

Mr. SMITH. Letting the Senate vote on it?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; voting on the nomination?

Mr. SMITH. I think the respect of the committee is involved in this situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has it been the purpose of the committee to deny the Senate an opportunity to vote on the nomination?

Mr. SMITH. The committee has not expressed its purpose, and I have given the committee every opportunity to express it. I have expressed mine.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that. [Laughter.] The question is whether a committee can hold a nomination, or whether it ought to hold a nomination, until Congress adjourns.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator was not here to hear the argument.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I could not be here.

Mr. SMITH. I exonerated the committee. It has not made any request, except incidentally, pro or con.

Mr. BARKLEY. Other committees have had before them nominations upon which they have made adverse reports.

Mr. SMITH. I know that, and this committee could at any time have requested a vote, and have gotten it. They did not do so. I was not stupid enough to say, "Please come on and let us report out something to which I am opposed." [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. What I am seeking is information to guide me with reference to my vote on the motion to discharge the committee.

Mr. SMITH. Whenever my committee seriously says, "Let us vote on this question", I will call them together and say, "Vote on it." They have not done that. But I do not want the vote taken immediately after this debate, because there is a sort of an odor attaching to it that I do not like.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not concerned with odors, but I am concerned about what it is the duty of the Members of the Senate to do with respect to a motion to discharge a committee which has had before it a nomination for 2 months without taking any action on it.

Mr. SMITH. The committee could have acted if it had wanted to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course it could have; but why did it not, one way or the other?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know. Ask the members of the committee; do not ask me.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not taking a poll of the committee. The Senator is the chairman of the committee, and I am trying in good faith to find out whether it is the deliberate purpose of the committee to prevent the Senate from voting on this nomination.

Mr. SMITH. I do not know what its deliberate purpose was. The members never expressed themselves to me, and we had half a dozen or a dozen meetings after the nomination was sent in. It was only incidentally referred to two or three times.

I repeat, had my committee, or any member thereof, said to me, "Now, let us take up this nomination; we want a vote on it, or I am going to move to call the committee together" and that he represented the four or five who said they went to the leader—if they had come to me and said that, I would have said, "I am awfully sorry, but I will call the committee together." They know I would have done that. There is not a member of my committee who does not know I would have done that. But they did not ask me, and I was tickled to death that they did not. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Pursuing the argument of the Senator from Kentucky, does the Senator from South Carolina know of any reason why, if the Committee on Agriculture should be discharged from the further consideration of this nomination, which has been before the committee for some time, the Committee on Finance should not be discharged from the further consideration of the bonus bill, which has been in the Committee on Finance for an equal time?

Mr. SMITH. I do not.

Mr. CLARK. That is a committee of which the Senator from Kentucky is a member.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is no reason why the Committee on Finance should not have been discharged from the consideration of the bonus bill if any Senator had risen in his place and moved that the committee be discharged, and the Senate given an opportunity to vote on it. We have reported that bill out of the committee, but adversely, and it is before the Senate for a vote. I have been a member of another committee which reported nominations adversely, but the Senate was given an opportunity to vote. I do not know of any reason why we should not have an opportunity to vote on this nomination, whether to confirm it or reject it. That is the point I am making, and apparently the only way to get a vote is to discharge the committee——

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. SMITH. I do not intend that the Senator from Kentucky or anyone else shall becloud this issue. This matter has been in the hands of the committee.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the junior Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SMITH. I do not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. SMITH. I do not intend that this matter shall be beclouded. The first time I knew that there was any serious pressure was when the leader called me up and said, "Report it out or we will move to discharge the committee." That was the first time I realized that somewhere, from some source, there was a serious pressure to have this done. I conferred then with members of my committee, and I told them I did not like to yield on anything like that. But the members of the committee could even then have asked that the committee be called together, and they did not do it.

I yield now to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. As I understand the statement of the Senator from South Carolina, this nomination has never been before the committee, technically speaking. It was referred to the chairman of the committee, who boldly says that he did not place it before the committee; so I doubt whether any member of the committee ever had a right to take it up. The members might have called for it to be placed before the committee, but it has been in the hands of the chairman alone, as I understand his statement, all this time.

Mr. SMITH. No; it has been right there on the desk. Every member of the committee knew it was there.

Mr. LOGAN. Was it ever reported to the committee formally?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; it was reported by my secretary.

Mr. LOGAN. Placed before them?

Mr. SMITH. It was there; oh, yes. Do not get off on technicalities. [Laughter.] The committee understood it was there.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Kentucky is entirely erroneous in his construction. When a nomination is sent in, is it not required that the chairman of the committee place it before the committee. Any member of the committee can call it up at any time he pleases.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SMITH. Not now. I want to get through with this mess.

I have laid the facts before the Senate. I and my committee are indicted for dereliction of duty. I conceived it to be my duty, representing the people of this country, to fight this nomination; but I also have recognized that it was my duty, if the committee asked for an opportunity, to give them a chance to vote. They have not asked for that.

Now comes this motion, that the committee be discharged, without them stating their position.

Mr. President, at the proper time I may have more to say, but now I am yielding the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I think I can claim to have been the most silent Member of this body. I have spoken and consumed exactly 3 minutes of the time of the Senate since the day I was sworn in. I had hoped that this distinction, or perhaps lack of distinction, could have continued throughout this present session.

It was my purpose, Mr. President, to vote for the confirmation of Dr. Tugwell. In fact, I had communicated this intention to him, and as an honorable man I rise today on the floor of the Senate to state to the Members of the Senate the reasons why I will cast the vote I am about to cast in the light of developments which have occurred since I made that committal.

I believe that the President of the United States should have wide latitude in the selection of his official family. I believe that the Senate of the United States should confirm the nominations of the President unless there is some grave reason to the contrary.

As Governor of the State of Virginia it was my privilege to inaugurate amendments to the constitution which gave to the Governor of that State the power to appoint his official family subject to the confirmation of the senate. I believe in that principle.

Mr. President, I personally think that a farmer should be appointed as Under Secretary of Agriculture, because he will act, in many instances, for the Secretary himself. I believe that a man should be appointed who has gone through the trials and tribulations that every farmer must go through who has seen his crops destroyed by the elements, who has had his hands discolored by working in the soil. But, Mr. President, I am willing to yield my opinion on that to the President of the United State. I am not voting as I will vote because Dr. Tugwell is a professor and because perhaps he has never planted a blade of grass. I am voting as I will vote because of my belief, as I will endeavor to show the Senate, that he has not the proper conceptions of the principles of our Government.

Mr. President, on June 1 there appeared an interview in one of the Washington papers in which, discussing certain amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, Dr. Tugwell is quoted verbatim as follows:

> These amendments are necessary to * * * permit us to continue what we have already been doing. If we should get a set-back in court we would have to stop doing certain things under present circumstances.

Mr. President, this is no more than a bold confession of the Secretary of Agriculture that Dr. Tugwell and others in the Agriculture Department have deliberately usurped the power of the Congress of the United States and now are coming before this body and asking us to validate the illegal acts that have already been performed by them.

On the same day, Mr. President, I wrote this letter to Dr. Tugwell. That is June 1, one week ago today. The letter is as follows:

> You are reported in the press this morning as saying that the pending amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act are necessary to authorize the Department of Agriculture to continue what they are already doing. I would appreciate if you would advise me if the quotation on page 29 of the Washington Herald of today is correct.

And to this day, although that letter was written one week ago, Dr. Tugwell has not done me the courtesy to reply. This morning I got in communication with his office and again requested that he make a reply to this letter.

Mr. President, I am not concerned so much in this nomination about the political theses which were written by Dr. Tugwell in the years before he became a responsible official of this Government. I am not somewhat concerned about it because I know that he has a brilliant and fertile mind, because I know that he likes to write, and perhaps many of the things that he then said he himself would not sustain today. And I further know that the sobering influence of responsibility that is placed upon the shoulders of a public official will often change his mind.

But I am concerned, Mr. President, as to his attitude with respect to the fundamental principles of our Government, as shown by his official acts since he became a paid employee of this Government.

I do not profess to be a student of the Constitution of the United States. I am a business man and not a lawyer, but as a layman my conception of the foundation stone upon which this great representative democracy of ours rests, this democracy bequeathed to us as a precious heritage by the blood and labor of those great men who gave us the form of government we now enjoy—my conception is that the foundation stone is that this Government is divided into three branches, each independent of the other—the executive, the judicial, and the legislative—and whenever the executive branch attempts to usurp the authority of the legislative branch, and whenever the judicial branch—and pray God that will never occur—accepts dictation or coercion from either the executive or the legislative branch, then I say the end of this representative government would have begun.

Dr. Tugwell was one of those who came before the people of this country—also the Secretary of Agriculture—and said that certain pending amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act were merely clarifying when, as a matter of fact, and as I will show when the debate comes on these amendments, these amendments enormously increase the power of the Secretary of Agriculture and, if adopted in their present form, will make him the absolute czar and dictator of the farmers of this country. Yet Dr. Tugwell and the Secretary of Agriculture told the Congress of the United States and told the people of this country that these amendments were merely clarifying and did not increase their present authority.

Just for a moment I will ask the indulgence of the Senate to speak briefly on the effects of these amendments, because this question that I am discussing involves the good faith of Dr. Tugwell and the Secretary of Agriculture in saying to the people of this land that they are asking for clarifying amendments, when in fact these amendments confer great additional authority upon the Secretary of Agriculture.

I think, Members of the Senate, that we, the legislative branch of this Government, should insist upon absolute frankness and candor from the departmental heads of our Government, because in the great mass of legislation that comes before us it is impossible for us to carefully analyze the effects of the different bills that are prepared by the departments of our Government; and we should insist that they take us into their confidence; and when that confidence is abused, as it has been in this instance, then we should rebuke those who are guilty of such deceit.

Mr. President, one of these "clarifying" amendments, as claimed by the Secretary of Agriculture and Dr. Tugwell, gives to the Secretary of Agriculture the absolute authority over every blade of wheat, over every chicken and over every turkey on any farm that receives a benefit payment from the United States Government; even though the benefit payment may be only $50, yet the Secretary of Agriculture can go on that farm, if it is a thousand acres, and tell that farmer exactly what he should raise, down to the chickens and the turkeys and the cows that he may have. Yet they say to us that that is a "clarifying" amendment.

Another amendment provides and gives the power to the Secretary of Agriculture to license a producer—something that has never before been contemplated in any legislation that has been presented to this body—and gives the right to the Secretary of Agriculture to deny a license to a man who processes or distributes the product that he raises on his farm, and processing means preparation for market.

Therefore, if one should pack a bushel of strawberries and ship that bushel of strawberries in interstate commerce, the Secretary of Agriculture would have the right to either give or deny a license.

Members of the Senate, the Secretary of Agriculture says that he does not intend to use this great authority. I submit that whenever authority is given to a department of this Government, that sooner or later it is used. And we, the people's representatives, should only vote to give authority to a department of the Government on the assumption that the authority will be used to the fullest extent.

It further provides that upon the vote of two-thirds of the farmers producing a particular crop, a quota system may be established as to how much each farmer may produce of that product.

Then an entirely new section was included providing, in defiance of the fourth amendment to the Constitution, that the private papers of farmers shall be made available to officials of the Department of Agriculture.

Another new amendment instructs the District Courts of the United States to invoke the power of injunction—the greatest power that any government can have—when the Secretary of Agriculture so decreed it, in order that a farmer may not ship his products in interstate commerce, and that right would be taken away from him by the United States District Court.

Speaking again of the Constitution—and I again say I do not profess to be a student of it—in the United States of America, which after all is merely a confederation of States, the original conception was that there would be free commerce and free intercourse between the States of the Union, and that the power over interstate commerce would only be invoked by the Federal and parent Government when one shipped to another State something that would be injurious. But in this instance we find the power asked by the Secretary of Agriculture to invoke the interstate-commerce power with reference to articles which are not only not injurious but are articles of food which are absolutely essential to our existence.

Mr. President, I am not going to consider further at this time the amendments proposed to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. I hope the Democratic leadership of the Senate will bring the amendments before the body, so we may have a full and frank discussion before the session adjourns, and I shall then ask the privilege of saying more than I have said at this time.

Mr. President, I am going to vote against the discharge of the committee, but I shall vote against it on different grounds than those suggested by my distinguished colleague, the Senator from South Carolina. I shall vote against the discharge of the committee because I want the chairman to call a meeting of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, then to call Dr. Tugwell before the committee, and to permit me to ask him why he has not answered the letter I have sent him, and to require him to answer other interrogatories which will be submitted to him by other Members of the Senate. That is the only way we can get a direct expression from Dr. Tugwell under his sworn oath. I want it to be with the understanding, I hope, that the chairman of the committee will call Dr. Tugwell before the committee and permit those questions to be asked, and then report the matter to the Senate.

Mr. President, I do not approve of smothering this nomination in the committee. Of course, I understand the position taken by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina. He is opposed to the nomination, yet no other member of the committee who favored the nomination made a motion to report it out, and certainly it was not incumbent upon him to make such a motion. As a Member of the Senate I want the matter to be thoroughly discussed. I want it brought before the Senate and then to let us vote in the light of the information which we will have when these questions are asked of Dr. Tugwell.

I do not understand why the distinguished leader on this side of the Chamber is opposed to having the nomination discussed and having open hearings with respect to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BYRD. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not know how the Senator from Virginia justifies that declaration. I have been trying for a long time to get consideration of the nomination. It would have pleased me had the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry given opportunity for hearings on the nomination. But it was perfectly apparent to me that the chairman had made up his mind in his opposition to Tugwell that no hearings were to be had. The only way to get action was to make the motion I have made.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. At any time any member of my committee, during the time this nomination was before my committee, had moved that we take it up and have a hearing, I should have been delighted to have done it. I may state, in order that we can expedite matters, that I should be delighted to call the committee together and have one day at least when Senators may interrogate him. I should be willing to sit there all day for that purpose. That is a fair proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I inquire of the Senator from South Carolina whether he will agree that the nomination may be reported by his committee after such hearings as the committee may desire to have tomorrow?

Mr. SMITH. I will agree that my committee may meet and take such action as it sees fit. I have never coerced any member of the committee. I have never denied any member any freedom of action. The committee may take such action as it sees fit, provided it is understood we will call Dr. Tugwell before the committee and give Members of the Senate the right to interrogate him to determine whether he is fit to discharge the duty of the office or not. Then the committee can immediately take a vote, and whatever action the committee may take I, as chairman, will report it to the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair will hold that if a Senator shall yield more than twice he loses the floor. He may yield for a question and for nothing else.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BYRD. I yield if I do not lose the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. I am interested in the address of the Senator from Virginia and his discussion of certain alleged documents called "amendments." I take the word "amendments" to refer to amendments of legislation or to legislation. The construction of the able Senator from Virginia as to the meaning of amendments becomes exceedingly interesting to one who represents a great agricultural section such as I and my honorable colleague do. I ask the Senator from Virginia, whence came the amendments, if they are amendments to legislation in this body carrying such implications as the honorable Senator from Virginia suggests. May I ask for information, whence come the amendments, by whom offered, and from where?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act were prepared by the Department of Agriculture and were introduced in the form of a bill by the Senator from South Carolina by request, and the bill is now pending on the calendar of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator for the information he accords me.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I may conclude my remarks by saying that all I want is information as to Dr. Tugwell's attitude toward what I conceive to be the fundamental principles of our Government.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I rise to ask a question. Is the Senator a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. BYRD. No; I am not.

Mr. GORE. I have in my hand an alleged address of Dr. Tugwell in which he is reported as saying, in effect, that the Constitution and statutes of the United States as they now exist will have to be dispensed with; in which he is reported as saying that business as it is now conducted will be required to disappear; in which he says in effect that the States will have to be abandoned as effective instruments of government before planned economy can be installed, and that the developments of a hundred years must be undone. He says that "All three of these wholesale changes are required by even a limited acceptance of the planning idea."

I intended to ask the Senator from Virginia whether it is his purpose, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to interrogate Dr. Tugwell on those points. I should not care to do him an injustice. The report of the speech I have seems to be authentic. If the Senator from Virginia will permit, I will ask the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] if that comes within the scope of his intended investigation.

Mr. SMITH. Yes, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. BYRD. I do.

Mr. GORE. I was asking whether it was the purpose of the Senator or the members of the committee to interrogate Dr. Tugwell in regard to these reported statements, because I do not wish to vote in the dark. I do not wish to subject him to any misrepresentations; but I do wish to know whether Dr. Tugwell, if confirmed, could take the oath required of him to support and defend the Constitution of the United States; and in taking the oath could do so in the language of the oath itself, "without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I think it is rather serious for the Senator to make a statement of that kind without placing in the RECORD the speech to which he refers.

Mr. GORE. I shall be glad to do so. I agree with the Senator that the speech should be allowed to speak for itself, and I favor an investigation because I feel that Dr. Tugwell should be allowed to speak for himself.

Mr. BLACK. If that is a speech that was made by Mr. Tugwell, I think it should be placed in the RECORD, and a statement as to where it comes from. I have read Mr. Tugwell's books; I have read his speeches. I have never read any speech or any book which indicated any such thing as the Senator says.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the speech to which I have referred, delivered before the American Economic Association in this city in December 1931, before Dr. Tugwell had been stabilized by responsibility.

Mr. BLACK. I have read that speech, and I do not interpret it as the Senator does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CONNALLY. I assume that it will appear at the end of the address of the Senator from Virginia, not in the middle of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. Is there objection to inserting in the RECORD the purported speech referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears no objection. The speech will appear at the end of the remarks of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of making clear my position in withdrawing a committal that I had made to support the nomination of Dr. Tugwell. I desire to say here that I do not wish to do him the slightest injustice. If he can prove to my satisfaction that he believes in the oath I took when I became a Member of this body—namely, to sustain the Constitution of the United States—and if he will deny the statement which I have inquired about, namely, that he has usurped the authority of Congress, and taken upon the Department of Agriculture to do things not permitted by Congress, and is now coming before this body asking us to validate illegal acts of his Department—if he can convince me of that, I will rise on this floor and make an apology to him, and vote for his confirmation. If he cannot convince me of that, Mr. President, I intend to vote against him and oppose him with all the vigor I can, because I think he wants to destroy those things which I would die to preserve.

(The following is the speech referred to by Mr. GORE and ordered to be printed in the RECORD at the end of Mr. BYRD's remarks:)

THE PRINCIPLE OF PLANNING AND THE INSTITUTION OF LAISSEZ FAIRE

By Rexford Guy Tugwell, Columbia University

There can be no secure peace in the world so long as its peoples are divided among absolute sovereignties. The divergencies of purpose among them will always cause irritations which sometimes must fail to stop short of the ultimate compromise of war. Sovereign nationalities function in a wider field than industries do; there is, for all that, a useful analogy between them. For industry is also organized in independent units which possess many of the attributes of nations. They have a purpose which they pursue with zeal and foresight; they may pursue it in all essentials, and provided they can reach agreement quietly among themselves, with no governance save of their own making. These purposes being exclusive and single minded, and being carried out at the expense of competitors, frequently involve recourse to ultimate measures. These begin in the subtle fashions of diplomacy but often end in appeals to force.[1] All this is of the essence of laissez faire.

War in industry is just as ruinous as war among nations, and equally strenuous measures are taken to prevent it. The difficulty in the one case is precisely the difficulty in the other; so long as nations and industries are organized for conflict, wars will follow, and no elaboration of machinery for compromise will be altogether successful. There are vast, well-meaning endeavors being made in both fields which must necessarily be wasted. The disasters of recent years have caused us to ask again how the ancient paradox of business—conflict to produce order—can be resolved; the interest of the liberals among us in the institutions of the new Russia of the Soviets, spreading gradually among puzzled business men, has created wide popular interest in planning as a possible refuge from persistent insecurity; by many people it is now regarded as a kind of economic Geneva where all sorts of compromises may be had and where peace and prosperity may be insured.[2]

It is my belief that practically all of this represents an unconsidered adherence to a slogan, or perhaps a withdrawal from the hard lessons of depression years, and that it remains unrelated to a vast background of revision and reorganization among our institutions which would condition its functioning. Most of those who say so easily that this is our way out do not, I am convinced, understand that fundamental changes of attitude, new disciplines, revised legal structures, unaccustomed limitations on activity, are all necessary if we are to plan. This amounts, in fact, to the abandonment, finally, of laissez faire. It amounts, practically, to the abolition of business.

This is what planning calls for. In spite of its drastic requirements, it may be wanted by many people; most of us are not, however, entitled to the contemporary familiarity with which we toss about loaded phrases whose content is altogether unexplored. It is one thing to advocate a social change which is understood and wanted; it is quite another to consent to a movement whose implications are unexplored. These implications may change early consent to later and bitter opposition. This seems nearly certain to happen; the respectful assent which is commanded by the general proposals of the present is not to be counted on when action is required on more particular policies. For these will show quite clearly what sacrifices are required. Those who talk most about this sort of change are not contemplating sacrifice; they are expecting gains. But it would certainly be one of the characteristics of any planned economy that the few who fare so well as things are now would be required to give up nearly all the exclusive perquisites they have come to consider theirs of right, and that these should be in some sense socialized. In a romantic, risky, adventurous economy the business of managing industry can be treated as a game; the spoils can be thought of as belonging to the victor, as spoils have always belonged to victors. But a mature and rational economy which considered its purposes and sought reasonable ways to attain them would certainly not present many of the characteristics of the present—its violent contrasts of well-being, its irrational allotments of individual liberty, its unconsidered exploitation of human and natural resources. It is better that these things be recognized early rather than late.[3]

National planning can be thought of—in a technical rather than a political sense—merely as a normal extension and development of the kind of planning which is a familiar feature of contemporary business. It is not as a technical problem that the idea gives us pause; it is that the implications for other institutions, which we may suddenly see too late, are likely to cause us finally to hesitate and to turn aside from the severe logic of events. We have many illustrations of the extension of central-office control over numerous units of the same industry, and even over various units of different industries which contribute to one product, such as motors, tires, telephones, or radios.[4] Even here technology has outrun institutional change. As Mr. Person puts it: "In the face of an integrating technology the Government has attempted to preserve primitive forms of competition." And, although so inevitable a movement could not be stopped, it could be hampered and distorted. We might have had some such form of organization as the German cartel system if we had not set out so determinedly, 40 years and more ago, to enforce competition.[5] Instead, we have curious contrasts in procedure and strange monstrosities of form which can be understood only by reference to uneven and intermittent official displeasures. Our industrial structures are reminiscent of weeds grown in the dark, and even those new coordinative features, which have grown in the somewhat brighter twilight of mere suspicion, present strange and unnatural features to be understood only by admission that the functions they profess to be organized for are less important than those which are hidden and unprofessed.

Still, there are a few industries which are wholly integrated or nearly so; and there are many others where integration has gone much further than anyone is prepared to admit. The difficulty with such illegal or extralegal development is that it teaches conspiratorial management; its leaders come to view the Government and the public as fair objects of exploitation, since their own natural functions are so unjustly repressed. This is important for our purpose, because it has led business to represent itself as in some ways much more innocent and immature than it is; and at the same time has prevented the growth, in full light, of technical means of control. Trade associations—to illustrate—are permitted a certain liberty in "business activities"; but "observe that while those things which they may do tend to promote uniformity in details of productive technology and commercial practices, it is those things which they are not permitted to do which are essential to stabilization of an industry"[6]—essential, also, it might be said, to developing such a scheme of "practice" as belongs properly to successful permanent control. We have, at once, illuminating public examples of successful planning, and a hidden development, on a vast scale, of technics which ought to be brought into the open. But we have enough evidence to make it clear that no technical difficulty bars the way to national planning. What deficiencies follow from its hitherto partly underground growth will quickly enough be remedied under different auspices.

The real barriers are all of another sort. Compared with them, the difficulties of coordination within industry are as nothing. In spite of our elaborate efforts of suppression there are highly integrated industrial organizations of vast size; if repressive efforts should cease, such working groups would spread quickly enough everywhere. The question is whether, up to this point, anything much more would have been gained. Perhaps some further economies would result both from more efficient management and from suppression of competitive wastes. But the essential problems would not have been solved. The paradoxes which face us would remain as unsolved as they were when Carlyle or Ruskin denounced the world which contained them or when Marx or George offered their hypotheses of cause and cure. All the essential conflicts would survive.[7]

It is impossible to pursue a discussion of planning beyond the most elementary considerations without raising the question of motive. Most economists, even today, believe that Adam Smith laid his finger on a profound truth when he said that not benevolent feelings but rather self-interest actuated the butchers and bakers of this world; most of them believe, furthermore, that this self-interestedness requires an economy in which profit is the reward for characteristic virtue and lack of it the penalty of sin. This belief must appear, from even an amateurish contact with modern psychology, to be so obviously an instance of wishful borrowing as to give its persistence something of a stubborn and determined air.[8] For persons with the usual intellectual contacts of our time to go on harboring these views, there has to be some violent rationalization. Surely they must be aware of the growing average size of our industrial organizations; and from this it is a simple conclusion that fewer persons all the time are profit-receivers in any direct sense. Surely they must be aware of the growing separation of ownership and control;[9] and from this it seems a fairly simple inference that since profits go only to owners, control is effectively separated from its assumed motive. As a matter of fact, how many railway men, steel workers, or even central-office employees have any stake in company earnings? We know that there are almost none, and that this is true from workman to superintendent in most industries. Yet in defiance of such well-known and obviously relevant facts we go on treating motives quite as though our knowledge of men and of industry had been derived from a few eighteenth-century books rather than from any contemporary knowledge of the world and of men. The truth is that if industry could not run without this incentive it would have stopped running long ago.

It is even arguable that profits, instead of furnishing an indispensible actuating principle, tend to inject into industry many of those elements of uncertainty which we as economists unanimously deplore. For, being at the disposal of directorates largely divorced from productive operations, they are set aside as surplus reserves. These are intended as dividend insurance, though the intention may not result in accomplishment. But at the same time they clearly produce insecurity everywhere else.[10] They are optimistically used for creating overcapacity in every profitable line; they are injected into money-market operations in such ways

[3] Mr. Ford Hinrichs has called attention to the mutually exclusive nature of some of the objectives simultaneously entertained by many of our business leaders who praise the idea of planning (the Atlantic Monthly, July 1931).

[4] Cf. Mr. Willard Thorp's familiar census monograph, The Integration of Industrial Operation (1924). Also his contribution to recent economic changes, The Changing Structure of Industry (1929). There are numerous relevant passages in the monograph prepared for the World Social Economic Congress by Mr. H. S. Person and published as document 1 of section 11 (1931).

[5] It is possible that not the cartel but the integrated, single-ownership enterprise might more readily develop in America. Mr. Domeratzky has shown the difficulties which attend the cartel organization; he appears to feel, after much consideration, that the cartel is rather a temporary device between small enterprise and industrial monopoly, not particularly well suited to other purposes than the limitation of production and the allocation of markets. Mr. Domeratzky develops these ideas in Cartels and the Business Crisis, in Foreign Affairs for October 1931, p. 34 ff., as well as in earlier writings.

[7] Only if we actually reach this point shall we discover lessons in contemporary Russian practice. But many observers are recording carefully the experience there which may later on be of assistance to us. Cf. for instance, my Experimental Control in Russian Industry, The Political Science Quarterly, June 1928. Also Hinrichs and Brown, The Planned Economy of Soviet Russia, The Political Science Quarterly, September 1931.

[8] There have been some strenuous attacks on the economists' naïve view of human nature. Cf. Carleton H. Parker, Economic Motives, American Economic Review, sup. 1, 1918, p. 212, later published in The Casual Laborer and other Essays, 1920, Paul H. [9] How serious and extensive this separation has come to be is just being revealed. Mr. W. Z. Ripley has referred to the problem. But the most extensive exposé is that of Mr. Gardiner Means in The Separation of Ownership and Control in American Industry, the Quarterly Journal of Economics, XLVI, 68–100, November 1931. Mr. Means is of the opinion that separation has gone so far that identification of ownership and management is no longer a tenable working concept. One of his most interesting exhibits is that of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. "Not a single director or officer held as much as 0.1 of 1 percent of the total stock. The combined holdings of all the directors could not have amounted to more than 0.7 of 1 percent and were presumably very much less." Where is the profit incentive to enterprise here? There is none, obviously, which is directly connected with the railroad. There may be speculative profits from being a director, but that is another matter and is scarcely concerne with management, even remotely.

[10] Profits which are insured can hardly be useful as motives. Businesses by setting up these accounts seek to make certain that this reward will be paid whether or not the activity for which it is paid is carried out. This is only one more instance of the many to be discovered in actual business practice which contradict the claims made for profits as universally necessary motives.

as to contribute to inflation; they are used, most absurdly of all, as investments in the securities of other industries.[11]

If profits are really the actuating motive in modern enterprise, why is it that so great a proportion of them go to those who have no share in the control of operations, and why is it that industry continues to run even when those who run it have no major stake in its gains? But most important of all, if profits are so important to our system, why do we allow them to be used in such ways as not only to destroy the source of future earnings but to create unemployment and hardship among millions of people whose only contact with them in any form has been through reading about them in newspapers?

It is clear that this institution does not, in any real sense, actuate our productive equipment. Furthermore its malign influence is reasonably obvious. Why is it, then, that we protect and argue for it with a violence and persistence out of all proportion to the gains we may expect? Because, it seems to me, we are not genuinely interested in security, order, or rationality. Profits, in the sense in which we use the term, belong to a speculative age, one in which huge gambles are taken, and in which the rewards for success may be outstanding.[12] When we speak of them as motives, we do not mean that the hope of making 4 percent induces us to undertake an operation; we mean that we hope for some fabulous story-book success. These vast gambling operations are closer to the spirit of American business even yet, with all the hard lessons we have had, than are the contrasting ideas which have to do with constructive restraint and social control. In fact, our business men have only a rudimentary conception of industry as a social function, as carrying a heavy responsibility of provisions. Industry is thought of rather as a field for adventure, in which the creation of goods is a minor matter. Who among our millions of Wall Street amateurs hopes merely for dividends on his investment? Or who thinks of the securities he buys and sells as having anything to do with an economic function?

The truth is that profits persuade us to speculate; they induce us to allocate funds where we believe the future price situation will be favorable; they therefore have a considerable effect on the distribution of capital among various enterprises—an effect which seems clearly enough inefficient so that other methods might easily be better; but they have little effect in actually inducing or in supporting productive enterprises. All this appears merely from examination of the evidence available to us as economists; if we look into the evidence from the field of psychology, one of the first things we discover is that this main supporting generalization—that the only effective motive for enterprise is money-getting—appears in the psychologists' works as a standard humorous reference to the psychological ideas of laymen.[13]

It would be untrue to maintain that profits do not supply one kind of motive for economic activity. Business, as we know it, is perhaps chiefly interested in them. This is to emphasize, however, the speculative rather than the disciplined aspects of production. To say that this is one of the institutions which will have to be abandoned if planning is to become socially effective is to make a sharp distinction among the effects to be expected from dependence upon alternative motives. There is no doubt that the hope of great gains induces enterprise of a sort; and if these are disestablished, a certain kind of enterprise will disappear. The question is whether we can well afford to dispense with it. It seems credible that we can. Industries now mature can be seen to operate without it; and new ones might be created and might grow from sheer workmanlike proclivities and without the hope of speculative gains.

As we look back at our present system from some time in the future it will be much clearer to us what kind of activities actually we induced by this incentive. At present it is possible to suspect that the decay of the gain-getting motive as an inducement to productive enterprise may have been accompanied by its transfer to essentially antisocial activities. Corporation officers pay too little attention to their duties and too much to the ticker tape; inside rings exploit the businesses under their control; market cornering and supply limitation become favorite methods of gain-getting. All these and a thousand other activities have far less to do with the productivity of our system than is implied in our easy explanation that gains are the reward for initiative and enterprise and are necessary to call them out. A large share of the initiative and enterprise thus called out might better, perhaps, have been left uncalled, since it obstructs rather than facilitates; we count it good, however, since we reason backward also. Profits are necessary to call out enterprise, we say, but we then say enterprise called out by profits is necessary, which is not true at all. Nor are they always used advantageously.

Most of us ought not to have been quite so free in our predictions that the institutions of Soviet Russia would break down from a failure of motive. Yet some of us have gone on saying that even in the face of evidence. Not more than a month ago a past president of this association assured me again, as he had done before, that here was the source of weakness which must finally ruin all the Russian plans. There are numerous difficulties there, plenty of chances for failure; but the failure of noncommercial motives cannot honestly be said, at this late date, to be one of them. Nor is this a source of necessary alarm—any more than the technical difficulties need be—concerning any planned economy we may devise. It ought rather to be a source of wonder that a society could operate at all when profits are allowed to be earned and disposed of as we do it. The hope of making them induces dangerous adventures, more speculative than productive, and the uses to which they are put are a constant menace to general security. These conclusions only become clearer as time goes on, yet no movement to limit them or to control their uses has made headway among us.[14] If there had been a more wide-spread suspicion of this sort over some period of time, there would be more reason to expect success for proposals looking toward a profitless regime. The universal confidence in profits, still unshaken in the western world, is quite likely to hinder measurably the advance of planning.

A central group of experts charged with the duty of planning the country's economic life, but existing as a suggestive or consultative body only, without power, has been advocated by numerous persons and organizations.[15] It is quite impossible to visualize

[11] Surely the word "absurd" is not too strong. For a business to use its earnings to secure future earnings, not by increasing its own productivity, but by seeking to get dividends from other businesses, is to reduce profit making to something less social, even, then entrepreneur business. Why should the allocation of our capital resources be at the disposal of enterprises which use them as a form of insurance for their own future profits, and, as a means to this, allocate capital to other enterprises? It would be difficult to devise a mechanism less relevant to the social purpose of capital.

[12] Cf. the discussion of this matter in Mr. John Dewey's Human Nature and Conduct.

[13] In Charles Horton Cooley's Sociological Theory and Social Research there is an old essay of his on "Personal Competition" which contains some trenchant remarks about motive. In it he shows how our standards of success have been warped and the need there is for social approval of different activities than command it now. A final paragraph sums up the matter: "It will be apparent, I think, that the view regarding the nature of success here maintained is decidedly a hopeful one so far as concerns the possibility of progress, and wholly opposed to the pessimistic attitude based on the supposed 'selfishness' of human nature and the inevitable predominance of the economic motive. The motive that really predominates, now as in the past, is essentially social and moral; it is the desire to be something in the minds of others, to gain respect, honor, social power of some sort. This being the case, human endeavor is above all things plastic, controlled by the spirit of the age. The standard of success, and with it the whole character and tendency of competition, is a social or moral phenomenon accessible to human endeavor."

[14] This broad statement would need to be modified in the case of some quasi-public businesses. The Transportation Act dealt with the problem of railroad profits. In certain other ways we sometimes limit the uses of surplus reserves. The part played by these in the call-money market during 1928 and 1929 is now well known. In October of 1929 loans for others reached a peak of nearly four billion dollars. These loans, of course, were induced by high call-money rates and were unaffected in any direct or effective sense by Federal Reserve discount policies. It was thus the profits of the previous prosperity period which were used to support security inflation. When this crashed so disastrously, profits were made insecure for some time to come. Evidently this is a bad way to use profits even from the point of view of profit makers. This was recognized by the New York Clearing House Association in 1931. An amendment to the constitution now prohibits member banks from placing brokers' loans for account of nonbanking interests. Other associations may follow. Perhaps the New York association was led to take this action by the withdrawal rather than the injection of these funds into the speculative markets. For these loans for others were reduced from nearly 4 billion dollars in 1929 to 162 million dollars in 1931, thus contributing to disastrous deflation instead of helping to ease down immoderate inflation. Whatever the motive, however, the action of the clearing house association is a recognition that the use of undistributed profit-funds must be controlled. Any system of planning would have not only to hedge them about with restrictions, but to direct their uses, if, by that time, it had not been made impossible for them to be accumulated.

[15] For instance by Mr. Gerard Swope, of the General Electric Co., also by the committee on continuity of business and employment of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Mr. Sumner H. Slichter discusses the problem in his Modern Economic Society but is under no illusions whatever as to the likely results. He does not think it worth while even to consider the possibility of institutional changes which would implement the findings of such a body; and it is perhaps true that even a moderate maintenance of prosperity would prevent such a development. There may come another time, of course, such as occurred in 1914–18 when all institutions are melted in disaster so that they may be refashioned after quite unfamiliar designs. The theoretical temper of our time would certainly favor central planning as the heart of any newly devised scheme of control. The Swope plan evidently originated in the concern of a sensitive executive for the employees of his company. It is interesting that this typical business document should have arisen out of a particular problem and have proceeded to the consideration of general relationships only reluctantly and partially. Mr. Swope understood that if his employees were to have even a measure of his own security and confidence in the future there must be a stability which its most enthusiastic defender would not claim a genuine Gosplan without power; but, of course, this is not to be a Gosplan. It might lay out suggested courses; it might even timidly advise, but certainly its advice would seldom, if ever, be taken. It would be as unnatural for American businesses, which live by adventures in competition, to abdicate their privileges voluntarily, as it is to expect rival militarists to maintain peace, and for the same reasons. If an institution of this sort could not be used as a mask for competitive purposes or as a weapon to be used against more scrupulous rivals, as the Federal Trade Commission has sometimes been, it would quickly gather about itself a formidable body of enemies armed with tried theoretical objection as well as real power. The chief concern of militarists must always be to maintain the conditions of war; and the chief concern of essentially speculative businesses must always be to maintain the conditions of conflict necessary to their existence. The deadliest and most subtle enemy of speculative profit-making which could be devised would be an implemented scheme for planning production. For such a scheme would quiet conflict and inject into economic affairs an order and regularity which no large speculation could survive. Every depression period wearies us with insecurity; the majority of us seem all to be whipped at once; and what we long for temporarily is safety rather than adventure. Planning seems at first to offer this safety and so gains a good deal of unconsidered support. But when it is discovered that planning for production means planning for consumption too; that something more is involved than simple limitation to amounts which can be sold at any price producers temporarily happen to find best for themselves; that profits must be limited and their uses controlled; that what really is implied is something not unlike an integrated group of enterprises run for its consumers rather than for its owners—when all this gradually appears, there is likely to be a great changing of sides.

Strange as it may seem—directly antithetical to the interests of business and unlikely to be allowed freedom of speech, to say nothing of action—it seems altogether likely that we shall set up, and soon, such a consultative body.[16] When the Chamber of Commerce of the United States is brought to consent, realization cannot be far off.[17] It seems to me quite possible to argue that, in spite of its innocuous nature, the day on which it comes into existence will be a dangerous one for business, just as the founding day of the League of Nations was a dangerous one for nationalism. There may be a long and lingering death, but it must be regarded as inevitable. Any new economic council will be hampered on every side; it will be pressed for favors and undermined by political jobbery. It will not dare call its soul its own, nor speak its mind in any emergency. But it will be a clear recognition, one that can never be undone, that order and reason are superior to adventurous competition. It will demonstrate these day by day and year by year in the personnel of a civil service devoted to disinterested thinking rather than romantic hopes of individual gain. Let it be as poor a thing as it may, still it will be a constant reminder that once business was sick to death and that it will be again; that once the expert is applied for, his advice must be taken or refuted. Even if it does so little, and that so badly, as hardly to exist at all, it will still have had a different purpose: the achieving of order. And not improbably it will have been demonstrably wiser than the powers which will be creating the events surrounding it.[18]

These will, however, be the only ways in which the qualities of a planning body will be able to show themselves. It will be unable to act, and therefore unable to eliminate uncertainties; uncertainties make prediction impossible; and planning is a process of predicting and making it come true, not merely a matter of advising voluntary groups. Mr. Slichter is quite justified in pointing out that no scheme we are likely to adopt would be able to do its work effectively. He asks, for instance: "Could it prevent depressions? Could it prevent the great overdevelopment of industries? If a council had been in existence as early as 1920, could it have checked the great overdevelopment of the textile industry, the shoe industry, the coal industry, the petroleum industry, the automobile industry, and others? Could it have solved the farm problem? Could it have prevented the depression of 1930, or substantially reduced the severity of the depression? Could it have prevented our foreign trade from being injured by a general upward revision of the tariff in 1920?"[19] And he is certain that the answer to all these questions is "no."

The answer has to be "no" because the necessary conditions of planning are not established by any "purely advisory National Economic Council." An advisory council might guess, but it could not plan; and the difference between guessing and planning is the difference between laissez faire and social control. Under the institutions of laissez faire the sole uses of such a body will be to lead us slowly, by precept and demonstration, toward a less uncertain future. It seems improbable that this will be other than a very reluctant and grudging change.[20] for it now, in the whole structure of industry. No one business, Mr. Swope saw, could achieve it alone. There must be common action throughout entire industries. Beyond this, he made only the suggestion of supervision by a public body. The chamber of commerce committee report on continuity of business and employment recommended certain long-time measures as likely to assure relief from recurrent depression. The central problem was formulated as "The establishing of a better balance between production and consumption." It is seen that this must mean the restraint of certain liberties: "A freedom of action which might have been justified in the relatively simple life of the last century cannot be tolerated today, because the unwise action of one individual may adversely affect the lives of thousands. We have left the period of extreme individualism and we are living in a period in which national economy must be recognized as the controlling factor." This might be thought to be the prelude to suggestions for rigorous control. But what follows is only a suggestion for a national economic council with advisory duties. Furthermore this is not to be a governmental body but one responsible to the chamber of commerce.

[16] Mr. L. L. Lorwin distinguishes four possible types of these bodies which he calls: (1) The absolute socialist type, (2) the partial state-socialist type, (3) the voluntary-business type, and (4) the social-progressive type. I have not thought it necessary to follow this distinction very closely, though it is helpful as a guide to the present large output of plans, because it seems to me quite clear, for reasons I develop, that they all come to the same thing—or will not work. There is really very little choice in the long run; our industrial technique is very fully developed and it is of a certain sort and not otherwise. Any plan must contain and complete it or it will fail. We might once have had the choices suggested by such a classification. We no longer have them.

[17] Committee on the Continuity of Business and Employment, Rept. No. 12. Most industrial leaders, with a few notable exceptions, favored the La Follette bill in its Senate hearings. This would, of course, set up a fairly harmless advisory body. But, in contrast to the chamber of commerce recommendations, it would be an organ of government.

[18] Hearings on the La Follette bill to establish such a national council have shown something, in spite of the reticence of business leaders, concerning attitudes. They are willing, just now, to try anything, but are not hopeful of results. Mr. Sloan, for instance, asked whether he would endorse the idea of a council, answered that, in his opinion, "We wouldn't get very far. There is too much individuality in business. I don't think we have reached the point where individual manufacturers will give up something for others." And he went on to say that the economic council idea, would in its final form result from evolution and experience. Mr. Wiggin, on the same day, Oct. 30, 1931, as reported in the New York Times, answered Senator La Follette's question, "You think, then, that the capacity of human suffering is rather unlimited?" by saying, "I think so." He was asked whether he thought a council could have had any effect in checking the excessive expansion of 1929 and replied, "I don't think so." "Then," said Senator La Follette, "I take it you believe that there is nothing which can be done which will be effective in saving us from these great fluctuations in business activity which we have been experiencing?" Mr. Wiggin answered. "I do not think so. A man only lives so many years, and his experience only lasts with him so many years. New generations succeed and they will make the same blunders. * * * Human nature is human nature. Lives go on so long as business activity goes on and we are bound to have conditions of crisis once in so often. You may learn from each one how to avoid that particular difficulty the next time, but you are always going to have, once in so many years, difficulties in business, times that are prosperous and times that are not prosperous. There is no commission or any brain in the world that can prevent it. I believe that Mr. Wiggin was right and extraordinarily honest. No commission, no brain could prevent crisis in business; which is why business is slowly being condemned, and new schemes are being considered for taking over its function.

[19] Sumner H. Slichter, Modern Economic Society, p. 876.

[20] For many years I was puzzled to know why so much opposition to any extension of Government functions existed. It was only gradually and with patient inquiry that I satisfied myself. The reason was that business kept any government corrupt that touched it anywhere. This seemed to be a part of the business system, no more considered wrong by business men than ordinary buying and selling. And wise observers who had seen it going on always and everywhere had concluded that it was of the nature of government to be corrupt and inefficient and that no really important matters, such as economic functions, ought ever to be trusted to it. A longer time still was required to reach the conclusion that all these wise men were wrong about causes. And because they were wrong about this their whole thinking was askew. The trouble lay in the nature of business, and so long as business was left unchanged as to motive and method it would continue to corrupt every government it touched. But it could not be reasoned that, because business had paralyzed governmental organs, governments were inherently bad and ought never to be trusted. Revise business; arrange things so that man's capacity to corrupt the public services is seriously limited or removed, and then, only then, we shall have a chance to see whether the public interest, as over against private interests, could command effective and honest service. From what I know of human nature I believe that the world awaits a great outpouring of energy as soon as we shall have removed the dead hand of competitive enterprise that stifles public impulses and finds use only for the less effective and less beneficial impulses of men. When industry is government and government is indus-

In another place I have pointed out the analogy between the serialization of machines within a factory and the development of a continuity of process throughout industry. The one instance is that of machine linked to machine until the series is finally complete; the other instance is that of process linked to process until a strong web of dependence and contract is completely woven. The analogy can be pursued further. One of the features of recent industrial history, which found us altogether unprepared, was the astonishing capacity for production which seemed suddenly to show itself everywhere in the twenties. Its sudden unexpected appearance has led to absurd and ludicrous subterfuges; even economists have not been entirely innocent of these. I had supposed that one of the stock illustrations of economic fallacy, one which could always be depended on, would continue to be the one which illustrated the futility of making work. Numerous varieties of this old common-sense error have suddenly become respectable in recent months. We have all been asked to assent to the necessity for the stretch-out, for reducing hours of work in the day and even days in the week; we have even heard arguments against efficiency and mechanization; and whole cities and States have gone frankly into efforts for making work. Most economists have either kept silent or have contented themselves with mumbling something about long and short runs.

This confusion is the natural result of our lateness in bringing the science of economics even to the observational stage. If we have been watching, describing, analyzing industry as we should, we must have known that the greatest economic event of the nineteenth century occurred when Frederick W. Taylor first held a stop watch on the movements of a group of shovelers in the plant of the Midvale Steel Co. And we must have understood, when Shop Management was published in 1903, that, perhaps a generation later, the world could be overwhelmed with goods. Taylor had already done his greatest work by then, and notice of it had been sufficiently public if there had been economic ears to hear. Instead of that, writing and teaching went on undisturbed, the subject matter becoming more and more traditional. Perhaps most ironical of all, in view of the coming surplus, was all the emphasis on laws of diminishing returns and the limited number of seats at nature's table. The forces which were to make the future went unnoticed.

The world is paying now for this dogmatic dream of the economists. And we seem not to have discovered even yet the sources of these floods of goods; we have no idea how they can be regularized and made available to consumers; we have no notions, beyond the foolish and despairing ones which we ourselves reject in ordinary times, what our policies ought to be in days of disaster. We have talked freely about the failure of business men and statesmen; it is time we accepted our share of the responsibility.

If we had had eyes to see the implications of Taylor's work we should have known that the vast expansion of production which must follow would clog all the old channels of trade, swamp the mechanisms of an artificially limited commerce, and end in a period of violent reconstruction. Some of the sufferings of the present might possibly have been avoided. We failed to understand because our eyes were blind to the technology which was revolutionizing the materials of our science. It is important that this should not continue to occur; it will not if we agree that economics is an observational, even if not yet an experimental, science, and if we hereafter agree to search out the consequences of technological change.

When Taylor reduced human working motions to defined elements, they were then of the sort that machines could perform; when machines took over these simplified tasks, one by one, there came a time in every process when the speed and rhythm of the whole was still dictated by a few, or even one, unmechanized task which men must still perform. Human failure periodically disrupted such a plant, there was blocking and choking, confusion and disorder, until a period of slackening and slowing started things going again. But when this last gap between machines had been closed, the whole process could be thought of in new and revolutionary ways. Nothing but product and costs counted any more; men as workers no longer dictated; and there was an end to confusion, and to periodic disruption. The revolution of our industry still lingers in this stage; not all our processes have discovered this final efficiency. But it will not linger there for long. The clearing away of the present debris and the years of expansion to come will surely witness the emergence of this new technology, matured and pervasive. Shall we be unready for the floods of still cheaper goods?

The changed attitudes and rhythms which follow the completion of machine series within the factory are quite like those which may take place in another area. Industry after industry may follow the half-dozen now fairly rationalized; each may use in its own plants the new technology of work-elimination; each may solve its own problems of control and coordination. But it will all end again in just such a disaster as we are struggling through now unless we take the final step of linking each to each. Unless we learn that the structure and rhythm of laissez faire are inconsistent and anachronistic concomitants of such technology as soon will infuse the industrial process, confusion and disorder will prevail whenever the wilful pursuit of business privileges, as we still know them, chokes the smooth interchanging flow logically belonging to the system of industry, but never yet achieved by human management.

It is necessary to realize quite finally that everything will be changed if the linking of industry can finally be brought to completion in a plan. It was a reluctant and half blind step which led one executive after another to complete the serialization of his machines. And even then he was sometimes astonished at the results. This new undertaking is vaster; it requires a new and complicated technology which is not yet wholly invented; and it follows not from one executive's decision, but from a thousand preliminary consents, abdications, and acceptances of responsibility. Yet to enter upon it would be to take but a single short step from where we are; the most momentous and final, but still a short one. We have traveled a long road to this threshold we now consider crossing.

The setting up of even an emasculated and ineffective central coordinating body in Washington will form a focus about which recognition may gradually gather. It will be an action as significant as the first observations of Taylor; and it can lead eventually to the completion and crowning of that genius' work. The major subject matter of economics during the next few years might well be a particularizing of the implications of this. For we have a century and more of development to undo. The institutions of laissez faire have become so much a part of the fabric of modern life that the untangling and removing of their tissues will be almost like dispensing with civilization itself. We shall all of us be made unhappy in one way or another; for things we love as well as things that are only privileges will have to go. The protective vine makes the ruined wall seem beautiful; we dislike abandoning it for something different. But we shall have to see, no doubt, a wholesale sacrifice of such things, like it as little as we may.

The first series of changes will have to do with statutes, with constitutions, and with government. The intention of eighteenth and nineteenth century law was to install and protect the principle of conflict; this, if we begin to plan, we shall be changing once for all, and it will require the laying of rough, unholy hands on many a sacred precedent, doubtless calling on an enlarged and nationalized police power for enforcement. We shall also have to give up a distinction of great consequence, and very dear to many a legalistic heart, but economically quite absurd, between private and public or quasipublic employments. There is no private business, if we mean by that one of no consequence to anyone but its proprietors; and so none exempt from compulsion to serve a planned public interest. Furthermore, we shall have to progress sufficiently far in elementary realism to recognize that only the Federal area, and often not even that, is large enough to be coextensive with modern industry; and that consequently the States are wholly ineffective instruments for control. All three of these wholesale changes are required by even a limited acceptance of the planning idea.

Planning is by definition the opposite of conflict; its meaning is alined to coordination, to rationality, to publicly defined and expertly approached aims; but not to private money-making ventures; and not to the guidance of a hidden hand.[21] It is equally true that planning in any social sense cannot leave out of its calculations any industry or group of industries and still remain planning. To do so would be to expose the scheme to the very uncertainty which is sought to be eliminated and to concentrate its advantages in the hands of the noncooperators. It would be easy for any free industry to erect an empire if all or even many of the others were restricted. It will be required, furthermore, in any successful attempt to plan, that the agency which imposes its disinterested will on industry, must equal, in the area of its jurisdiction, the spread of the industry. Planning will necessarily become a function of the Federal Government; either that or the planning agency will supersede that government, which is why, of course, such a scheme will eventually be assimilated to the State, rather than possess some of its powers without its responsibilities.[22]

The next series of changes will have to do with industry itself. It has already been suggested that business will logically be required to disappear. This is not an overstatement for the sake of emphasis; it is literally meant. The essence of business is its free venture for profits in an unregulated economy. Planning implies guidance of capital uses; this would limit entrance into or expansion of operations. Planning also implies adjustment of production to consumption; and there is no way of accomplishing this except through a control of prices and of profit margins. It would never be sufficient to plan production for an estimated demand if that demand were likely to fail for lack of purchasing try the dual conflict deepest in our modern institutions will be abated.

This is one of the basic reasons why the prospect of a planned economy is so congenial to every other hope and belief I have. I can see in it the eventual possibility of a rewarded honesty for every man which so few have now. And this can come only from a removal of the activities of goods-making and goods-selling from the list of those activities which are treated as games and rackets with few rules, no ethics, no limitation of instruments to be used, and rewards only for results which in the nature of things must involve social harm.

[21] "The laissez faire of the nineteenth century was based upon a metaphysics of providential guidance. The planning of the twentieth century rests its case on a philosophical faith in the power of man to promote orderly economic and social change."—L. L. Lorwin.

[22] I mean, of course, that only government, in the widest sense, can protect and foster the arts, education, and other similar interests which compete with industry and would do so more formally under any planned division of the national income.

power.[33] The insurance of adequate buying capacity would be a first and most essential task of any plan which was expected to work. To take away from business its freedom of venture and of expansion, and to limit the profits it may acquire, is to destroy it as business and to make of it something else. That something else has no name; we can only wonder what it may be like and whether all the fearsome predictions concerning it will come true. The traditional incentives, hope of moneymaking, and fear of money loss, will be weakened; and a kind of civil-service loyalty and fervor will need to grow gradually into acceptance. New industries will not just happen as the automobile industry did; they will have to be foreseen, to be argued for, to seem probably desirable features of the whole economy before they can be entered upon.

This sweeping statement of the logic of planning is simply an attempt to foresee what our economic institutions will be like if we adopt the planning principle. We shall not, we never do, proceed to the changes here suggested all at once. Little by little, however, we may be driven the whole length of this road; once the first step is taken, which we seem about to take, that road will begin to suggest itself as the way to a civilized industry. For it will become more and more clear, as thinking and discussion centers on industrial and economic rather than business problems, that not very much is to be gained until the last step has been taken. What seems to be indicated now is years of gradual modification, accompanied by agonies and recriminations, without much visible gain; then, suddenly, as it was with the serialization of machines, the last link will almost imperceptibly find its place and suddenly we shall discover that we have a new world, as, some years ago, we suddenly discovered that we had unconsciously created a new industry.

These struggles and changes may seem to the future historian who looks backward like the purposive journey of a seedling toward the light. The seedling could not see or feel that light; it merely obeyed its nature. If only society had a greater and more widely diffused power to comprehend and pursue the purposes of its nature, we should save ourselves the great waste of energy which goes into opposing and regretting change. The difficulty with this is that society is not an organism; that it has no discoverable nature to obey; that there are no natural requirements for its development. We are not going anywhere; we are merely on the way. For this lack of the purpose, which nature kindly supplies to her lower organisms, society must substitute plans born of intellectual effort, and imposed by awkward democratic devices. This is a hard condition for human nature. We have no great gift for shaping our behavior in accordance with large arms, and no great gift either for tolerating the necessary disciplines. It has been by a series of seeming miracles that we have acquired the technique of control and the industrial basis for economic planning. The still further, perhaps greater, miracle of discipline is needed.

It is perhaps no accident that planning has recently become a center of discussion in economic affairs in substitution for laissez faire. Changes in contemporary philosophy have prepared the way. Chance has substituted itself for the anthropomorphic interpretation of history as a causal sequence. Even the evolutionary principle has the defect, in social history, of making the present seem to have been what we were struggling for. Of course, we were not trying to attain any of the institutions we have. They resulted from the chance conjunction of changes. Only the backward look, determined by the view from some contemporary hillock, gives history a meaning. We have, nevertheless, as we are just now dimly beginning to see, the possibility, in a world of discontinuous development and chance combination, of producing a new history guided quite consciously toward foreseen ends.

There is something hostile to mankind in the cold notion of a world which progresses toward unseen ends, regardless of human desires. So long as it was possible we tried to delude ourselves, on one way or another, that purpose existed and that it had a definite reference to mankind. All that comfort is torn away now; and we remain poor, inconsequent creatures exposed to chance developments which are neither kind nor unkind with reference to ourselves, but simply impersonal. It is perhaps characteristic of human nature that we should reject such a view until it became intellectually impossible to cherish our delusions further; and that we should then turn to the only alternative. If there is no order and sequence in events, if the world is indifferent to man, we still remain men. It is perhaps the most magnificent of all human gestures to accept inconsequence and to set out determinedly to bring order out of chaos. I do not regard it as settled that the world is ready, yet, for creating its future according to a determined purpose.[34] But we are at the point where discussion of this possible mastering of future history is beginning to assume practical aspects; and there is undoubtedly some need for haste if change is to come peaceably. It is my view that the prospective discussion ought to be carried out with a clear view of its philosophical implications and of its institutional requirements. If we accept the principle of planning we must accept its implied destruction of the structure of a laissez faire industry.

It is, in other words, a logical impossibility to have a planned economy and to have businesses operating its industries, just as it is also impossible to have one within our present constitutional and statutory structure. Modifications in both, so serious as to mean destruction and rebeginning, are required. It is strange, in a way, that we should have come so long a journey to the very threshold of this new economic order with so little change as is yet visible either in our institutions or our intentions. The reason must be that in this, as in so many instances, only the last steps become conscious. We are incorrigibly averse to any estimate of the logic of our acts; and we are also, somewhat paradoxically, fonder of our systems of theory than might be expected, reluctant to expose them to the tests of reality. Consequently we begin with small unnoticed changes and end by not being able to resist vast and spectacular ones—at which time our systems of theory tumble unwept into the grave along with the outworn techniques they accompanied. When this kind of thing follows a relatively unimpeded course there is rapid industrial change such as once happened in England; when politicians, theorists, and vested interests resist too strenuously, there is a revolution on the French model. How rapidly the pressures rise to explosive proportions depends both upon the visibility of a better future and upon the hardships of the present.

There is no denying that the contemporary situation in the United States has explosive possibilities. The future is becoming visible in Russia; the present is bitterly in contrast; politicians, theorists, and vested interests seem to conspire ideally for the provocation to violence of a long-patient people. No one can pretend to know how the release of this pressure is likely to come. Perhaps our statesmen will give way or be more or less gently removed from duty; perhaps our constitutions and statutes will be revised; perhaps our vested interests will submit to control without too violent resistance. It is difficult to believe that any of these will happen; it seems just as incredible that we may have a revolution. Yet the new kind of economic machinery we have in prospect cannot function in our present economy. The contemporary situation is one in which all the choices are hard; yet one of them has to be made.

[33] The chief instruments which have been able to develop, under laissez faire, toward order and regularity, have been those "trade associations" referred to before. They serve as illustrations both of the possibilities and the limits our system offers. For, as Mr. Soule has pointed out, they lead to contraction and limitation but offer nothing in the way of enlarged ways of living. If we were to pursue the logic of this development, we should have industries organized; we should have control established over production and price. So far the results would doubtless be good. But we should also have production limited to the amounts which would regularly be absorbed by consumers at prices dictated neither by a constant ratio to costs nor social need for the goods, but only by the industry's conception of its own best interests. This will never be good enough in any social sense to command permanent assent. Besides, the profit fund will always, after a period of expansion, find itself embodied in overbuilt enterprises whose goods cannot be sold. In spite of these obvious difficulties this is doubtless the direction of our development. Mr. F. M. Feiker, of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, speaking on November 30 before an organization of brokers, referred to the well-known fact that his Bureau was already cooperating with 142 associations to assist them in planning. He even implied that his Department might soon suggest a plan for industry as a whole. To one whose mind is free of laissez faire dogma the peroration of this address must seem to furnish a curious nonsequitur to its general implications. For, after referring to the many approaches to planning in individual industries, and saying something indefinite about a general plan, he finished in this way: "This program must conform to the fundamental American principle of individual initiative and individual achievement for individual reward. It cannot be imposed by fiat or decree. It must in the end rest upon the intelligence and ingenuity of the American business man. Economic planning by ukase is not for us." Having achieved the feat of getting the word "individual" into one sentence in three places, and having eliminated experts in favor of business men, he thus was able to point to a highly expert and carefully socialized effort of the Government as after all quite harmless and ineffective.

[34] Cf. the final chapter in Mr. John Dewey's Philosophy and Civilization, especially the passage on p. 329, in which he attributes our backwardness in social knowledge to our failure to use our already acquired skills in the interest of a shared abundant and secure life..

Mr. AUSTIN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD, at the end of the very able speech of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], an article by Mark Sullivan, a very shrewd observer, entitled "Action on Elevation of Tugwell Watched as Indicative of Trend."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of June 6, 1934]

ACTION ON ELEVATION OF TUGWELL WATCHED AS INDICATIVE OF TREND—MARK SULLIVAN HOLDS APPROVAL OF "COLLECTIVIST" AS UNDER SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WOULD BE DEPARTURE IN AMERICAN POLITICAL PHILOSOPHY

By Mark Sullivan

WASHINGTON, June 6.—We shall have within a few days one of those signs on the surface which mark the course of the tide beneath, the tide in this case being the process of fundamental change through which America is being carried.

The steps which comprise this process can be recognized as a rule only by the comparatively few who understand the technique by which such changes are brought about. To an equal degree the outward evidences of the process, its successive stages, the concrete developments which mark its progress, are recognizable only by relatively few (until, of course, the change in social structure is complete).

AGRICULTURAL OFFICE WATCHED

One of these developments, one of the outward signs, is apparently just ahead of us. In the Department of Agriculture is a vacant post, Under Secretary, second to the Secretary. To this post President Roosevelt has promoted Prof. Rexford G. Tugwell, now Assistant Secretary. The appointment is before the Senate Committee on Agriculture for recommendation and in due course will come before the Senate for approval.

Both the committee and the Senate are controlled by one of the two great parties which are historic in America, which have provided America with its political principles and mechanisms for more than 70 years. If the appointment of Professor Tugwell is approved, it will then be possible to name that event and that date as a milestone. It will be the date on which one of the two great historic parties in America approved the appointment to a high office of an appointee representing a social and political philosophy wholly new to America.

Professor Tugwell's philosophy is collectivism. Designation of Mr. Tugwell as a collectivist is made by persons whose judgment in this field can hardly be disputed. One such judge is Mr. Walter Lippmann. Mr. Lippmann, I think it fair to say, is prevailingly sympathetic to the new deal; he was an advocate of Mr. Roosevelt's election. Also, Mr. Lippmann has exact understanding of the terminology of the various experiments in social structure and government now being carried on in Europe and in the United States. Neither intellectually nor temperamentally, nor by such sympathy as he may have for the new deal, would Mr. Lippman be likely to misjudge the category in which Professor Tugwell belongs.

LIPPMANN ON TUGWELL

Mr. Lippmann is listing and describing the political beliefs and social philosophies of various men and groups within the administration. Of Professor Tugwell he says:

"Then there is a group, among whom Professor Tugwell is the most conspicuous, who may, I suppose, fairly be called collectivist."

Mr. Lippmann's judgment that Professor Tugwell is a collectivist is shared by everyone I know who is equally competent to classify men in this field.

Professor Tugwell as Under Secretary of Agriculture will have no more power than he has in his present post as Assistant Secretary. His promotion, as such standing alone, will not materially accelerate the progress toward collectivism now under way. Professor Tugwell's leverage for action lies not in the rank of his official position but in his subtle and powerful mind. It lies also in the closeness of his association with President Roosevelt. "* * * In the public and congressional mind", wrote Mr. Arthur Krock in the New York Times, May 29, "he (President Roosevelt) and the professor are considered social and mental intimates."

It is not the promotion of Professor Tugwell that is important. The significance will lie in the fact—assuming it happens—that one of America's two great historic parties, acting through its representatives in the Senate, knowing Professor Tugwell to be a collectivist, confirmed his appointment to a high public office in which he would have opportunity to push forward his doctrines.

DIRT-FARMER OPPOSITION DECRIED

This aspect of whether the Senate confirms Professor Tugwell is so historically important that all other aspects are trivial and temporary. One who is opposing confirmation, Senator ELLISON D. SMITH, of South Carolina, Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, puts his opposition on the ground that the professor is not a dirt farmer. That reason for opposition is demagogic and unworthy. Professor Tugwell's duties are mainly in the field of land policy, marketing, fixing quotas of production and sale, the processing tax, and the like. For such duties, having handled a hoe is no necessary experience.

It is true Professor Tugwell has not the experience that would equip him for his job, which would be training in business. Mr. Tugwell's experience has been wholly that of a teacher and writer. The real reason for Professor Tugwell's holding his present position and for his promotion is his relation to the new deal, especially the more radical part of it.

One who knows the new deal well and believes in it strongly, Mr. Ernest K. Lindley, sympathetic author of The Roosevelt Revolution, says: "Rexford G. Tugwell is the philosopher, the sociologist, and the prophet of the Roosevelt revolution, as well as one of its boldest practitioners; he has provided the movement with much of its rationale."

Another author, anonymous but with much inside information, who calls himself "Unofficial Observer" and wrote The New Dealers, says, "When you reach Tugwell, you come very close to the heart of the new deal."

These judgments about Professor Tugwell are borne out by newspaper observers. One of these, Mr. Frank Kent, of the Democratic Baltimore Sun, writing facetiously but with complete accuracy, says: "Dr. Tugwell is an irremovable part of the new deal * * *. He is the prime planner * * * with the most far-sighted schemes * * *."

There can be no doubt that approval of Professor Tugwell by one of America's two great political parties will be a historic departure.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. With respect to the statement made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] that Mr. Tugwell, for the Department of Agriculture, conceded that the Department had exceeded its authority and placed an unwarranted interpretation upon the existing statute, I merely wish to say at this time that it is my information that in the administration of the act some doubts have arisen as to its true interpretation, as to the extent of the powers already conferred, and that the proposal for amendments, or at least for some of the amendments, was for the purpose of making clear the extent of the authority and the interpretation of the act. I do not understand that the Secretary of Agriculture, or the Acting Secretary, or anyone else in the Department, has made the declaration or expressed the opinion that its action has been in violation of the Constitution.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Just a moment. As might have been expected, questions have arisen as to the meaning of the act, and the Department officials are in doubt as to whether or not their interpretation of it is correct. The intention is to make clear the true meaning of the act.

I thank the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is very anxious to have Dr. Tugwell answer his letter, which is now a week old, and desires to have the motion to discharge the committee defeated, so that Dr. Tugwell may be called before the committee and required to answer the letter.

I should like to suggest that in connection with any measure dealing with an agricultural product the committee can send for Dr. Tugwell, and then the Senator from Virginia probably can get an answer to his letter. It will not be necessary to defeat this motion in order to obtain an answer to his letter, which is now a week old.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he thinks it should be necessary to call an official of the Government before a committee in order to obtain an answer to a courteous letter sent to him by a Senator of the United States?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not think so. If I could get an answer within a week to every letter I write, however, or if the thousands of men and women who write to me should receive answers within a week, they would be doing exceedingly well. If they should wait a month and then receive answers they would do well in many cases. I take it that in due time Dr. Tugwell will answer the letter.

If I had received a letter of that kind, I probably should not have answered it, because I would have realized that there were thousands of other and more important letters that I should have to answer, and they would take up all my time. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, as I see the matter, and as I believe Senators will see it if they look at it carefully, the question of answering the letter of the Senator from Virginia has not anything to do with the motion which is pending before the Senate. As I see it, the confirmation of the nomination of Dr. Tugwell has not anything to do with the motion that is pending.

I should like to pause here to inquire of the Chair when it was that Dr. Tugwell's nomination was sent to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I can supply that information, if the Senator will yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Nebraska do so?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The record shows that the nomination was received on the 24th day of April 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed at the desk that the Senator from Arkansas is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

On the 24th day of April Dr. Tugwell was nominated for the office of Under Secretary. I believe if I had to vote now, without any further information, I should vote against the amendment which provided for the office of Under Secretary. That matter has been debated here a great deal. I do not agree that the amendment was properly adopted. It ought to have been acted upon by the Agricultural Committee. I agree with the chairman of the committee in that respect. I find today, however—this is the first time I knew about it—that the Under Secretaries of other departments were provided for in the same way; so I have reached the conclusion that there has been no intention to show any disrespect to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or to its chairman, by the method in which the amendment creating the office was agreed to, although I do not believe that was the proper way to agree to it, and without further information on the subject I am opposed to the establishment of the office.

I should like to say, however, that like the letter of the Senator from Virginia, as I see it, that has not anything to do with the question now before the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, the statement of the Senator from Nebraska that the other under secretaryships have been created in the same way simply amounts to saying that there has been done by indirection in the creation of these other under secretaryships what could not be done directly.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know whether it could have been done by direct action or not. At least, I conceive and believe it was not the right way to do it.

Mr. CLARK. I agree with the Senator entirely in that respect.

Mr. NORRIS. That should not control my vote, or the vote of any other Senator, on the motion pending before the Senate.

The Senator from South Carolina evidently was much aggrieved about the matter. I would not say—without the information, at least, which came today—that he was not justified in his feeling. Up to this day I had felt that way about the motion. I myself did not know that the creation of this position had been agreed to by the Senate. The motion was offered, and the result was had when I was not in the Senate. But that is water over the mill, and it has not anything to do with whether the committee should or should not take some action upon the nomination of Mr. Tugwell. The nomination was sent to the committee on the 24th day of April, and to this moment it has never been laid before the committee by the chairman.

The chairman says that any member of the committee could have made a motion at any time. I do not know whether any member could have done that or not. I have been laboring under the impression that the members could not do that.

Let me appeal to Senators, with their knowledge of the practice of the Senate and of the House in committees, and especially on nominations. I may be mistaken; I am speaking only from memory, but in all my service here I have never yet, either as chairman of a committee or as a member of a committee, known of a single, solitary instance where a nomination has been referred to a committee when the chairman of the committee did not lay the nomination before the committee.

Is not that the practice? I have been chairman of three committees in this body—two of them very important committees, and one of them a committee which has probably more nominations referred to it than any other committee in this body. I refer to the Committee on the Judiciary. For a good many years I was chairman of that committee, and I think that if we counted them up we would find that during the time when I was chairman there were probably thousands of nominations referred to that committee. It never occurred to me that it was not the duty of the chairman to lay the nominations before the committee, without regard to what the chairman thought about them, whether he was in favor of them or opposed to them. Has not that been the experience of every other Member of this body?

I asked the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry a question an hour or so ago, as to whether he knew of an instance where that practice had not been followed, and I would be pleased to have any Senator now rise and interrupt me and tell me of a single instance where that has not been done. No one responds. I take it that no one can recall to mind a case where that has not been done. That is what is always done. That is the way we do business here.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the committees are more or less families, and man after man, as the Senator knows, has asked to have certain bills taken up, and asked to have certain nominations taken up. It is just as common as the meetings of the committees.

Mr. NORRIS. It is common as to bills, but not as to nominations.

Mr. SMITH. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. NORRIS. I call the attention of Senators to the fact that the Judiciary Committee, for instance, while I presided as chairman, had before it nominations of judges for appointment to the Supreme Court of the United States, and nominations of judges for appointment to other courts, in some cases nominations which I opposed in the committee and on the floor of the Senate, and the record will show that some of the nominations were defeated. Never once was it necessary for a member of the committee to move that the committee consider a nomination.

With all that procedure, all that practice, running back for years, as a precedent, what would have happened if some member of the Committee on Agriculture had moved that we take up the nomination of Dr. Tugwell? The chairman of the committee said a while ago he thought the Senator from Montana made the request only in order to see him "blow up." Does any Senator suppose anybody would have blown up if we had made that motion? Was there ever a committee meeting called when the call showed that we were going to consider the nomination of Dr. Tugwell? Not one, so far as I have seen. Never once was such a notice sent out.

Would it have been proper, if there had been a committee call for a special purpose, to take up some other subject when the committee met? Suppose a Senator had received a notice which said, "We are to consider Senate bill so and so", and when he got there, he had asked the committee to take up some other bill; would that have been in order? I wish to call attention to the fact that there is serious doubt about that. Some Senators think it would have been, others think it would not have been.

If Senators will examine the record of the House of Representatives, they will find that that question was raised several years ago, and it aroused the country to quite an extent. It involved a very important bill, where a committee was called in special session by the chairman, after sending out notices to the effect that the committee was called to consider certain legislation.

When the committee met, some member of the committee moved to take up another bill which was not on the card notifying the members of the meeting, a bill for the consideration of which the committee had not been called together. The committee, by a majority vote, took up the bill in accordance with the motion. I have forgotten now what the outcome was in the House of Representatives, but there were at least two members of that committee who received the notice and did not attend the meeting of the committee.

They were opposed to the bill which was reported by the committee at that meeting, and if they had been there, the report would have been defeated. That was the record they made up, that a meeting had been called to consider one bill, and that the committee considered some other bill.

In the constitutions of most of the States it is provided that the Governor of the State may have authority to call special meetings of the legislature, and the constitution usually provides that when the legislature meets it shall consider only such legislation as the Governor included in his proclamation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is a very valuable member of the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman. He knows, from his experience, that we sometimes call a meeting for a special purpose, and sometimes we do not, but he does not pretend to say that when we meet we do not consider other matters and other bills in addition to that for which we were called together, does he?

Mr. NORRIS. No; never in any sense since the Senator has been chairman of the committee.

Mr. SMITH. There never has been such a case, since I have been chairman.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know what the chairman would have ruled if someone had said, "I object to that bill coming up because it is not included in the call." I do not know what would have happened.

Mr. SMITH. I have been a member of the committee on Agriculture and Forestry practically ever since I have been in the Senate. I never have heard the question discussed as to whether it was legal or illegal to depart from the specifications in the call.

Mr. NORRIS. We have had no call in this instance. I am tired of hearing Senators say, "If members of the committee wanted this nomination taken up, why did they not move to take it up?" It was not our duty to do so. Perhaps it was not the duty of the chairman to take it up. Perhaps it is within the province of the chairman to hold it indefinitely. That is what we are going to vote on. That is the question now before the Senate. If the pending motion shall be voted down, it will be practically a decision by the Senate that the chairman of the committee can put a nomination in his pocket, and carry it indefinitely, and never call the committee together to act on it, or ever lay it before the committee.

The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry does not hold regular sessions.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the Senator has no right to make that statement.

Mr. NORRIS. All right; if that statement is wrong, the Senator can correct it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields for a question.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not think I can put what I desire to say in the form of a question. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator cannot take me off the floor in that way.

Mr. SMITH. I do not wish to take the Senator off the floor. I desire to suggest——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield if the Senator desires to ask me a question; and if the Chair and the Senate will permit, I will yield if the question does not exceed 15 minutes in length. I have no objection even to the Senator making a speech in my time if he desires to do so.

Mr. SMITH. I will take the floor in my own time and reply to the Senator who is rarely on the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator says I am rarely on the floor. That is an unkind remark to make. That, of course, ought to settle the vote on this motion.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator said he would yield to a question if it was not more than 15 minutes long.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, I said I would answer the question. I am not objecting to the question. I realize, however, that if we go on as we are now, it will mean that other Senators will ask that I yield, and we shall have a dozen speeches in my time, and I do not want to have that done.

Mr. President, there are two kinds of meetings: regular meetings and special meetings. There have not been any regular meetings of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as I understand, since the nomination of Dr. Tugwell has come to that Committee.

Mr. SMITH. There have been a dozen.

Mr. NORRIS. That may have been, but I did not know anything about them.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is rarely there.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator tell me now when the regular meetings of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry are held?

Mr. SMITH. We have no regular meetings. Will the Senator let me say something within 15 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not have any objection, if the Chair will permit the Senator to do it. Do not ask me about it. Let the Senator address the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. We have had about a dozen meetings. I think the Senator has been at about one or two of them.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that is an unkind remark.

Mr. SMITH. Well, I ask the Senator not to be unkind to me.

Mr. NORRIS. That is an unkind remark, and it is not borne out by the facts.

I have not gone any further than the Senator from South Carolina, but I will take that up later, if necessary. If it is important to know who is present at the meetings, I will say that the meetings at which the most important hearings have been held during this session were held in the absence of the chairman himself.

Mr. SMITH. Because they involved questions in which other Senators were interested and I was not.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be. I do not dispute that at all. I sat there for days and days. I acted as chairman. I saw the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] sit there and act as chairman in the absence of the regular chairman. He took the chair at the chairman's request. I do not criticize the chairman for his absence. He probably was doing more important things than we were doing who were there; but it ill becomes him to talk about absences. I asked the question, and I have received the answer. There have not been any regular meetings of the committee.

Mr. SMITH. We do not have them.

Mr. NORRIS. And there never has been a notice sent out that I have ever seen that advised us of a single meeting at which we were to take up the nomination of Dr. Tugwell—not one.

Mr. SMITH. I have already said so.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. No; Mr. President, I do not yield to anyone right now.

If we had regular meetings, such, for instance, as the Judiciary Committee has every Monday, I concede that at one of those regular meetings it would be in order for any member to move to take up anything which was before the committee; but if the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee were to call a meeting to take up the nomination of Mr. A, we will say, for Chief Justice of the United States, and should send out notices of a special meeting for that purpose, and when the special meeting convened if I should move to take up a Senate bill, and there should be objection to it, I think the chairman would have to sustain the objection, because members of the committee who had been notified of the special meeting would have a right to believe when they received the notice that nothing would be taken up except that which was included in the notice.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, on that point will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator, of course, is perfectly familiar with the fact that as a matter of good practice, if a meeting were called for one purpose and a motion were made to take up any other business before the committee, it certainly would be in order to postpone the matter sought to be taken up to a time certain, and at a meeting called for that purpose. Does the Senator know of any motion ever being made in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, in all the meetings which the Senator has detailed since April 24, to take up the Tugwell nomination?

Mr. NORRIS. No; there was not any such motion made. I desire to say that I am opposed now to going to the Senator from South Carolina and saying to him, "Call a meeting for the purpose of considering the Tugwell nomination." I should have been afraid to do it before today for fear of seeing someone blow up at that request. He might have said, "That is my business. I am chairman of the committee. I do not need any advice of the committee to tell me what my duty is. I know what it is." I confess that it would have been embarrassing to make that kind of a request of the chairman, although, so far as I know, we are, and always have been, on the best of terms.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska further yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I had no thought of suggesting that the Senator from Nebraska or any other member of the committee go to the chairman and request him to call a meeting; but every member of that committee had an undoubted right to bring up any matter pending before the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. I deny that. I deny that that is a certainty, at least. It may be true; but I am of the opinion—the Senate can judge for itself—that when a committee meeting is called for a special purpose, it is very questionable whether the committee has the right, if anyone objects, to take up another matter. Of course, if no objection is made, one can do anything, as we can do here in the Senate, by unanimous consent, when there are only two Senators present. If the point should be made, however, at a special meeting, I believe it would be the duty of the chairman to sustain it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator one further question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator hold that if a committee meeting is called for the purpose of considering one measure which may be before the committee, it is not in order for any member of the committee on any occasion to move to make any measure or nomination a special order of business at a following meeting?

Mr. NORRIS. That might be true, because for that meeting there would be another notice sent out, which would suggest what was to be taken up. That is a different proposition.

Mr. CLARK. So the parliamentary right of any member of the Agricultural Committee who was in favor of Dr. Tugwell's confirmation was never exercised, and no attempt has been made to exercise it.

Mr. NORRIS. If the whole committee has been wrong, everyone has neglected his duty. That is all the more reason why the motion of the Senator from Arkansas should be agreed to and the committee discharged. That committee has had this nomination since the 24th day of April. Senators may blame the condition on the members of the committee if they desire to do so.

They may lay the blame wherever they please. The members of the committee have done nothing. It is admitted they have done nothing. They never have taken it up officially. It seems to me the only remedy on earth the Senate has, if it wants action, is to adopt the motion.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I wish to ask the Senator a question. We have heard a great deal about the rights of the committee. There are many Senators who are not members of the committee. I think probably they might have some right to vote on this question, whether the motion was made in the committee or not. Would it be an insult to the committee, since they do not want to vote, if we should vote to discharge the committee and let us exercise our privilege and our right?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think so; not at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Unfortunately I have been compelled to be absent during most of the debate on this matter. I should like to inquire whether the nomination has in any way ever been brought before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. NORRIS. It is my understanding that it has not been.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has it ever been mentioned?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; it has been mentioned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was any subcommittee ever appointed to consider it?

Mr. NORRIS. The nomination has never been laid before the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Ordinarily, in committees where nominations are pending, if there is opposition to the nominee or to a report, a subcommittee is appointed to look into the matter. Was any subcommittee appointed in this case?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; it has never been considered in that way.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may be entirely wrong in my conception of the functions of a committee, but it has always been my understanding that a committee is the servant of the Senate and not the master of the Senate. Am I right about that?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. That is my idea.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that be true, does not the Senate owe itself a duty to give itself an opportunity to pass upon a nomination which a committee will not report to it?

Mr. NORRIS. I have tried to say that. I do not think the adoption of the motion of the Senator from Arkansas is an insult to the committee. I do not look at it that way. The committee has had the nomination since the 24th day of April. If the Senate wants to take it away from the committee, it certainly has the right to do it. Even if the committee was busy every day with other business, or if it had had hearings on it and found it impossible to reach a conclusion, the Senate would have that right. I think the Senate has a perfect right to take back the nomination at any time. I would not feel offended if it did so. I am going to vote for the motion. I am a member of the committee. I do not feel that the chairman of the committee would have any right to feel offended.

Mr. GLASS and Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Virginia, who rose first.

Mr. GLASS. I merely want to suggest that there are 75 Members of the Senate who are not members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Some of us—I know I am one—would like to know what are the objections to Dr. Tugwell, if there be any.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me answer that question before the Senator proceeds further. I said in the beginning that I think the qualifications of Dr. Tugwell have no bearing upon the pending motion. If the motion is adopted, the nomination of Dr. Tugwell will be placed on the calendar. The adoption of the motion would not confirm Dr. Tugwell.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; but the Senator knows perfectly well that the Senate in open executive session cannot get information that may be desirable as to the qualifications of Dr. Tugwell. I agree that the committee should have acted before now, because it was a matter of common notoriety that Dr. Tugwell has been nominated for the position, and that there were objections of different nature as to his qualifications for the position. The committee should have had hearings and reported to the Senate. There are those of us who are not members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry who happen not to be well informed with reference to the objections to Dr. Tugwell. Some of us are not quite informed as to his qualifications at all, and yet we are supposed to vote upon a question about which I, at least, know nothing, and I venture to say other Senators do not know about it.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be true, and the alternative to that is to do nothing, to adjourn and go home and let the nomination of Dr. Tugwell go by the board.

Mr. GLASS. No; that is not the alternative. It has been suggested by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky that the committee is the servant of the Senate and the Senate is master of the committee. If that be so, if the Senate is master of the committee, why may we not direct the committee to hold a meeting, have hearings, and report the nomination back by a given date?

Mr. NORRIS. I presume that could be done.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I should like to know whether or not it would meet the approval of the Senator from Nebraska and other Senators if the motion were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with instructions that the nomination be reported to the Senate on Monday. Would that meet the approval of the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will make it Tuesday, that would be quite agreeable to me.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well; Tuesday noon.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, with the permission of the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator wait a moment before he submits his request?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say in conclusion, and then the Senator from Arkansas may submit the request, that I have no interest in the nomination. I have no interest any more than any other Senator in what action the Senate may take. I am willing that the Senate take any action it sees fit. I believe if the Senator from Arkansas had not made the motion we would have ended the session without any action. It seems to me only fair to the committee, to the Senate, to the President, and to Dr. Tugwell that we should vote on the nomination one way or the other. That is the only interest I have in it.

I yield now to the Senator from Arkansas to enable him to submit his unanimous-consent request.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending motion be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with instructions to report on the nomination of Rexford G. Tugwell not later than 12 o'clock noon, Tuesday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. DILL. I object.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. DILL. I object. I shall not consent to anything with reference to Dr. Tugwell.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is perfectly apparent that unless some arrangement of this kind be entered into we shall get nowhere with the matter. In view of the objection, I move that my motion to discharge the committee be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with instructions to report on the nomination of Rexford G. Tugwell to be Under Secretary of Agriculture, not later than 12 o'clock noon Tuesday next.

Mr. CLARK. The motion is that the committee report on the nomination?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; that is my request.

Mr. BYRD. The committee may report it either favorably or unfavorably, of course.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, we could not instruct the committee to report either favorably or adversely. The object of the motion, of course, is to get the nomination before the Senate. I ask that my motion be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McGILL. The Senator does not include in his motion anything with reference to a meeting of the committee. I presume the committee will meet tomorrow. I think we should meet tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the instructions shall prevail, the committee will meet at its pleasure, and it will be obligated to report by noon on Tuesday.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, as chairman of the committee, if I am instructed to do so by the Senate—and I presume the members of my committee will vote "yea"—I will call the committee in session on Monday morning at 10 o'clock, and, if they desire, we will stay in session all day Monday and all Tuesday morning up until the time of voting and have a report here at 12 o'clock on Tuesday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. During the course of his remarks he made a statement in criticism of Dr. Tugwell to the effect that he, the Senator from Virginia, had addressed to Dr. Tugwell about a week ago a letter to which he had not received an answer. Since that statement was made I have been informed that Dr. Tugwell has answered the letter, and that his reply to the letter of the Senator from Virginia is in the mail.

Mr. President, I now move that the Senate return to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed legislative session.

PROTECTION OF DEPOSITORS—ARTICLE BY FRANK B. CAHN

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the Baltimore Evening Sun of February 3, 1933, by Frank B. Cahn, entitled "On Protecting Depositors."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ON PROTECTING DEPOSITORS

By Frank B. Cahn

In discussing the enactment of a new State banking law, some of the underlying principles which must be the foundation of any such legislation should be considered. The following are axiomatic: (1) The protection of the depositor is paramount to any and all other considerations; (2) no person, partnership, or corporation has the unconditional inherent right to engage in the business of receiving banking deposits; (3) all persons, partnerships, and corporations, engaged in such banking; are quasi-public institutions charged with a public trust; (4) capital invested in depositary banking is entitled to a reasonable return, consonant with the trust character of the business of accepting deposits. Having in mind these cardinal principles, any proposed banking legislation should consider the safeguards to the public which are outlined below.

As there is no inherent right to engage in depositary banking for private profit, all persons (using "person" in the broad sense of individuals, partnerships, and corporations) who are privileged to receive deposits either as checking or as thrift accounts should be required to make public statements, at frequent intervals, of their financial condition. While many of the private depositary banking firms are soundly managed, and enjoy the confidence of the public, acquired through years of honorable and fair dealing, nevertheless there has been many failures among small firms who have set themselves up as private bankers. The number of these insolvencies could have been lessened by a statutory requirement of periodic examination and frequent public reports of financial condition.

No matter how profitable a banking institution may be, the depositor in no way participates, save in the case of mutual-savings banks. The incentive of profit to the stockholders and proprietors of banks is the usual cause of engaging in unjustified expansion and hazardous undertakings. It is the underlying reason for the direct conflict between the interest of the depositor and the bank.

Some attempt has been made to restrain dangerous activities of banking institutions by the statutory liability of stockholders, imposing an additional liability for a sum equivalent to the par value of the stock which they hold. In street parlance, this is generally known as the "double liability." This double liability, which is in the nature of a guaranty fund for the protection of depositors, has proved ineffective for three reasons. First, it can be and is evaded. Second, it is often uncollectible. Third, the capital of the institution bears no direct relation to the volume of deposits.

Evasion of double liability is effected by carrying bank stocks permanently in the names of dummies, or by making transfer to financially irresponsible persons prior to the time that statutory liability attaches. As a matter of experience, double liability has afforded little or no protection to bank depositors. Statistics show that rarely more than 30 percent of this supposed guaranty fund is ever collected. Recent unpleasant banking experiences in Maryland have emphasized this situation.

Another method of evading the double liability is through the practice of forming holding companies. A holding company may be formed to hold the entire stock of a bank, distributing its own shares in lieu of the bank's shares. Such a holding company has little or no assets, aside from the shares of the specific bank, in its portfolio. A judgment secured against the holding company, in event of insolvency of the bank, is worthless, and the entire double liability to which depositors look as a source of protection, has no effective value.

Full protection to depositors is not secured when a bank has a relatively small capitalization and a large surplus; in other words, a bank having $500,000 capital assets may have the par value of its stock represented by $100,000, and have the remaining $400,000 in its surplus and undivided profit account. In such a case the depositors have the protection of but $100,000 double liability.

To permit a bank, irrespective of the amount of its capital assets, to receive an unlimited volume of deposits is to deprive the depositor of reasonable protection. It is suggested that a depositary bank should be prohibited from accepting a volume of deposits in excess of some fixed ratio to its net current assets. (The term "net current assets" excludes real-estate holdings, furniture and fixtures, and other assets of a similar type, which are not readily realizable.) A practical illustration of the desirability of some established ratio is evidenced by the fact that in some instances deposits in Maryland have been in the ratio of approximately 50 to 1. Notwithstanding the normal soundness of the assets of such a corporation, a shrinkage of 2½ percent in its investments would wipe out the entire current capital—the cushion supposed to protect depositors. No matter how ably such an institution may be managed, its survival is only a matter of luck.

In such a situation where a large volume of deposits is maintained, with a small current capital, the interest of the bank comes into direct conflict with that of the depositor. It is self-evident that the smaller the capital and the larger the volume of deposits, the greater will be the leverage for profit for the bank, and conversely, the depositor's protection is proportionately decreased. A study of many metropolitan banks which are deemed to be sound reveals that the volume of deposits ranges from a minimum of 3½ times to a maximum of 10 times net current assets.

This conflict between the interest of the depositor and that of the bank is further illustrated by the modern practice of depositary banks of setting up affiliated investment corporations. These corporations are used for market operations in stocks and bonds. Through the medium of affiliates there is a possibility, as happened in the years 1928–29, of large profits to the bank in which the depositor has no participation; yet if the capital of the bank is jeopardized by such operations, the protection of the depositor is forfeited.

In connection with thrift or savings deposits particularly, the State should feel the utmost solicitude. Excellent protection and safety have attended thrift- and savings-bank deposits with mutual savings banks. While it may not be desirable to limit savings and thrift deposits to mutual savings banks, other institutions receiving such deposits should be required to segregate the assets representing such deposits, from the general assets of the institution. Such assets should be earmarked as "trust funds" for the benefit of savings depositors, and investments of moneys so deposited should be restricted. Massachusetts, New York, and other States have placed such statutory restrictions upon the investment of savings funds.

It is admittedly much easier to point out the defects of a banking system than to suggest legal, adequate, and appropriate remedies which would protect the depositor, and not impose unnecessary hardship upon the banking institutions. One of the difficulties arises out of the problems involved in the dual banking system of State and National banks in force in this country. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Easton against Iowa, decided that no State law could constitutionally regulate the operations of a national bank. Consequently, if the restrictions imposed through a State law are more burdensome than those imposed by national legislation, State institutions would probably apply for national charters.

There are also many forceful arguments against the desirability of attempting to regulate public-service institutions by means of detailed legislation. This has been recognized in the establishment of the public service commission which regulates public utilities, such as electric, gas, and telephone companies. Banks are also quasi-public institutions; therefore it seems reasonable to apply this precedent to the regulation of banks. Such a commission should have authority to establish ratios of current net assets to deposits; to promulgate regulations governing the segregation of thrift and savings accounts from general commercial deposits; to restrict or prohibit loaning of funds to directors or officials of institutions; to authorize the establishment of new banks for public convenience and necessity; to supervise clearing houses; to maintain an auditing department; and generally to regulate the conduct of the business in the interest of the public.

Delegating such authority to a commission would be better than crystallizing by detailed legislation the views of the moment. It would provide flexibility in times of emergency which would not otherwise be secured.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 33 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Saturday, June 9, 1934, at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 8, 1934

(Legislative day of Monday, June 4, 1934)

The recess having expired, at 11 o'clock a.m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

PRE-TRAINED LEGISLATORS IN CONGRESS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to append thereto an article from a magazine known as "State Government." It is of some importance. It gives the names of a number of Members of Congress who had previous service in State legislatures and analyzes them. It is not very long and would be informative to the House and to the country at large.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. It is really a tabulation of the Membership of the House, showing their former status as State legislators.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Exactly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, State Government, a magazine published by the American Legislators' Association, comprising 500 State legislators, contained in its May number a very interesting article showing the number of Members in the present Senate and House of Representatives who had previous experience in their State legislatures. A similar situation existed in the Seventy-second Congress. It points out that 34 percent of the present Senators and 26 percent of the Representatives saw service in their State legislature, or stated otherwise, 35 Senators and 149 Representatives received such preliminary training with an average service of 4.4 years in their State bodies.

It is also interesting to note that of those 184 Members of the present Congress, every State is represented except Wyoming, and that of the 184 ex-State legislators, 128 are Democrats, 52 Republicans, and 4 Farmer-Laborites. It might be said in passing that the majority party is more particular in picking trained apprentices. The article mentioned is as follows:

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-FOUR OF US IN CONGRESS

(Possibly Congress has its troubles. But possibly it would have even more of them without its pretrained legislators)

[Data by John Brown Mason, Colorado Woman's College]

The never-ending marvel of representative government has no more fascinating feature than the variety of men whom the people select to represent them:

Rich man, poor man, beggar man, thief.

Doctor, lawyer, merchant, and representative of every other conceivable occupation.

The electorate chooses an equally surprising combination of men for its State legislators and for its Congressmen. But an impressive number of those elected to Congress have been through the State mill.

State Government considers this a good sign. In fact, only the fear of encountering a serious-minded reader prevents us from suggesting an amendment to the United States Constitution providing that no one shall be eligible for Congress until he has served in the legislature of his own State. The candidate would then know more about government, and his constituents would know more about him.

Apparently a large slice of the 40,000,000 American voters share these sentiments to some extent; at any rate, when they have a chance to elect to either branch of Congress a man who has been schooled as a State legislator, they very frequently—perhaps they usually—do elect him. Not always is there a State legislator's name on the ballot, but the electorate has nevertheless succeeded in filling more than a third of the seats in the north wing of the Nation's Capitol, and also more than a third of those in the south wing, with ex-State legislators.

The presence of such a large proportion of these gentlemen is not merely a peculiarity of the Seventy-third Congress. State Government's faithful readers—Heaven bless them—will recall that a similar situation was revealed by the study of the Seventy-second Congress made in the fall of 1932 and published in the January 1933 issue of the magazine.

The list which follows was compiled for State Government by John Brown Mason, professor of history at the Colorado Woman's College and member of the staff of the City College of the University of Denver. It shows that 34 percent of the Nation's present Senators, 36 percent of its Representatives have learned the ropes "back home." Since this is the educational number of this magazine, we ought to say that these Members of Congress have had vocational training, and that they have received an excellent form of "adult education for Congressmen."

When the roll is called in the Nation's Capitol today, it includes the names of 35 United States Senators and 149 United States Representatives who recall the eras when they shouted "here" in the humbler halls in St. Paul, Frankfort, Nashville, Oklahoma City, Columbus, Trenton, Little Rock, Salem, and the rest. The average length of time which they served in State legislatures was, Senator, 3.2 years; Representatives, 5.6 years. In the two houses of Congress combined, the count of the ex-State legislators shows 184 Members, 35 percent of all the Members, 4.4 years' average service in the home capitol.

The 7,500 State legislators of today who constitute the American Legislators' Association, salute these 149 United States Representatives and these 35 United States Senators—our fellows of yesterday who have gone on to greater responsibilities and to abuse upon a larger scale.

WAR MINERALS RELIEF CLAIMS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the House to the fact that the Committee on Rules has granted a rule for the consideration of the bill H.R. 7984. In a few days the Committee on Rules will submit that rule to the House for consideration. H.R. 7984 is a bill for what is known as "relief of the war mineral claims." I have made a complete analysis of the bill and ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a complete history of the bill, which I respectfully request all members to read, so that they will be thoroughly conversant with the legislation when it is presented to the House.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in that respect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of this bill—H.R. 7984—I wish to show, first of all, that it is not intended to provide for the payment of "interest" on any claim or claims or on any amount of money due from the Government to these citizens.

While it is true that the Supreme Court of the United States has in the case of the Seaboard Airline Railroad and other cases coming before the Court under sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of act of March 2, 1919 (40 Stat. 1272), ruled that "just compensation" must include interest to the date of payment by the Government, the war minerals relief claims filed under section 5 of the same act seek to recover only "losses suffered by reason of moneys expended and obligations incurred in compliance with demand of the Government to supply the urgent needs of the Nation in the prosecution of the war." It will therefore be seen that while this bill necessarily refers to the losses covered thereby as "interest", the intention of the bill in no way relates to or authorizes the payment by the Government of interest on the amount of the claim or such part thereof as has been disallowed by the Secretary, but simply authorizes the Secretary to include in his adjustments and payments the losses sustained by reason of interest paid and due to be paid on capital borrowed, as a necessary obligation incurred within the statutory period, to enable the producer to comply with Government demand to supply the needs of the Nation in the prosecution of the war.

The intention of the Congress, as expressed in the several war minerals relief statutes, is plain and unambiguous. They repeatedly use the words "just compensation", "net losses", "justice and equity", and similar expressions which show the intention of the Congress has been to do justice and equity and deal fairly with its patriotic citizens who in time of great stress and emergency responded to the call of the Government and expended their time and their money and their properties to supply the minerals urgently needed for the manufacture of munitions, arms, and armaments absolutely necessary before the Government could take any action whatever in cooperation with its allies and do its part in the prosecution of the war.

Awards under the war minerals relief statutes have been sometimes referred to as "gratuitous." The use of such a word in connection with the payment by the Government of its just obligations to these citizens which have repeatedly been found by both the Congress and the courts to be due them is abhorrent to any fair-minded man familier with the situation and with the urgent necessities for these minerals which confronted the Government in its time of emergency. Appeal to its citizens by many agencies of the Government, shortly after it entered the World War, resulted in prompt and patriotic response and in abundant supply of these four needed minerals for which before the war the Government was practically entirely dependent upon importations, which importations by reason of the shortage of ships had been entirely cut off. Not only did the Government receive the full benefit of these emergency operations of its citizens in time of stress and peril, but these properties which were theretofore in undeveloped or partially developed state, were opened and developed into enterprises of commercial importance; in fact, no claim can be allowed or paid to cover any losses sustained unless the "expenditures made or the obligations incurred were in good faith upon properties proved to be of commercial importance. No losses due to speculative investments are reimbursable. No losses of profits, either actual or potential, are reimbursable. In other words, the provisions of the war minerals relief statutes are clearly worded to provide for the payment only of losses suffered by reason of moneys expended and obligations incurred in compliance with the demand of the Government to supply the needs of the Nation in the prosecution of the war. On the other hand, the statutes are equally emphatic in providing that net losses so suffered shall be paid in such amount as claimants are in justice and equity entitled to receive.

After most elaborate engineering investigations and reports, the War Department had its statisticians in the Department of the Interior for more than a year tabulating and compiling the data obtained by these investigations of these new mineral-producing properties, which had been developed at their own expense by its patriotic citizens. These data have been filed away in the War Department, available for immediate use in case of another emergency. In case of necessity, these properties can again be brought into almost immediate production for the benefit of the Government. How then, in any sense of the word, can repayment by the Government of the losses sustained by these citizens, in opening and operating these properties for the benefit of the Government, be considered as gratuitous? If they are not gratuitous, then just compensation is due from the Government. If they are gratuitous, then under repeated court decisions and acts of Congress, these relief statutes must be construed liberally in favor of the claimants.

I now propose to show you that notwithstanding the intention of the Congress, as expressed in no less than five acts passed for the liquidation of these claims, and in spite of no less than five decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States on questions of law involved, that gross injustices have been done to these claimants. They have been dragged before committees of Congress, in hearings, which in almost every case have resulted in reports from the committees censuring officials and subordinates of the Department of the Interior for their failure to interpret and administer the acts as Congress had intended, but the courts also have censured and criticized the practices of solicitors of the Department of the Interior and solicitors of the Department of Justice for their unethical efforts to defeat the claimants in court and to deny them what Congress intended that they should have.

Shortly after the United States entered the war, the Secretary of the Interior, the War Industries Board, the Shipping Board, the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and other agencies of the Government actively engaged in the prosecution of the war, being informed by the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines and the geological surveys of many States of the occurrence and location of mineral deposits of pyrites, manganese, chrome, and tungsten, requested and demanded owners and others interested to open and develop these properties to supply the needs of the Nation. Upon being informed in reply that such mine enterprises were hazardous and probably could not endure after normal conditions had been restored, by reason of probable resumption of importations, the Secretary of the Interior promised to sponsor legislation for the protection of these enterprises during the war and for sufficient length of time after the war by purchase of their output and in other ways sufficient to amortize these investments then being demanded by the Government. Upon these assurances, many citizens responded whole-heartedly and proceeded with their own properties or with their own funds or with funds borrowed on their own credit, in some instances from financial institutions actually found by the Secretary of the Interior to make the necessary loans. In some cases, as, for instance, in the case of the Chestatee Pyrites & Chemical Corporation, of Atlanta, Ga., not only did he request enlarged production from this extensive property but upon being informed by its owners that they could not finance an enlarged operation, he appealed to financial interests, the Ashcraft, Wilkinson Co., of Atlanta, Ga., to use their influence with the Chestatee Pyrites & Chemical Corporation to enlarge their operation; and furthermore, he requested them to finance them, and subsequently, after such financing was done, the authorized representative of the Secretary approved the loans made, stating the enterprise was financed on a fine, clean basis and also Government agents completely directed and fully approved the expenditure of the moneys borrowed.

In fact, therefore, the Government was, and is, to all intents and purposes, a party to this loan, and therefore morally, if not legally, liable for both principal and interest. In this particular case the principal of the loan expended and lost has recently, under decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, been paid as a loss reimbursable within the meaning of the statutes, but the interest paid and accrued remaining unpaid has been allowed and paid only to the date of March 2, 1919, in wanton disregard of the facts that the loan did not mature until many years thereafter. The absurdity of such a construction or interpretation of the war minerals relief statutes must be apparent to everyone.

Complying with his promise, the then Secretary of the Interior, the late Franklin K. Lane, caused to be introduced in the Sixty-fifth Congress H.R. 11259, entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of those ores, metals, and minerals which have formerly been largely imported or of which there is or may be an adequate supply." Section 1 of this act names many minerals and metallic substances which it was then thought were necessary in the prosecution of the war. Among these were pyrites, necessary for the production of sulphuric acid for munitions; manganese, chrome, and tungsten, necessary for the hardening and toughening of steel for arms, armaments, and the like. These minerals were thereinafter referred to as "necessaries."

Section 2 authorized the President—or his representative—to purchase such necessaries or to contract for the same or to take over or to direct the production or the purchase of same, to provide or improve transportation facilities, and generally to cooperate with producers to the end that production might be hastened and enlarged.

Section 3 provided that just compensation should be paid, and that if the compensation so allowed be unsatisfactory to the person, firm, or corporation entitled thereto, that they should be paid 75 percent of the amount so determined and should be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as added to 75 percent would make up such amount as would be just compensation.

Section 4 provided for penalties against any who failed or refused or neglected to comply with any order or requisition, and so forth.

Section 5 appropriated the sum of $500,000 for administration expenses.

Section 6 appropriated the sum of $50,000,000 as a revolving fund to carry out the purposes of the act.

Section 7 particularly authorized the President or his representative to exercise every power or authority necessary for the purposes of the act.

The other sections, 8 to 12, inclusive, simply stated and strengthened the purposes of the act and need not here be further referred to.

This act passed the House of Representatives promptly, but was delayed in the Senate by reason of the press of other war emergency legislation and by reason of what is now apparent, that patriotic citizens did not wait for the passage of the act for their protection, but accepted, in good faith, the assurances given them against loss, and proceeded whole-heartedly and were actually producing the needed minerals long before this act came up for Senate consideration.

The act finally passed the Senate and was approved October 5, 1918, only about 1 month before the armistice, at which time it was beginning to be apparent that the war would shortly be ended. Under the authority conferred upon the President, he appointed the Secretary of the Interior to administer the act, whereupon the Secretary of the Interior at or about the date of the armistice, upon his own initiative and upon the advice of the Attorney General, decided that he would not administer the act, that he would not purchase minerals nor do any of the other things that the act authorized and directed him to do for the protection of the producers, as he had promised, giving as his reason that the war was over and that the Government no longer had need for these minerals and that if he should proceed to administer the act, at least the whole $50,000,000 appropriation would be wasted and a loss to the Government.

Whereupon a convention of producers from more than 35 States was called and held in the city of Washington, at which appeared many Congressmen and Senators and representatives of the Government from the Department of the Interior, the War Industries Board, and others, and assurances were given, particularly by the Secretary of the Interior, that if producers did not proceed against the Government, as they were authorized to do under the terms of that act, that legislation would be sponsored to permit him, out of the $50,000,000 appropriation carried by that act, to pay to the producers the net losses they had suffered by reason of their whole-hearted compliance with the requests and demands of the Government agencies during the war.

Accordingly, therefore, a bill was introduced in the Senate and was subsequently enacted into law as section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1919, entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes." The provisions of this section have already been referred to, and it is not, therefore, necessary to refer here to them again, except to reemphasize the wording therein, which emphatically and repeatedly provided that net losses should be reimbursed This act set aside $8,500,000 of the $50,000,000 original appropriation for the payment of net losses, and the balance, to wit, $41,500,000 was by subsequent deficiency bill covered back into Treasury surplus. It will thus be seen that the action of the Secretary of the Interior acquiesced in or accepted by these mineral producers resulted in an immediate saving to the Government of $41,500,000. It is here pertinent to remark and to emphasize the fact that if the Department of the Interior had, in accordance with the provision of this section 5, proceeded promptly to adjust and liquidate and pay the claims, and had paid to claimants the amounts paid within the last 2 years under decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, which show that these amounts should have been paid in 1919, the $8,500,000 set aside from the original appropriation would have been sufficient to include all awards, and the administration of the war minerals relief acts would have long since been concluded without the continuing accruals of interest against those claimants who borrowed money in order to enable them to comply with the demand of the Government during the war.

In the original administration of the act the Department of the Interior ruled out many items of loss by reason of their erroneous interpretation of the law. Among these were interest paid and due to be paid on borrowed capital and moneys expended for the purchase or lease of properties.

These denials and these errors in interpretation of the law being brought to the attention of Congress, during the year 1920 in exhaustive hearings, at which appeared not only claimants but officials and subordinates of the Department of the Interior, the committee reported an amendment which finally passed both House and Senate and was approved November 23, 1921. The report accompanying this bill said, among other things—

> The committee is of the opinion that the commission, appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, erred in its interpretation of the legislative intent, its interpretation and application of the provisions of the act, and the application of the provisions of the law to the facts * * *.

And, further—

> The language of the act is clear, and if interpreted as the courts have repeatedly held such statutes should be interpreted, the committee is of the opinion that the purpose of Congress can be fully carried out and a just and equitable settlement can be had of every legitimate claim.

Proceeding under this amendment, the Department of the Interior reopened claims and made some additional small awards, but, adhering to previous rulings on questions of law, still denied items of loss due to interest paid on borrowed capital and property purchased.

Being denied these losses, the case of the Chestatee Pyrites & Chemical Corporation was carried into court on the subject of interest on borrowed capital, and the case of Logan Rieves on the subject of purchase or lease of property. In 1924 the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and the court of appeals decided both questions in favor of the claimants. The Government appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that Court decided that the lower courts had erred in taking jurisdiction; that the decision of the Secretary of the Interior on questions of law was conclusive and final, no matter how erroneous it might be.

After the decision of the court of appeals in favor of the claimant, Congress again acted and after being informed by the Secretary of the Interior that, if interest on borrowed capital and purchase price of property was to be refunded in accordance with the decision of these courts that additional funds would be necessary. Whereupon Congress passed the amendment approved June 7, 1924, as follows:

> That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to lawfully pay adjudicated claims arising under the provisions of the so-called "war minerals relief acts" * * * the limitation in said act on the aggregate amount to be disbursed thereunder in the payment of said claims is hereby repealed.

Thus restoring the original appropriation to such extent as necessary for the payment of awards as provided for by the previous acts.

The attention of Congressmen and Senators being again called to the outrageous, unjust, and inexcusable way claimants had been treated in the prosecution of their claims, the tremendous expense and unnecessary trouble and anxiety they had been put to in the prosecution of their claims, the Senate of the United States, on May 28, 1928, passed Senate Resolution 263, requesting the Secretary—

> To transmit to the Senate copies of all rulings, regulations, and promulgations which had been followed in the administration of said statute, together with all opinions as to the law which have been rendered by commissions or commissioners, solicitors of the Department of the Interior or their assistants, and Attorneys General of the United States or their solicitors or assistants.

This resolution being complied with by the Secretary of the Interior by letter dated November 14, 1928, all such rules and regulations and decisions were transmitted and were printed as Senate Document No. 224, Seventieth Congress, second session, being nearly 150 pages. Fortunately, therefore, all these rules and regulations, and so forth, are of permanent record before the Congress. Decisions against claimants on questions both of law and of fact are absurd and ridiculous in the extreme, and anyone sufficiently interested to read them cannot fail to see what rank injustice has been done to these patriotic citizens and what unnecessary expense and trouble and anxiety they have been put to in the prosecution of their claims.

It is here again pertinent to point out that almost every one of these adverse decisions on questions of law have, within the last 2 or 3 years, been affirmatively decided by the Supreme Court of the United States against the Secretary of the Interior in favor of claimants. It is therefore easy to understand on the subject of interest paid and accrued on borrowed capital, as covered by the pending bill, H.R. 7984, how it has grown to such amount that it is estimated and is shown in the bill that approximately $1,250,000 will now be required to pay these additional losses suffered solely by reason of erroneous, arbitrary, technical, unreasonable decisions against the claimants in the early administration of the Relief Act.

Without going further into detail in this mass of evidence, branding those who had been intrusted to do justice and equity to these claimants with unwarranted niggardly decisions against claimants, one or two instances may be cited as illustrations. On page 57 the question of interest on borrowed capital being submitted to Assistant Solicitor, Mr. Black, after giving citations as to court decisions and acts of Congress as to interest on borrowed capital, he stated:

> I believe, therefore, that as a strict legal proposition, claims for interest under the war minerals relief acts actually paid by claimants at legal rates of interest to obtain funds for operating properties are properly repayable under said acts.

The Commission declined to accept this interpretation and denied such losses. Thereafter Mr. Black, in connection with another case, again rendered this opinion, but acquiesced with the Commission that since interest had theretofore been denied as a matter of convenient administration, denials of such items should continue.

Pages 58 to 67 of this document, bearing on the Chestatee Co.'s case, are particularly illuminating as to the rank injustices that had been done this and other claimants. On these pages are spread the findings of the Secretary of the Interior on the subject of interest on borrowed capital. On page 62:

> In this particular case * * * the then Secretary of the Interior personally requested one of the claimants to operate the properties on a big scale, which claimant at first declined to do unless the Government should underwrite the venture. This, of course, was impossible; and, after some delay, the Secretary, through his personal agent, requested Ashcraft and Wilkinson to use their influence to induce claimant to enlarge his operation, and further he asked them to assist in financing him. Ashcraft and Wilkinson did so use their influence, and with success; and did finance claimant, for which financing claimant is obligated for a large amount.

Again, on page 64, the Secretary states:

> The amount of money required to meet the Government's demands was so great as to make the securing of it by ordinary means almost impossible. The activities of the Government to induce Ashcraft and Wilkinson to finance claimant so that war needs might be met quickly and in large measure were personal, direct, and effective. The fact that Secretary Lane, who, himself, had a part not only in the stimulation of claimant but through suggestion in the financing, recognized that Ashcraft and Wilkinson had performed a service to the Government is evidence of that service.

Again, on page 67, it is stated:

In reviewing this claim I have been struck by the magnitude of the expenditures and the possibilities of output. The very bigness of it had tended to lead examiners unconsciously to fail to give claimant full justice. * * * The records show that the Secretary of the Interior, realizing, no doubt, that this property presented opportunities for the biggest production of pyrites in the entire country, used every means in his power to persuade the claimant to develop it. * * * It is true that he could not and did not guarantee claimant against loss, but his full influence, short of underwriting the project, was exerted. Always, too, there was a realization that claimant, in responding to Government request, will suffer great financial loss notwithstanding the generous provisions of the War Minerals Relief Act.

It is a conspicuous fact that a large part of the loss suffered by the Chestatee Corporation over and above the payments made to it and referred to here, consists of interest paid by the corporation on the large amount of capital supplied the corporation by the Ashcraft, Wilkinson Co., in compliance with the request to them from the Secretary of the Interior.

Throughout this Senate Document No. 224, above referred to, appear many other rulings and decisions equally as unjust and unfair to other claimants on other items.

Congressmen and Senators, feeling thoroughly outraged at the actions of the Department of the Interior, as revealed in this Senate document, again introduced a bill and held extensive hearings during January 26 and 27 and February 2, 5, and 8, and again on March 7 and 14, 1928, and again early in 1929. At these hearings appeared not only claimants but also the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior, and the War Minerals Commissioner. All of these gentlemen stated that the Department of the Interior would approve a bill referring questions of law to the courts, particularly as to the disputed questions of interest on borrowed capital and purchase price of property. They stated that with these questions settled in two or three cases the Department could and would then proceed to a prompt settlement of all cases in accordance with the controlling decisions in these cases. These hearings and the report of the committee resulted in the passage of the act approved February 13, 1929, which act conferred jurisdiction on the same courts which had affirmatively decided these questions in favor of the claimants in 1924.

After the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior again insisted that the Chestatee Corporation case above cited should again be carried to the courts as a test case, and furthermore demanded that the several items of law involved in this case be separated into two distinct court actions; one on the subject of losses due to interest paid on borrowed capital and the other as to five other questions of law of lesser importance. By stipulation it was agreed that these minor questions involved in the second case were to be held in the court in abeyance, pending decisions in the other cases, which decisions should be controlling. Almost 2 years later, after the other cases had been decided, this agreement was repudiated and the Chestatee Corporation was required to carry this case to the courts also at great expense and loss of time. It was subsequently won in the Supreme Court and all of the Chestatee Corporation's contentions on questions of law were affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In this case the Secretary of the Interior filed as exhibits to his answer certain previous findings as to these items which have hereinabove been quoted from Senate Document 224, Seventieth Congress, second session. In the trial court the assistant solicitor, Mr. Wallace, attempted to show that these exhibits were not part of the record, notwithstanding the fact that they had been filed as exhibits to the Government answer. They were at the moment in the hands of the court, Mr. Justice O'Donaghue. Upon insistance of Mr. Wallace that these exhibits should not be recognized, the court abruptly suggested to counsel for the Chestatee Corporation that Mr. Wallace might be cited to the District Bar Association for unethical practice. Counsel for the Chestatee Corporation declined with thanks to the court, saying that his interest was only to see that justice and equity was done his client. Whereupon the decree of the court was amended to include specifically the exhibits under discussion.

The Court of Appeals affirmed the lower court, and, being carried by the Government to the Supreme Court, that Court affirmed the lower courts, and in the course of its opinion by Mr. Justice McReynolds, said:

Counsel for respondent correctly states the issue presented to the trial court * * * are the losses suffered for expenditure for the items involved here within the provisions of the act of October 5, 1918, amended and supplemented by the act of March 2, 1919 * * * and with the issue as stated, the only showing required is that a claim for such losses was made and that such claim was disallowed because of the belief of the petitioner that the law did not permit such allowances.

And further the Court said, criticizing the answer filed by the Government—

The exhibits show what was really done and the reasons therefor. Conflicting general statements in the answer must yield, and it seems proper to add that if these answers of the Government had been more carefully prepared with purposes to disclose to the Court all relevant facts and circumstances, unnecessary difficulties would have been avoided. * * * The exhibits were correctly treated as parts of the amended answer. * * * The petition here for certiorari does not mention the conflicting views in respect to the exhibits or deal with them as parts of the record. It failed adequately to advise us concerning the real situation. But to avoid possible misunderstanding it has seemed best to retain jurisdiction rather than to dismiss the writ because improvidently granted.

From the above affirmative decision of the Supreme Court, in favor of the Chestatee Corporation, it will be seen that not only has the Congress, through reports of committees, adversely criticized officials and subordinates of the Department of the Interior in the administration of the War Minerals Relief Acts, but the Supreme Court of the United States has also severely criticized solicitors of the Department of the Interior and of the Department of Justice for unfair, ambiguous, and irregularly drawn answers.

The Chestatee Corporation case on the subject of interest, which had been previously affirmatively decided by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia might fairly have been, by stipulation, carried through these two courts by a simple, prompt affirmation of their previous decisions, but the solicitors of the Department of the Interior, refusing this fair course of procedure, demanded this case again be carried through all the courts, which was done; and nearly 2 years later, to wit, on December 7, 1931, the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the lower courts and decided the question of "interest on borrowed capital" to be a loss reimbursable within the meaning of the act of March 2, 1919, as amended. In the course of this opinion, the Court, by Mr. Justice Butler, said:

The amount of interest that at the time of the passage of the Relief Act of March 2, 1919, had been paid or incurred by relator for money borrowed and lost in producing and preparing to produce pyrites upon the specified conditions is to be taken into the account in determining its net loss. * * * It constitutes a part of relators' expenditures and cost of the undertaking and so is within the terms of the section as amended. * * * It must be shown clearly that such interest was paid or the obligation incurred by relator at the instance of one of the specified governmental agencies.

Here then is an interpretation by the Supreme Court of the United States that interest paid and due to be paid on borrowed capital by reason of the obligation incurred within the statutory period is a loss reimbursable within the meaning of the act of March 2, 1919. There does not appear in this opinion nor anywhere in any of the war minerals relief acts any indication that Congress intended to limit as to time or amount obligations legitimately incurred by claimants in order to enable them to comply with the request or demand of the Government to produce these minerals.

The mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States going down to the supreme court of the district, that court issued writ of mandamus directing the Secretary of the Interior to include in his adjustment and payment of losses interest paid and obligated to be paid on borrowed capital without any indication whatever that any time limit was intended as to maturity dates of interest obligations. Whereupon the Secretary of the Interior on or about December 31, 1931, sent out a questionnaire, one question of which required a statement by claimant as to the amount of interest which had been paid in cash on borrowed capital and the amount of interest which had accrued to the date of questionnaire at that time remaining unpaid. The Chestatee Corporation promptly furnished sworn answers to all questions and questionnaires, exhibiting the notes and renewals thereof, given from time to time, showing checks and other evidences of interest paid and accrued. Finally, on March 14, 1932, without any intimation that any cut-off date as to interest had ever been contemplated, an award of interest was tendered, computed only to the date of the passage of the relief act March 2, 1919, which was finally tendered by the Secretary "without prejudice to further recovery of interest after said date" and accepted by the Chestatee Corporation as interest payment to March 2, 1919, without prejudice to further recovery.

The Secretary of the Interior refusing to include in this payment any interest which had accrued after the date of March 2, 1919, notwithstanding the fact he had determined such amount to be in accordance with the claim as presented by the Chestatee Corporation. The Chestatee Corporation was again required to carry the question as to cut-off date through the courts. The lower courts as theretofore decided the question in favor of the Chestatee Corporation. The court of appeals saying, in the course of its opinion by Mr. Justice Van Orsdel, the following:

It further appears as a matter of fact that the principal sum claimed by the relator had been borrowed and lost and had not been paid on March 2, 1919, and was not then due. Petitioner was obligated to pay the principal sum and this loss has been conceded by the Secretary to be a loss within the act. It is contended that the corporation was equally obligated on that date to pay the interest. Principal and interest together * * * constituted in the aggregate relator's loss and what it had contracted to pay. * * * An examination of the statute fails, in our opinion, to disclose any intention on the part of Congress to limit the recovery of interest paid or incurred on obligations allowable under the provisions of the 1919 act. This court in the Work case (54 App., supra), construing the language of the 1919 act, held that interest paid or obligated to be paid constituted an element of the expenses incurred and allowable under the act. This holding was approved by this court in the later case of United States v. Wilbur, supra. * * * The amount of the principal sum being established * * * the interest payable thereon can be ascertained at the same time and readily computed at the time of final payment. * * * In the present case, the principal sum was borrowed and lost and had not been paid on March 2, 1919, and was not then due. Relator, however, was under obligation to pay this principal sum, which is conceded to be a loss within the act, and he was likewise under obligation to pay the interest incurred in the creation of this obligation. In other words, relator was as much obligated on that date to pay the interest as it was to pay the principal. The aggregate of two items, at time of payment by the Government, constitute the net loss. If relator could not make claim for the interest because it was not payable at that time, then, by analogous reasoning, relator could not be compensated for the principal debt which was not due and payable at that time. The justice and equity in the one case is equal and parallel to that in the other.

This case being carried by the Government to the Supreme Court of the United States, that Court, in its opinion by Mr. Justice Brandeis, handed down May 29, 1933, construing and interpreting the act of March 2, 1919, and amendments thereto, said, among other things:

The method of determining the net losses during a particular period or a particular adventure is well settled.

It must be perfectly plain that these war minerals operations were particularly hazardous "adventures", started in compliance with demand of the Government to supply its urgent needs and terminated when these needs were over and there was no more market for the output of these adventures.

Accepted accounting methods for the determination of profits or losses of a particular adventure must include consideration of all elements in connection with the said adventure; that is to say, all assets and all liabilities, including those liabilities or obligations which may not have matured until after all operations ceased. The loss sustained or suffered in such adventure cannot be limited only to payments and accruals up to the time of the termination of the adventure but must include all "obligations incurred", including loans and interest thereon, in connection with or as a result of the adventure, to the date of payment. On the other hand, the Supreme Court in this opinion affirming the decision of the Secretary in his interpretation of the act, as to cut-off date for interest March 2, 1919, said that the language of the act of March 2, 1919, wherein the use of the words "losses suffered by reason of 'obligations incurred'", meant losses suffered by reason of "obligations accrued" only to the date of the passage of the act.

No word has ever been uttered either by Congress or the Secretary of the Interior or the Department of Justice or any of the courts against the "justice and equity" of including interest paid on borrowed capital as a loss within the meaning of the statutes, but the interpretation of the Supreme Court of these statutes as to a cut-off date necessitates a further act of Congress to more clearly state its intention when it passed the act of March 2, 1919, and the several amendments.

Let me impress this one fact upon you that the act of 1918 provided to pay claimants "just compensation", and the Supreme Court of the United States, in the opinion of Mr. Justice McReynolds, has stated the act of 1918 to be the governing statute.

The amendment of 1919 provided that "net losses" should be paid, being in effect an interpretation of the Congress as the measure of "just compensation" provided by the previous act.

Until, therefore, all "net losses", including those suffered by reason of "obligations incurred" have been paid, neither the "just compensation" provided for in the act of 1918, nor the "net losses" provided for by the amendment of 1919, have been paid or discharged by the Government.

There is no cut-off date for "net losses." Congress itself in the amendment of 1919 fixed its own cut-off date as the date of the armistice, wherein it said that only expenditures made and obligations incurred theretofore might be included in the adjustment of losses, but this did not intend to limit any reasonable date of any obligation incurred in this all-embracing phrase.

To do equity and justice to these claimants who responded patriotically to the call of the Government in that time of great emergency, it is necessary for this bill to be enacted.

NUMBER OF ARMED CRIMINALS IN COUNTRY

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the following statement was prepared at my request by the Honorable William Stanley, the assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, and is self-explanatory:

Congressman STEPHEN M. YOUNG, from Ohio, while discussing the crime bills on the floor of the House on May 5, criticized and questioned a recent statement by the Attorney General that "armed criminals in this country outnumber the Army, Navy, and the Marine Corps in a ratio of 2 to 1." The Congressman stated "any of us should repudiate the assertion that there are anything like 200,000 gangsters and thugs and gunmen rampant in this country." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 78, p. 8138.)

It will be noted that the Attorney General referred to armed "criminals", while the Congressman referred to armed "gansters, etc." A criminal is a person who has committed a serious crime. A gangster, in the common acceptance of that term, is a member of a gang of criminals. There are criminals who are not gangsters.

The statement actually made by the Attorney General was based upon the following facts:

Crime reports from the police departments of 1,264 cities in the United States, having a total population of approximately 50,000,000, show that during 1933 the number of murders, robberies, aggravated assaults, and burglaries totaled 266,898. While in some instances one person may have committed more than one crime, that fact is counterbalanced by the participation in many instances of two or more individuals in the joint commission of a single offense. Again, it is very likely true that some of the persons committing crimes were unarmed, but this factor is balanced by the number of armed individuals committing other offenses, such as kidnaping, larceny, etc.

The foregoing statistics cover a population of slightly less than 50,000,000. Doubling the above-mentioned number of criminals gives a figure for the entire country of 533,796. This estimate represents a total population slightly under 100,000,000, whereas the population of the country is approximately 126,000,000. This factor more than overcomes the consideration that the crime rate for urban centers is higher than for rural areas.

The total personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps is approximately 240,000. It is obvious, therefore, that the Attorney General's statement, startling as it may seem, is not only accurate but conservative, based upon actual crime reports compiled by the Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice.

UTILITIES INVESTIGATION BY FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time for the purpose of referring to some remarks which were made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN], the other day, criticizing the Federal Trade Commission in its utility investigations, and in which he took occasion to criticize the President of the United States on account of a certain letter which he did not present to the House. Insofar as the investigation of utilities is concerned, the Federal Trade Commission has had this investigation in progress since 1928, and it has been under the direct charge of the Commission's chief counsel, judge Robert E. Healy. His principal assistant in the investigations is Col. W. T. Chantland, associate counsel. Judge Healy is a Republican, a former justice of the Supreme Court of Vermont, and was appointed chief counsel of the Commission in 1928 during the administration of President Coolidge. Colonel Chantland is also a Republican from the State of Iowa. He was with the Commission prior to the World War, served in that war, was later an attorney in the Department of Justice, and was reappointed to the Federal Trade Commission in 1927. With respect to Mr. McFADDEN's information that Joe Baker came to the Commission "as a trusted man of the administration", supposedly to suppress or censor news, I think the House is familiar with the facts concerning Mr. Baker's appointment to the Commission's staff. I personally know that Mr. Baker joined the Commission's staff on January 15 last, and that he was elected by unanimous vote of the Commission on the recommendation of Commissioner Ewin L. Davis, who was for 14 years an able and respected Member of the House of Representatives, and who knew Mr. Baker throughout that service, which acquaintanceship caused him to make the recommendation for Mr. Baker's appointment. The President had nothing in the world—and I have some personal knowledge of that fact—to do with it except to issue an Executive order approving the appointment as was necessary to be done because of the Economy Act.

Mr. McFADDEN conveyed the impression in his remarks that in the case of the Cities Service Co., the Commission had furnished representatives of that company with copies of the reports made of that company. The same practice was employed in the case of the Cities Service Co. as in all other utility companies under investigation; that is, they are furnished with a copy of the report of the examiner who made the investigation, in order that they may know what is to be placed in the record and may have opportunity to call attention to any errors or make any objections if they feel that the examiner's report is unjust or incorrect. This has been the practice throughout the inquiry, for the reason that this is an investigation and not a persecution or prosecution.

Mr. Speaker, I feel it is proper to make this statement in view of the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania the other day, and in justice to the Federal Trade Commission. I am sure that all the Members of the House, most of them, at least, know the members of that Commission, and they know that that Commission has been doing everything that it can to bring the facts to light with reference to the utility companies throughout the United States. I wish to read a letter which I have received from the Honorable Garland F. Ferguson, Jr., Chairman of the Commission, making a statement as to just what the Commission has done and which is in a measure a reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and a copy of a letter from President Roosevelt addressed to the Federal Trade Commission.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, June 4, 1934.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BYRNS: In reply to your request for a statement in regard to certain charges and insinuations made by Representative LOUIS T. McFADDEN in the House on May 29 with respect to the utility investigation being conducted by the Federal Trade Commission, I wish to advise that the charge that the President or the administration or this Commission had made any effort to curtail or suppress a full investigation and disclosure with respect to Henry L. Doherty, the Cities Service group, the Associated Gas & Electric Co. group, or any other company, is not only untrue but the very opposite of the actual facts, as will be clearly seen from the following statement of facts:

The first misstatement we desire to correct is that "we find the administration interfering in the manner in which this report of the Federal Trade Commission on H. L. Doherty's companies is to be made." This is without the slightest foundation. There has not been the slightest interference on the part of the administration. It is true that some months ago the Commission elected Mr. Joe L. Baker as director of public relations and editorial service, and that Mr. Shirley D. Mayers, who had previously served in a limited manner in this regard, was made an assistant to Mr. Baker, and is now serving in that capacity. Mr. Baker was not suggested for the position by the administration or anybody else outside of the Commission; he was elected by the Commission upon its own initiative and upon the suggestion of a member of the Commission, Mr. Baker being selected solely because of his excellent qualifications. This Commission does not now and has never maintained a "department of propaganda." It is true that Mr. Baker gave out mimeographed copies of the summary of volume I of a report on the Cities Service Co. This summary was not written by Mr. Baker but by Mr. A. E. Lundvall, an expert Commission accountant, and was made a part of volume I. There was nothing new or unusual in the mimeographing of this report and furnishing of it to the public and the press. Such has been the practice for a long time past in connection with reports made a part of the record in the utilities investigation, as well as in connection with other important reports and action by the Commission. Volume I of Mr. Lundvall's report on the Cities Service Co. consists of 660 typewritten pages, and the purpose of the Commission in having a summary of this and similar reports prepared is to give the public and the press in concise form the principal facts covered by the report. Mr. McFADDEN charges an effort to suppress the disclosures with respect to the Doherty companies and at the same time complains at the publicity given to same. It is true that a representative of the Cities Service Co. issued a number of statements to the press, but that was done as the evidence was being presented at the public hearings, and is a matter entirely beyond the Commission's control.

Mr. McFADDEN states that the President and the Administration "are attempting through their edicts to cover up and protect Henry L. Doherty and his companies who are now under investigation by the Federal Trade Commission." In support of this charge he cites a memorandum signed by the Secretary of the Commission which by order of the Commission directs the chief counsel and the chief economist "to instruct their staffs that in connection with the completion of the report on utilities, as planned in accordance with the President's letter of April 26, 1934, they are not to initiate any new investigations either into utility finances or propaganda phases of the inquiry." Mr. McFADDEN states it would be intersting to read the letter of the President of April 26, 1934, "which (Mr. McFADDEN says) resulted in the order to the Commission to stop its investigation or its further inquiry * * * into the operations of Henry L. Doherty and his public-utility operations or of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. in regard to their negotiations, and all other investigations of public utilities under the Walsh resolution." It is true that the Secretary at the Commission's direction issued the instructions quoted by Mr. McFADDEN. It is also true that the President wrote the Commission a letter April 26, 1934, on the subject of this investigation. It is not true that the President or the administration is attempting to cover up or protect Henry L. Doherty or his companies, or the Associated Gas & Electric Co., or any other utility company. There is not the slightest foundation in fact for any such charge.

The pertinent facts are as follows: The utilities investigation was inaugurated in February 1928, and the Commission had committed itself to the Bureau of the Budget and the Appropriations Committee of the House to complete this investigation and present its final report with recommendations to the Senate not later than July 1, 1934. Embraced in the paragraph carrying an appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, was the language, "of which $230,000 shall be available for the completion of the public-utilities investigation undertaken pursuant to Senate Resolution 83, Seventieth Congress." Prior to the beginning of 1934, the Commission's examiners had made and presented for the public record a comprehensive study and report of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. and a great many of its subsidiaries. This was followed in 1934 by still further reports and by the production of a report on propaganda items such as the letters from State Senator Thayer of New York. Field examinations had been completed on two additional Associated Gas & Electric Cos. viz., Associated General Electric Corporation and General Gas & Electric Co. In addition, examinations had been made of books and records of a number of other companies. On some of these, reports were in the process of writing. This was the situation as to Cities Service Co. It became apparent that many of these reports could not be completed and made a part of the public record if our final report covering the entire investigation was to be presented by July 1, 1934. Mr. Lundvall, who had made a study of the Cities Service Co., and Mr. Nodder, who made the study of the Associated companies, were taken from that work and assigned to the writing of the final report. It was apparent that an important amount of time and money which had been spent in getting the information on these companies would be wasted if the investigation was closed by July 1. Many of the Commission's staff were in some distress from overwork, and Mr. Lundvall especially was in very poor health. In this situation the Commission applied to the President for relief and asked him to extend the time for completing the work to not later than January 1, 1935. The President consented to this and wrote the letter of April 26, 1934. A copy of it is attached hereto. It is apparent that instead of ending the investigation the President was prolonging it. Without this relief which he afforded us it is doubtful if the Commission could have made a public disclosure of much of the material which is in its possession.

Upon receipt of the President's letter, members of the staff were taken off the writing of the final report and instructed to complete the reports on individual companies. This is being done. The Commission is bending every effort to closing the public record on this investigation. We hope that this can be done this summer so as to leave the Commission sufficient time to carefully prepare a comprehensive final report with adequate recommendations.

The President's cooperation has allowed us to present a comprehensive report on the Cities Service Co. Volume I of this report was made a part of the public record May 22, 1934. Mr. Lundvall has been continually under oral examination by our chief counsel ever since demonstrating the report. The hearings were resumed today pursuant to subpenas issued several days ago. When this series of hearings is concluded Mr. Lundvall will complete volume II of his report, and in addition there will be made a part of the record a number of other reports on Cities Service Power & Light Co., Kansas City Gas Co., etc.

The Commission's order of May 14, 1934, which Mr. McFADDEN quoted for the RECORD, was designed to bring the investigation to a close pursuant to a commitment made by the Commission to the Director of the Budget and the Appropriations Committee of the House. The order applied only to the initiation of new investigations and had no reference to Cities Service Co. or the Associated Gas & Electric Co. as the study of those companies was initiated long before May 14 and was not new.

The Commission will be glad to make available to anyone copies of the reports with testimony that are a part of the public record and call attention especially to Mr. Lundvall's report on the Cities Service Co. and the testimony which he has given explaining it.

Furthermore, Mr. McFADDEN has in writing complimented officials of the Commission on the work in its investigation, and in a letter from the chief counsel to Mr. McFADDEN under date of May 7, 1934, a full explanation was given as to why Mr. Lundvall's report on Cities Service Co. had been delayed. In a letter of May 29, 1934, the chief counsel sent Mr. McFADDEN a mimeographed copy of the summary of the Lundvall report and said that if Mr. McFADDEN desired to see the report in its entirety a copy could be loaned to him. He had been previously loaned copies of other reports on Cities Service Cos. and companies in other groups.

The Commission very much regrets that by securing the President's approval of a short and very necessary extension of the investigation he should have been exposed to so unjust an accusation.

Copy of the President's letter authorizing the investigation to be continued until January 1, 1935, is attached hereto.

By direction of the Commission.

Yours sincerely,

GARLAND S. FERGUSON, Jr.,
Chairman.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 26, 1934.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, D.C.

GENTLEMEN: I am informed that you have in preparation reports on various electric and gas utilities, operating or holding companies which you have not yet had an opportunity to put into the record in the investigation which you are conducting under Senate Resolution 83, Seventieth Congress, first session, and that you are conducting studies or investigations of still other companies in which reports cannot be written until the completion of such studies. I consider it important that this work which is under way be completed and made a part of the public record in your utilities investigation.

Accordingly, pursuant to the authority vested in me by section 6 (d) of an act approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes", I direct you to complete this work which is under way and to make these reports a part of said public record. I think it is of the greatest importance that your final report to Congress with your recommendations be submitted not later than January 1, 1935.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman from Pennsylvania made the statement that the Federal Trade Commission was opposing this investigation, and also inferred that the President was in sympathy with the action taken. While the gentleman from Pennsylvania was speaking I went to the telephone and talked to an official of the Commission, and I desired to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania that day, but did not get the opportunity. The Federal Trade Commission, on its own motion, went to the President and told him if they were required to make their report on the 1st of July they could not complete a pending important field investigation, whereupon the President told them, "Complete your pending field investigation; go to the bottom of those you have already started; do not stop, but complete them and make your report on January 1, 1935." The President insisted upon a complete report. He did not try to prevent the Commission from getting necessary information.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman is entirely correct, and the letter from Mr. Ferguson sets forth that fact very clearly. I feel that in justice to the Chairman and every member of the Federal Trade Commission and to the President of the United States, the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] and myself should be placed in this RECORD, because it is a complete refutation of the charges and implications made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. I want to concur in what the gentleman has said. The Federal Trade Commission has come before our subcommittee on appropriations for a number of years for money to be used in the utilities investigation. A great deal of money has been spent, but I have an idea that the average Member of Congress does not appreciate the vast volume of very useful information that has been compiled and made available in the utility investigation. Some of it, perhaps, will not be useful, but for the first time it has been a thorough and careful study and survey, and the Commission has worked conscientiously and intelligently. Judge Healy, whose name the gentleman mentioned, in my judgment, is one of the ablest men in the Federal service in the legal department.

Mr. BYRNS. I thank the gentleman for that statement. I am sure we all recognize there is no Member of the House who is more familiar with what is being done by the Federal Trade Commission with reference to this investigation than the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. [Applause.]

PROCEEDINGS OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the ruling made by the Chair recently with reference to the release of remarks of Members on the floor is creating considerable inconvenience in the press gallery, and especially for the afternoon papers. The opinion expressed by the Chair is exactly in accord with all the precedents, and the Chair thinks it ought to stand; that every Member ought to control, absolutely, his remarks on this floor until he is ready to release them or until they appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. But in order to accommodate the press and at the same time protect the Members of the House, the Chair modifies the ruling in this particular: Hereafter the reporters of debates will be authorized to give to the press the remarks of Members, unless the Members notify the reporters that their remarks are to be held until they have an opportunity to revise them, or until they appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

This gives the Member absolute control of his remarks, which he ought to have, of course, and relieves the situation so that the afternoon papers will not be inconvenienced, as they are now.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. There is evidently no quorum present.

Mr. BYRNS. I move a call of the House, Mr. Speaker.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and six Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion by Mr. CULLEN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a brief announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the following conferees on the communications bill are now in conference and unable to be present: The gentleman from Texas, Mr. RAYBURN; the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HUDDLESTON; the gentleman from California, Mr. LEA; the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. MAPES; and the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. WOLVERTON.

In addition to that, the following committee, as has been stated several times, is now investigating the War Department; and I have been requested to state that they are now in session with a number of witnesses before them: The gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. ROGERS; the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. PLUMLEY; the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. HARTER; the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. JAMES; and the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. GOSS.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On June 4, 1934:

H.R. 9061. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

On June 5, 1934:

H.R. 1158. An act for the relief of Annie I. Hissey;

H.R. 1933. An act for the relief of Philip F. Hambsch;

H.R. 1943. An act for the relief of A. H. Powell;

H.R. 2322. An act for the relief of C. K. Morris;

H.R. 2433. An act for the relief of Anna H. Jones;

H.R. 3056. An act for the relief of James B. Conner;

H.R. 3300. An act for the relief of George B. Beaver;

H.R. 3302. An act for the relief of John Merrill;

H.R. 5477. An act to fix the rates of postage on certain periodicals exceeding 8 ounces in weight;

H.R. 7289. An act for the relief of H. A. Soderberg;

H.R. 7343. An act to remove inequities in the law governing eligibility for promotion to the position of chief clerk in the Railway Mail Service; and

H.R. 8938. An act to amend the act of Congress approved June 7, 1924, commonly called the "San Carlos Act", and acts supplementary thereto.

On June 6, 1934:

H.R. 1977. An act for the relief of R. A. Hunsinger;

H.R. 2054. An act for the relief of John S. Cathcart;

H.R. 2438. An act for the relief of Ruby F. Voiles;

H.R. 4690. An act for the relief of Eula K. Lee;

H.R. 6179. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes";

H.R. 7353. An act granting the consent of Congress to any two or more States to enter into agreements or compacts for cooperative effort and mutual assistance in the prevention of crime, and for other purposes;

H.R. 8494. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to modify the terms of existing contracts for the sale of timber on the Quinault Indian Reservation when it is in the interest of the Indians so to do;

H.R. 9323. An act to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 9370. An act to authorize an appropriation of money to facilitate the apprehension of certain persons charged with crime.

On June 7, 1934:

H.R. 5884. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; and

H.J.Res. 352. Joint resolution to provide funds to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with States in control of chinch bugs.

MINNESOTA FIRE CLAIMS

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFADDEN. Reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, but I want to ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes immediately following the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can put only one request at a time. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] asks unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes following the address of the gentleman from Georgia. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I want to give the Membership of this House a warning and put them upon their guard. I am satisfied there is operating here in the city of Washington at this time a crooked lobby in the interest of the adoption of the Minnesota fire claims. [Applause.] It is the boldest attempt, Mr. Speaker, to overreach the Membership of a great legislative body that I can conceive of being made, and if this bill is adopted it will develop into a political scandal.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. No.

UTILITIES INVESTIGATION—FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I was absent at the opening of the session this morning, but I have been informed that the gentleman from Tennessee, the majority leader; the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], the assistant leader; and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], chairman of one of the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations, took the floor and made references to statements that I had made on the floor of the House previously.

Not being present, I do not know in detail what was said, but I am informed that an attempt was made to show that what I had said in regard to the investigation under Senate Resolution 83 by the Federal Trade Commission was not so.

I call the attention of the House to the statement which was sent to the majority leader by the Federal Trade Commission, and I quote their language. It is dated June 4, 1934. It refers to a statement which I had previously made on the floor when I had occasion to have printed in the RECORD a statement by the secretary of the Federal Trade Commission which had the effect of delaying the report on the investigation of Henry L. Doherty and his companies.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; I cannot yield. [Continuing reading:]

The first misstatement that we desire to correct is that we find the administration interfering in the manner in which this report of the Federal Trade Commission of the Henry L. Doherty companies is to be made. This is without foundation.

I now call the attention of the House to a letter to which I referred in my last remarks and, when I have finished, let you decide whether I told the truth or not. The letter is dated April 26, 1934, signed by Franklin D. Roosevelt, to the Federal Trade Commission, the effect of which was to delay the report on the investigation of Henry L. Doherty from July 1 of this year until January 1, 1935.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman read that letter?

Mr. McFADDEN. I shall be very glad to read it. I may say that this letter was written after certain members of the Federal Trade Commission had put this matter up to the President, and may I say in addition to that, that when I made my remarks on the floor of this House on February 16 last in regard to Henry L. Doherty and what he was doing in the way of defrauding the American investing public, I told the truth, and I was quoting from this investigation of Mr. Lunvall, part I of which has been completed; and may I add before I read this letter that the Lunvall report or investigation of the H. L. Doherty Cities Service outfit was completed last December and ask why the summary of this particular report was thus delayed?

As long ago as the 1st of February the Cities Service Co., Mr. Doherty's company, was furnished by the Federal Trade Commission with a copy of Mr. Lunvall's report. I am not referring only to section 1 of the report which is now being given out by a questionnaire or question-and-answer arrangement before the Federal Trade Commission. Part II of this report I am referring to also. These two parts of the report disclose so much of what Henry L. Doherty and the Cities Service Co. have done in the way of defrauding the American public that Henry L. Doherty's attorneys have brought to bear all the pressure they could ever since my speech of February 16. Of course, they do not want this damaging evidence disclosed to their investors, the New York Curb Exchange, and the public in general. In fact, those attorneys were here; they came arunning; the next day they were here in Washington; they were down at the Federal Trade Commission; they were at the Treasury; they were at various places to see to it that this matter was not given out. There game was to hush it up. Mr. Speaker, part II of this report should be given out at once. It should be given out before Congress adjourns; but it is such a damaging statement in regard to what Henry L. Doherty already has been doing that, of course, they do not want it out. I can well understand how the President would abhor such publicity in regard to Mr. Doherty just when Mr. Doherty was presenting the President with a million dollars for his pet project. And so I say that the net result of this letter from the President is to delay for a period of 6 months the filing of part II of the Lunvall report, or until January 1, 1935. When, as a matter of fact, all that remains to be done is for Mr. Lunvall to dictate the summary, which is used for the convenience of the members of the Commission. However, Mr. Lunvall was taken off the work of completing this report and was assigned to other work. It would take him only 10 days or 2 weeks to summarize the report.

I would especially call to your attention the significant fact that the Lunvall report discloses the fact that Mr. Doherty's people refused to give very material facts to Mr. Lunvall for the Federal Trade Commission; and since my disclosures on the floor of this House from time to time, beginning last February 16, some of this information has been furnished to the Commission and plenty of attempts made by Doherty's experts and lawyers to explain away plenty of other very damaging evidence; and now they are to have 6 months more before part II of this report is made available, and the public will have 6 months more to forget. Time is a valuable thing for the Doherty interests just now. Whether or not this letter of the President and this order of the Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission were issued for the purpose of aiding the Doherty interests, they did have this effect.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Now, of course, I do not know what pressure Mr. Doherty's clever lobbyists, of whom Arthur F. Mullen, of Nebraska and Washington, is one—Mr. Mullen sat in with Doherty's other attorneys with investigators the first of the year when Doherty's affairs were being discussed—or his other attorneys, who are the cleverest, brought to bear or what they were able to do while they were here, but they made an investigation through the various departments of the Federal Trade Commission to ascertain how I came into possession of this information. They used every bit of pressure they could, even going so far as to recommend the dismissal of some of the men engaged on this report—a favorite practice of interests like the Doherty, who use political influence upon the Government's men, who are attempting to render honest service to their Government whom they are sworn to serve.

The letter from the President is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 26, 1934.

GENTLEMEN: I am informed that you have in preparation reports on various electric and gas utilities operating or holding companies which you have not yet had an opportunity to put into the record in the investigation which you are conducting under Senate Resolution 83, Seventieth Congress, first session, and that you are conducting studies or investigations of still other companies in which reports cannot be written until the completion of such studies. I consider it important that this work which is under way be completed and made a part of the public record in your utilities' investigation.

Of course it should be done; there is no question about that. The point of this thing is the fact that this letter has caused the delay of a report that should be made before this Congress adjourns. I know whereof I speak, for I have looked the matter up. I know that this report could be made, but something has delayed it for 6 months.

Accordingly, pursuant to the authority vested in me by section 6 (d) of an act approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes", I direct you to complete this work which is under way and to make these reports a part of said public record. I think it is of the greatest importance that your final report to Congress with your recommendations be submitted not later than January 1, 1935.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, D.C.

The effect of that letter was to delay the report on Henry L. Doherty's companies until after the fall elections. An order issued by the Commission as a result of this letter stopped the investigation into political campaign contributions. It stopped other investigations in regard to all the public utilities until this report was made. Why should this have been done in view of the 6 months' extension of time granted?—I ask you. There is no denying this act. This order was as follows:

The Commission today directed that the chief counsel and the chief economist instruct their staff that in connection with the completion of the report on utilities as planned in accordance with the President's letter of April 26, 1934, they are not to initiate any new investigations either into utility finances or propaganda phases of the inquiry.

I want to say to the responsible leadership of this House that I undertook the investigation of this matter and a report to the House on the basis of doing my duty as a Member of Congress. I asked this House, I asked the leadership to investigate Henry L. Doherty's affairs. The Rules Committee have had that resolution before them. Have they acted? No. Why have they not acted? Do they not dare to act; or is political pressure being brought to bear to stop it? These matters should be gone into, for through them not only has the Government been defrauded but also people in every one of your congressional districts have been defrauded. You cannot afford to protect this man in what he has been doing. You have chased all over the country and all over the world to get Samuel Insull. Let me say to you here that part II of the Federal Trade Commission's investigation of what Henry L. Doherty has done will cause the disclosures with regard to Insull to pale into insignificance. Under all the circumstances based upon the disclosures of the Lunvall report to the Federal Trade Commission the President should act.

Now, as regards these publicity men to whom the gentleman referred, may I say that this gentleman, Joe L. Baker, who was put in there, was put in charge on the recommendation of Mr. James J. Farley. The letter of the Federal Trade Commission admits that this change was made and they put in a publicity man to serve the Commission very much in the same manner as Mr. Herbert L. Pettey was put in the Federal Radio Commission as a liaison officer by Mr. Farley. He now has offices in the new Post Office Building right beside the Postmaster General, thus to keep him well informed on all radio activity. Just in the same manner Mr. Farley will be kept advised by Mr. Baker of all activities of the Federal Trade Commission and will see to it that no information goes out to the public that might be detrimental to any of their friends.

It is a political arrangement.

I call your attention now to what part I of the report shows with reference to what I stated about Mr. Doherty. The following appears on page 69 of the Report on Examination of Accounts and Records of Cities Service Co., volume I, by A. E. Lunvall.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein this statement, showing the write-up of the Doherty companies which indicates $210,950,000 worth of fictitious write-ups.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. The following appears on page 69 of the Report on Examination of Accounts and Records of Cities Service Co., volume I, by A. E. Lunvall:

The specific instances in which the plant and investment accounts of subsidiary companies were written up in value because of mergers and consolidations or intercompany transfers are subsequently explained but are summarized here for the purpose of identification:

Cities Service Power & Light Co. and subsidiaries	$104,597,756
Gas Service Co. and subsidiaries	12,279,335
Arkansas Natural Gas Corporation	8,167,691
Empire Gas & Fuel Co. (Delaware)	78,895,162
Cities Service Oil Co. (Ohio)	598,808
Cities Service Tank Line Co	2,736,641
Crew-Levick Co	1,075,137
Cities Fuel & Power Co	1,581,475
Southern Ontario Gas Co	1,026,022
Total	210,958,027

Note: As previously explained, a substantial portion of this write-up was eliminated by Cities Service Co. from its published financial reports at Dec. 31, 1930.

The above note has recently been added to this report—evidently a part of Cities Service attorneys' attempt to camouflage my previous statement on the floor of this House wherein I informed you of the write-up in value of the H. L. Doherty companies, which write-up values are still carried upon the books of the companies.

It has not been my purpose to criticize unduly the Federal Trade Commission or its very able and efficient general counsel, Mr. Robert E. Healy. I can appreciate the pressure that these men are under in reporting to the Congress the details of mismanagement and corruption which they have uncovered in their investigations of the public-utility set-ups. Nor have I had any intention to reflect in any manner whatsoever upon A. E. Lunvall, the very capable investigator, assigned by the Federal Trade Commission to the H. L. Doherty affiliated companies set-ups investigation. Mr. Lunvall has made a most unusual report setting forth in detail the most unusual and crooked manipulation of the affairs of H. L. Doherty, H. L. Doherty & Co., Inc., the Cities Service Co., and of all their subsidiaries and affiliates, and his activities on this report should in no manner be interfered with. What I am objecting to and am pointing out to you is the attempt on the part of H. L. Doherty and his attorneys and his contact men and his lobbyists of the type of Arthur F. Mullen (late campaign floor-manager at the Democratic National Convention at Chicago, which nominated Franklin D. Roosevelt) and men of this type for whom Doherty or his companies have done favors or are paying them for their services in the money or securities or inside information or by campaign contributions, or birthday-party projects, to influence in any manner possible this Federal Trade Commission report, and then finding the activities of these men resulting in a postponement of the filing of part II of the report of the investigation of the Cities Service Co. and its subsidiaries and affiliates, including the manipulations of Henry L. Doherty and Henry L. Doherty & Co., Inc., which would have disclosed in detail these improper practices that I have been referring to on the floor of this House in my previous statements and in this my fourth speech on this subject.

In my attempt to correct this situation, I introduced a resolution for an investigation of this matter, but this resolution has been pigeonholed by the Rules Committee. I have begged the Speaker, the majority floor leader, and the Chairman of the Rules Committee to give me a hearing on this resolution and it has been refused. It is apparent, I submit, from the very action of the majority leader, who today has spoken and condemned my activities in this respect, that this administration is united in its efforts to protect Henry L. Doherty.

Proof of every statement that I have made is in the A. E. Lunvall report of his investigation under Senate Resolution 83 and embodied in his reports to the Federal Trade Commission. And when anybody, whether it be the leader of the majority of this House, the President of the United States, or the members of the Federal Trade Commission, attempts to dispute or discredit what I have said and am now saying, he is attempting to discredit the facts which are set forth in the Lunvall report to the Federal Trade Commission. This complete report should now be in the hands of the Attorney General of the United States for immediate action.

UTILITIES INVESTIGATION BY FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, it is rather difficult for me to understand the cause of complaint of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN]. He has indulged in a number of insinuations and has made certain implications based upon no fact which he gave either the other day or at the present time.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. No; I only have 3 minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is stating that I presented no facts. I have presented facts.

Mr. BYRNS. The whole truth is that the President had absolutely nothing to do with holding up the report of the Federal Trade Commission. The Federal Trade Commission with their counsel, whose names I gave a few minutes ago, asked the President in the interest of a complete report to permit them to delay that report for 6 months. This was for the reasons set forth in the letter of Mr. Ferguson.

I have the time only to repeat that it was impossible for them to consider the entire and voluminous evidence that had been presented and prepare a comprehensive report by July 1. They asked the President to issue an Executive order providing for this extension, and the President, of course, acting upon the unanimous request of the Federal Trade Commission, which is a bipartisan body of able, conscientious men, with its own chief counsel and associate counsel, whose names I mentioned a while ago, gave his consent to the report being delayed for 6 months. Why? Because if he had not done that, the Commission told him it would be impossible for them to make a comprehensive report, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN], without the knowledge that they have and without the information that they have, says he could easily do within 10 days.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I cannot yield.

There is nothing more that I wish to say. I ask every Member of this House to read the letter of Chairman Ferguson, which will appear in the RECORD tomorrow morning, and which is a complete statement and a refutation, I repeat, of the insinuations, the implications, and the charges made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and we in this Congress and the preceding Congress know the gentleman's habit along that line. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The Chair laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union:

To the Congress of the United States:

You are completing a work begun in March 1933, which will be regarded for a long time as a splendid justification of the vitality of representative government. I greet you and express once more my appreciation of the cooperation which has proved so effective.

Only a small number of the items of our program remain to be enacted and I am confident that you will pass on them before adjournment. Many other pending measures are sound in conception, but must, for lack of time or of adequate information, be deferred to the session of the next Congress. In the meantime, we can well seek to adjust many of these measures into certain larger plans of governmental policy for the future of the Nation.

You and I, as the responsible directors of these policies and actions, may, with good reason, look to the future with confidence, just as we may look to the past 15 months with reasonable satisfaction.

On the side of relief we have extended material aid to millions of our fellow citizens.

On the side of recovery we have helped to lift agriculture and industry from a condition of utter prostration.

But, in addition to these immediate tasks of relief and recovery, we have properly, necessarily, and with overwhelming approval determined to safeguard these tasks by rebuilding many of the structures of our economic life and of reorganizing it in order to prevent a recurrence of collapse.

It is childish to speak of recovery first and reconstruction afterward. In the very nature of the processes of recovery we must avoid the destructive influences of the past. We have shown the world that democracy has within it the elements necessary to its own salvation.

Less hopeful countries, where the ways of democracy are very new, may revert to the autocracy of yesterday. The American people can be trusted to decide wisely upon the measures taken by the Government to eliminate the abuses of the past and to proceed in the direction of the greater good for the greater number.

Our task of reconstruction does not require the creation of new and strange values. It is rather the finding of the way once more to known, but to some degree forgotten, ideals and values. If the means and details are in some instances new, the objectives are as permanent as human nature.

Among our objectives I place the security of the men, women, and children of the Nation first.

This security for the individual and for the family concerns itself primarily with three factors. People want decent homes to live in; they want to locate them where they can engage in productive work; and they want some safeguard against misfortunes which cannot be wholly eliminated in this man-made world of ours.

In a simple and primitive civilization homes were to be had for the building. The bounties of nature in a new land provided crude but adequate food and shelter. When land failed our ancestors moved on to better land. It was always possible to push back the frontier, but the frontier has now disappeared. Our task involves the making of a better living out of the lands that we have.

So also security was attained in the earlier days through the interdependence of members of families upon each other and of the families within a small community upon each other. The complexities of great communities and of organized industry make less real these simple means of security. Therefore we are compelled to employ the active interest of the Nation as a whole through government in order to encourage a greater security for each individual who composes it.

With the full cooperation of the Congress we have already made a serious attack upon the problem of housing in our great cities. Millions of dollars have been appropriated for housing projects by Federal and local authorities, often with the generous assistance of private owners. The task thus begun must be pursued for many years to come. There is ample private money for sound housing projects; and the Congress, in a measure now before you, can stimulate the lending of money for the modernization of existing homes and the building of new homes. In pursuing this policy we are working toward the ultimate objective of making it possible for American families to live as Americans should.

In regard to the second factor, economic circumstances and the forces of nature themselves dictate the need of constant thought as to the means by which a wise Government may help the necessary readjustment of the population. We cannot fail to act when hundreds of thousands of families live where there is no reasonable prospect of a living in the years to come. This is especially a national problem. Unlike most of the leading nations of the world, we have so far failed to create a national policy for the development of our land and water resources and for their better use by those people who cannot make a living in their present positions. Only thus can we permanently eliminate many millions of people from the relief rolls on which their names are now found.

The extent of the usefulness of our great natural inheritance of land and water depends on our mastery of it. We are now so organized that science and invention have given us the means of more extensive and effective attacks upon the problems of nature than ever before. We have learned to utilize water power, to reclaim deserts, to recreate forests, and to redirect the flow of population. Until recently we have proceeded almost at random, making many mistakes.

There are many illustrations of the necessity for such planning. Some sections of the Northwest and Southwest which formerly existed as grazing land, were spread over with a fair crop of grass. On this land the water table lay a dozen or 20 feet below the surface, and newly arrived settlers put this land under the plow. Wheat was grown by dry-farming methods. But in many of these places today the water table under the land has dropped to 50 or 60 feet below the surface and the topsoil in dry seasons is blown away like driven snow. Falling rain, in the absence of grass roots, filters through the soil, runs off the surface, or is quickly reabsorbed into the atmosphere. Many million acres of such land must be restored to grass or trees if we are to prevent a new and man-made Sahara.

At the other extreme, there are regions originally arid, which have been generously irrigated by human engineering. But in some of these places the hungry soil has not only absorbed the water necessary to produce magnificent crops, but so much more water that the water table has now risen to the point of saturation, thereby threatening the future crops upon which many families depend.

Human knowledge is great enough today to give us assurance of success in carrying through the abandonment of many millions of acres for agricultural use and the replacing of these acres with others on which at least a living can be earned.

The rate of speed that we can usefully employ in this attack on impossible social and economic conditions must be determined by businesslike procedure. It would be absurd to undertake too many projects at once or to do a patch of work here and another there without finishing the whole of an individual project. Obviously, the Government cannot undertake national projects in every one of the 435 congressional districts, nor even in every one of the 48 States. The magnificent conception of national realism and national needs that this Congress has built up has not only set an example of large vision for all time but has almost consigned to oblivion our ancient habit of pork-barrel legislation; to that we cannot and must not revert. When the next Congress convenes I hope to be able to present to it a carefully considered national plan, covering the development and the human use of our natural resources of land and water over a long period of years.

In considering the cost of such a program it must be clear to all of us that for many years to come we shall be engaged in the task of rehabilitating many hundreds of thousands of our American families. In so doing we shall be decreasing future costs for the direct relief of destitution. I hope that it will be possible for the Government to adopt as a clear policy, to be carried out over a long period, the appropriation of a large, definite, annual sum so that work may proceed year after year not under the urge of temporary expediency, but in pursuance of the well-considered rounded objective.

The third factor relates to security against the hazards and vicissitudes of life. Fear and worry based on unknown danger contribute to social unrest and economic demoralization. If, as our Constitution tells us, our Federal Government was established among other things "to promote the general welfare", it is our plain duty to provide for that security upon which welfare depends.

Next winter we may well undertake the great task of furthering the security of the citizen and his family through social insurance.

This is not an untried experiment. Lessons of experience are available from States, from industries, and from many nations of the civilized world. The various types of social insurance are interrelated, and I think it is difficult to attempt to solve them piecemeal. Hence, I am looking for a sound means which I can recommend to provide at once security against several of the great disturbing factors in life—especially those which relate to unemployment and old age. I believe there should be a maximum of cooperation between States and the Federal Government. I believe that the funds necessary to provide this insurance should be raised by contribution rather than by an increase in general taxation. Above all, I am convinced that social insurance should be national in scope, although the several States should meet at least a large portion of the cost of management, leaving to the Federal Government the responsibility of investing, maintaining, and safeguarding the funds constituting the necessary insurance reserves.

I have commenced to make, with the greatest of care, the necessary actuarial and other studies necessary for the formulation of plans for the consideration of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

These three great objectives—the security of the home, the security of livelihood, and the security of social insurance—are, it seems to me, a minimum of the promise that we can offer to the American people. They constitute a right which belongs to every individual and every family willing to work. They are the essential fulfillment of measures already taken toward relief, recovery, and reconstruction.

This seeking for a greater measure of welfare and happiness does not indicate a change in values. It is rather a return to values lost in the course of our economic development and expansion.

Ample scope is left for the exercise of private initiative. In fact, in the process of recovery, I am greatly hoping that repeated promises that private investment and private initiative to relieve the Government in the immediate future of much of the burden it has assumed will be fulfilled. We have not imposed undue restrictions upon business. We have not opposed the incentive of reasonable and legitimate private profit. We have sought rather to enable certain aspects of business to regain the confidence of the public. We have sought to put forward the rule of fair play in finance and industry.

It is true that there are a few among us who would still go back. These few offer no substitute for the gains already made, nor any hope for making future gains for human happiness. They loudly assert that individual liberty is being restricted by Government, but when they are asked what individual liberties they have lost, they are put to it to answer.

We must dedicate ourselves anew to a recovery of the old and sacred possessive rights for which mankind has constantly struggled—homes, livelihood, and individual security. The road to these values is the way of progress. Neither you nor I will rest content until we have done our utmost to move farther on that road.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 8, 1934.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD immediately following the message a brief statement by the distinguished Speaker of the House commenting on the message.

Mr. BRITTEN. Commenting on this statement?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that customary?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know whether it is customary or not, but I think it is entirely proper to be done.

Mr. BLANTON. This is a new deal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S SOCIAL-INSURANCE MESSAGE OF JUNE 8, 1934

(Comments by Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, Speaker of the House of Representatives)

The President's message embodies a magnificent conception. The vitality of a representative government depends upon its efficiency in taking care of its own nationals. They must be assured the essentials of life—food, clothing, shelter. Other nations have attempted with considerable success to provide for their nationals in these particulars. Some of our great corporations have apparently solved these propositions. This is an absolutely new era upon which we are entering, and the success of the Government and its perpetuity depends upon taking away from its nationals the element of fear. They must be assured that they will be safe during periods of sickness and unemployment, and they must be assured that they will be taken care of when old age comes. The President's message embodies a Nation-wide study of all these propositions. It fits in with the recovery program. It will tend to quiet unrest.

We are mechanized as no other nation in the world has ever been mechanized. It is claimed that one-fourth of our workers can produce for all of our people the essentials of life and living. In France and Germany it is said that 50 percent of their workers can be employed in producing the essentials of life. In Italy, not so highly mechanized, 65 percent of their workers can be employed in providing for all people food, clothing, and shelter. Machines work for us to a greater extent than in any other country in the world, and we must meet this situation without destroying machines. The study the President proposes this summer is important, indeed.

We hope to put through the President's housing program; and this, of course, is at the very base of all recovery. People of a country must first of all be properly housed, and upon a proper housing must be built a structure which removes fear, so prevalent now. There must be a way of taking care of men and women and children when they are sick and unable to provide for themselves, and it must be done in a way which does not mean charity. They are entitled to more than charity, and they must be taken care of in old age and during periods of unemployment. We owe these things to our nationals. The study which the President proposes to make this summer is most important, and it must lead to legislation in the next Congress which will meet these conditions.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE SUBSISTENCE-HOMESTEAD PROGRAM

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this splendid and timely message from the President of the United States impresses itself more deeply on me this afternoon because of the visit that I made yesterday to my own State, where I talked with the men and women on two Federal homestead projects. They have been down for the count of 9, but are now being given a chance under this program to rehabilitate and build themselves anew. I do not desire to take up the time of the House, but I feel so keenly on this subject that I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the subsistence-homestead development in the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BYRNS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, in years to come when the results of the Roosevelt administration are weighed, the historian will divide its manifold recovery efforts into two classifications. One of these will be steps of a short-term nature. This classification will include the many numerous efforts aimed to meet quickly situations which constituted emergencies and which lay on the threshold of the Roosevelt administration when it assumed office in those black days of March 1933. The bank holiday, the farm-price emergency, unemployment, and many another situations within too recent memory to necessitate remention and elaboration, required action, and action was forthcoming immediately from the champion of the new deal.

BUILDING FOR THE FUTURE

But more than an emergency of a temporary nature needed to be met. Direction was needed not only for a day or a month but in building for the future. Again President Roosevelt stood ready. He did not come forth with a dogmatic arrangement, with the cry of "It must be done this way or not at all", but he proposed that the Nation should proceed with an open mind toward a permanent solution of many of our ills. In the case of agriculture and industry many forward steps have been taken. Through tests and demonstrations we are working our way toward adjustments which will be of permanent benefit.

Today I want to speak of one of these efforts which in 20 years will be looked upon as one of the most significant contributions of this administration to permanent long-term recovery. I speak of subsistence homesteads. This program comes in for its share of misunderstanding, for partisan abuse, but it should not. Examined closely and particularly in light of the history of our Nation and of the complex social and economic problems of today, this program stands out as a beacon of hope, as the ray of promise, for the solution of many of our most serious problems.

PROGRESS HAS BEEN MADE

Subsistence homesteads are not new. Part-time farming came before commercial farming. It has been the way of life of millions. But subsistence homesteads in their modern application recognize the progress made in recent generations and propose adaption of a way of life to modern social and economic circumstances.

Let us go back to the days when there were Thirteen Colonies. The life of the colonists was primarily rural. They lived on the products of their own fields and orchards and pastures. Let us then reduce the picture of the Colonies to a smaller segment, that of certain regions in New England. With the expansion in cotton and woolen milling, industry looked about for factory sites. They found them often in rural districts where rushing streams and waterfalls provided the necessary power. Labor was needed and small farmers, attracted by cash wages, came to work in the mills from the surrounding community.

But back in those days we had no national policies tending toward shorter working hours. Instead the worker spent 12 and often 14 or more hours at the spindles and the looms. Naturally, during the working season he was able to do little more than work at the mill. For a time many of the mills operated in the wintertime and in the summer closed down while the workers went back to their farms, which continued to provide food, fuel, shelter, and even some clothing for the family.

SECURITY WAS LOST

But distances were greater then, for transportation had not advanced. Roads were few in number and far from the excellence of modern highways. Consequently the mills worked longer seasons and, finally, the year round, and with the long hours of work and the poor transportation facilities the worker found it necessary to live nearer his place of employment.

Abandonment of the small farms began. Slums grew about the mills. Gone was the security and independence he had previously enjoyed. All in all, it is doubtful whether a great many of the workers achieved any advance at all in the standard of living from their full-time employment. Certainly a great deal was lost.

Today we are faced by a great problem of unemployment. The diligence of the administration in seeking a solution of this problem has been rewarded in part. But great and fundamental changes may be necessary in order to reduce that unemployment to a point where it can be said that it is no longer the greatest individual problem of the Nation.

The technological advances from the World War on to 1929 were tremendous, and, although little realized, have continued right up to the present day. It has been said that the full utilization of technological advances in industry will prevent some millions of people from ever again finding full-time employment in our mills, our factories, our warehouses, our mines. An unemployed man is a poor consumer and this unemployment problem in terms of reduced consumptive capacity alone is a menace to the fabric of our national economy.

NEED TO BECOME SELF-SUPPORTING

When we consider the permanent threat which this problem makes to our future, it assumes even greater and more dangerous proportions. The cost alone of supporting several millions of people on relief rolls is measured in figures that stagger the imagination. The demoralization consequent upon the public support of a large part of the population presents grave social dangers.

There is only way in which we can hope to escape the experience which so many countries of Europe have suffered, namely, the growth of a large class of unemployed permanently upon the Government, and that is to adopt whatever means seems best to help these people become self-supporting, and to prevent others from being forced upon public relief when seasonal fluctuations in industry occur. This is what the subsistence homestead program, if properly expanded, can accomplish.

To meet the present unemployment emergency in this manner it will be necessary to carry forward the plans for helping unemployed persons to acquire plots of land where they may cultivate food for their own use. This work is now going on, but an equally important long-term program must also be undertaken.

There is no more tragic picture than that of the hosts of unemployed city workers walking the streets, utterly without any means of self-support when the pay envelop ceases to be handed out. Pavements of stone offer no opportunity even to the man who has the greatest desire to produce food for himself and his hungry family.

DECENTRALIZATION IS DESIRED

Fluctuations in industrial activity are bound to occur, and we must make certain that in the future we will not be faced with a situation such as that which, in 1929 and the following years, contributed so much to the distress of the working population. In place of a people crowded into unhealthy tenements in the cities, their children growing up amongst conditions which breed crime, disease, and a loss of self-reliance, we should like to see our working people living on small homesteads near their places of employment on the edge of the city, rather than in the midst of its crowded streets. The creation of such decentralized communities is the ultimate purpose stated in the act which this Congress passed, making possible the subsistence homestead program.

This development will not only make for healthier and more sanitary living conditions but will also enable working-class families to regain an independence and security which have long been lost. We may always expect changes in industrial activity and a fluctuating figure of employment; but through the establishment of subsistence homesteads, where workers may be able to produce much of their own food and maintain shelter for themselves and their families, the desperate story which the experience of our unemployed population has recently told need not be repeated.

When, at the request of the President, this Congress a year ago showed the wisdom of setting aside $25,000,000 for aiding in the establishment of subsistence homesteads, it was setting aside a small sum compared with the expenditures approved for many other purposes, but it was giving recognition to the belief of many that better utilization of the soil held promise of being one of the really important answers to the problem of unemployment.

"Back to the land" has been the cry of a great many. The possibilities of a back-to-the-land movement have been overstated by enthusiasts, even as enthusiasts have overstated the possibilities of a specialized industry in which every wage earner would find his proper place.

NO ADVANTAGES ARE DENIED

It was realized by the persons entrusted with carrying out this work that no movement could be successful if it depended upon the American people's voluntary return to a less satisfactory way of living. No one today wants or needs to give up the benefits which modern civilization and the progress of a hundred years have brought us. Consequently, the subsistence homestead plan was worked out not to bring back the primitive conditions of self-sufficient life as our ancestors knew it but rather to recover the security and independence which they knew without giving up the advantages which industry, science, and social development have made possible.

The subsistence homesteads, therefore, are planned not to give their occupants a full living but merely to afford the opportunity of growing a food supply at home. This food supply, raised on 1 to 5 acres of land, will not only make workers less dependent upon the pay envelope but will also enable them to take care of their families when industrial activity slackens. Furthermore, these subsistence homesteads are not, for the most part, being located in remote country districts, but as close as possible to towns and cities, where employment on a part-time or seasonal basis will be available and where homesteaders may enjoy the social life and business opportunities of such communities.

But even within this framework there were many ideas as to how the plan could best be carried out. The fact that there were a great many conflicting views was promptly recognized by one of the most careful students of this problem, Mr. M. L. Wilson, who was selected by President Roosevelt as Director of the Division of Subsistence Homesteads. Knowing full well that $25,000,000 could not possibly finance a wholesale movement of persons to subsistence homesteads, he has planned each subsistence-homestead project—and there are some 36 planned to date—to make certain that, in addition to serving as the means of helping persons to obtain low-cost homes on small tracts of rich land, this network of projects should be of the greatest possible value as tests and demonstrations.

A TRAGIC PROBLEM

The number of permanently unemployed persons in the bituminous coal mining districts is difficult to estimate, but the most conservative estimates that upward of 200,000 miners will never again be employed in mines. They present a tragic problem of stranded workers. Numerous efforts have been made to meet that problem but the first that has really offered substantial hope is the subsistence homesteads program. In my own district in West Virginia the subsistence homestead movement has struck up new hope that this problem can be met. Had a way of life such as the subsistence homestead provides been developed earlier there is no doubt but that much of the present distress would have been entirely avoided.

In addition to its significance from a long-range recovery viewpoint, the subsistence hbmestead program is also a substantial contributor to short-term recovery. By this I mean that it succeeds in providing employment on a considerable scale in proportion to the sums actually expended.

There are many who believe that housing offers today the outstanding possibility of stimulating recovery. Most of the expenditures involved in housing create employment. There is the employment of masons, carpenters, plumbers, and others in connection with the actual erection of houses. These in turn handle materials, the cost of which is represented in large part by labor outlays. From one viewpoint the establishment of subsistence homesteads is a housing program, for by far the largest percentage of the expenditures made are for the houses erected on the homesteads.

CANNOT SELL SERVICES

Sixty million Americans or more are said to be living in tenements and shanties unfit for human habitation under modern standards. The average income of all Americans was $276 per person last year. Against this, I am reliably informed, there stood a fixed charge of $77 for interest on long-term debts, leaving an income available for spending of $199. The 60,000,000 of our people with the lowest income had an average income available for spending of less than $150 per person. The reason for these average low incomes goes back to the fact that people are unable to find an opportunity to sell their services. They have idle time on their hands. They are not consumers to a large degree for the reason that they do not have the funds with which to buy. Their supply of food is very limited.

Now, take the other side of the picture. We have acres of good lands which are not fully utilized. Put the land in combination with a man who has the time and the willingness to work and he can provide himself with a considerable portion of his own income. Intensive use of small acreages of good land has many possibilities in the way of improving the amount and the variety of food available for idle people.

But subsistence homesteading is concerned with more than the housing of people, important as that may be; it is also more than the supplying of food which people cannot afford to buy, important as that is. Beyond these factors, the subsistence homestead program is concerned with the social readjustments of peoples left economically stranded or forced to live on small incomes because of the many factors over which man so far has been unable to achieve control.

Consider, for example, the isolated, submarginal farmer, living on poor land far from church, school, and other community facilities. Give him an opportunity to get onto better and richer land so located that his children will have the opportunity of going to school, that he and his wife will have the opportunity for normal interrelationships with other peoples. With that opportunity the way is opened for social advancement—a social advancement the significance of which can best be understood by a first-hand study of the homes and lives of thousands of Americans today living in areas blighted by the exhaustion of natural resources or by economic circumstances beyond their control. It is a human problem after all, and it is in terms of human problems that this Nation and its administrators and its political parties must come more and more to think.

SUFFICIENT TIME IS GIVEN

The part of the Government in the establishment of these homesteaders is to finance the purchase of land and construction of buildings, as well as to provide adequate assistance to the occupants in the most efficient utilization of their homesteads. Families will pay from two to three thousand dollars for their homes, making small monthly payments, at a low rate of interest, extending over approximately 20 years.

Projects for city workers are already being established at Rochester, N.Y.; Wilmington, Del.; Youngstown, Ohio; Austin, Minn.; Houston, Tex.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Longview, Wash.; and at many other points. The subsistence homestead program extends from coast to coast and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico.

In order to effect an adequate redistribution of population from overcrowded cities, it is also necessary to take some steps to enable the people now living in poor rural districts to attain a happier and more rewarding life, because distress in rural regions is an important factor in the concentration of these helpless persons on city relief rolls.

The subsistence homestead program, therefore, includes a few projects which will demonstrate how farmers living in worn-out and eroded lands of the old Cotton Belt or the cut-over regions of the Great Lakes States may be helped to relocate on better soil and support themselves both by diversified subsistence agriculture and some industrial work.

State programs for the rural regions have been undertaken in Georgia and Wisconsin, and the Penderlea project in North Carolina embodies a similar purpose.

This demonstration program is, after all, rather small when contrasted with the tremendous demand for subsistence homesteads which is evident throughout the country. The Division of Subsistence Homesteads has received applications for project loans totaling more than four and one-half billion dollars, and, in addition, countless individual requests.

LOW-INCOME WORKERS TO BE AIDED

Many thousands of American families have on their own resources established themselves on small garden homesteads near many of our larger cities. Too often, however, such movements have been confined to persons of higher incomes. There is a need and demand for added thousands of low-income workers to be aided in leaving the congested city tenements.

Perhaps this evident enthusiasm for subsistence homesteads is due to the fact that they foster the idea of an independent, home-owning and self-supporting life which is so strongly imbedded in our American tradition.

I am firmly convinced that this program should be enlarged and extended, that it is making an outstanding contribution to recovery, both from the long- and short-term viewpoints, that its significance in decades to come will be more fully realized and appreciated than today. It addresses itself to the human problem representing the wreckage left over from more thoughtless days of the past. It recognizes in a practical way the possibilities of people doing more for themselves.

Proposals for more than four and one-half billion dollars in subsistence homestead projects have been submitted which I believe demonstrates the enthusiasm for this great work. But the subsistence homestead program has not been designed with the idea of promoting Government sponsorship primarily. The demonstrations so far planned and in the early stages of execution have been developed in every case with the idea of demonstrating their repeatability through private financing. They are aimed, first, to suggest possibilities of this way of life, with its greater opportunity for self-reliance and self-sufficiency to the individual.

Secondly, they are aimed to demonstrate the possibilities of this type of development by private capital; by the industrialist, who is contemplating setting up a new industry or decentralizing an established industry, who reckons the welfare of his workers as part of his responsibility and interest.

Next, these demonstrations are intended to show the possibilities to local and State housing authorities which are steadily being established.

PLANNING FOR THE FUTURE

Let us not overlook the significance of this practical demonstration of the administration, that it is looking beyond its nose and recognizing its responsibility to the future decades to come as well as the immediate months and years. Expansion of this type of work has great potentialities for contributing to recovery, and I believe that it deserves the earnest attention of every Member.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I want the RECORD to show that when there was a call of the House this morning I was engaged in a conference with Mr. Fahey, chairman of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and therefore could not answer present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the Consent Calendar, beginning with the bills passed over yesterday without prejudice, Calendar No. 325.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, just before we recessed last night I propounded a parliamentary inquiry, which I notice is not in the RECORD. The inquiry was as follows:

If we recess tonight will we start on the Consent Calendar tomorrow where we left off today?

The Chair answered in the affirmative. It is my understanding, in accordance with that answer, that we start, I believe, with Calendar No. 382.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the request submitted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that these Indian bills beginning at Calendar Nos. 325 to 345, be passed over and taken up tomorrow on the call of the Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio that the Indian bills, beginning at 325 to 345, be passed over until tomorrow?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That was my understanding, but it was also my understanding, in view of the fact that the Consent Calendar was continued over until today, we would finish the Consent Calendar and then return to these bills and one or two others that were also passed over. However, it is immaterial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I think it is immaterial which bills are called first.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman from Michigan that I understood that the unanimous-consent agreement which we obtained yesterday was that we would go back to the Indian bills on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As the Chair says, it is immaterial and we have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the first of the bills, Calendar No. 325.

WHITE SWAN SCHOOL DISTRICT, YAKIMA COUNTY, WASH.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 7361) to provide funds for cooperation with White Swan School District No. 88, Yakima County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children of the Yakima Reservation.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I may say I shall object to the consideration not only of this bill but all the other Indian school bills on the calendar, and I base my objection on the fact that the Director of the Budget states that these bills are not within the financial program of the President. That is to be found in the report, and I called the Director of the Budget's office this morning and was so advised. For this reason I am constrained to object to the consideration of Calendar No. 325.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman be kind enough to hold his objection until I ask an informed member of my Committee on Indian Affairs to explain this situation to the House?

I should like to have the gentleman from Montana [Mr. AYERS] explain to our colleagues here the situation with reference to these 12 or 13 bills, and I hope the gentleman will give him an opportunity to explain them.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Before yielding, I wish to add to my objections the fact that several of these bills, when they were first drawn, were drawn, as shown by the amendments, to have the moneys paid out of P.W.A. funds, and I think this was the particular thing that was called to the attention of the Budget Director, and the reason of his resistance or opposition to the bill and his statement that they are not within the financial program of the President. Moreover, I think such bills as these are against the principle of the National Recovery Act, and if we begin this sort of work of providing funds for public schools or for the extension of school buildings for particular districts, there is no reason why the same principle could not be invoked by every school district in the United States which, at the present time, has outstanding warrants for the payment of teachers' salaries and is in default on its bonds.

Mr. HOWARD. Will not the gentleman be kind enough to permit a member of our committee who is conversant with this matter to present it to the House? I would like to have the gentleman from Montana [Mr. AYERS] speak for our committee.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, after the argument yesterday on these Indian school bills, and after they were passed over until today, I have taken the matter of each one of them up with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and at my request his Bureau has furnished me with figures showing that if these bills are passed it will save the Indian Bureau budget by at least $620,000 per year. I am authorized by the Commissioner to use these figures in argument in support of these bills.

Now, if the gentleman from California [Mr. ELTSE] will bear with me, and if I may proceed for a few moments without interruption, I feel sure that upon the information furnished by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, I can convince the gentleman and the House not only in the justice of the bills but that they will actually relieve the budget condition rather than draw upon it.

In the 21 schools involved in these 13 bills, approximately 8,000 children—to be exact, 7,928—are involved. Of this number, 40 percent are Indian. This means over 3,100 Indian children.

If these children are not schooled in the public schools of the State, as they are now being schooled and as proposed by these bills, then, by reason of the condition of the overcrowded condition of the buildings, these Indian children must be schooled in some other manner. The only other way it can be done is by reestablishing Indian boarding schools at a much greater expense.

As I told you yesterday, it has been the policy of the Indian Department for some time past to abandon the Indian boarding schools and to send Indian children to the State public schools, which are supported by taxes upon lands bearing only an average of 30 percent of the area within the respective school districts. In other words, and to make it perfectly plain, an average of 40 percent of the school attendance is Indian and the Indian lands which are nontaxable within the school districts average 70 percent. You see the Indian lands bear no part of the burden for the support of these schools, 40 percent of which schools are used for Indian children.

The Indians are wards of the Government. The white man has taken generously of their lands and they are now confined to reservations and allotments. Surely, the least we can do for them as a government is to educate their children. We must do that. It should not be the burden of the local school district—indeed, they cannot bear such a burden, because the districts with the increasing attendance in these schools must have additional room and equipment, and in most instances the district is now bonded to the constitutional limit. These districts have been cooperating with the Indian Department and made no complaint until absolutely forced to do so for lack of room.

Now, one of two things must be done, either present school buildings must be extended or the Government must go back to the boarding-school system. Bear in mind, as I go along, that the Government does not now have any capital investment in any of these State schools. It has so far enjoyed the benefit without such investment.

The figures furnished me by the Indian Department disclose that in the schools involved a saving of $620,000 per year will be made by pursuing the present plan and sending Indian children to the State school. This saving is occasioned by reason of the fact that it costs the Government $300 per year to send an Indian child to a boarding school, and under the plan of these bills it will cost the Government only $100, making a saving of $200 on each child. This, multiplied by the 3,100 Indian children involved, makes an annual saving of $620,000. Taking these departmental figures as a basis, you will find that the Government will have back its $701,000, proposed by these bills, in about 14 months. In other words, the saving will pay for the investment in 14 months and the Government will have a permanent and continuous interest in all of these schools.

If the opposition to these bills prevails, and boarding schools have to be reestablished for these 3,100 Indian children, the Department estimates that a capital investment in building and equipment will amount to $1,200 per capita, or a total of $3,720,000. The proposed capital investment, according to these bills, is $701,000, as against the $3,720,000 if the old program is reestablished. And you will understand that this vast capital investment, under the old program, does not include the $300 per year per capita for maintaining Indian children in the boarding schools. This maintenance item alone under the boarding-school program amounts to $992,000 annually. Therefore there is an actual saving under this proposed program for per capita maintenance only of $291,000 annually. And, bear in mind, that pyramids annually, and also bear in mind that there will be the upkeep and building maintenance of the boarding schools.

In considering the thought of returning to the old program, if anyone is present who is so unprogressive, let him realize the seriousness of the proposition from a financial standpoint. In most instances, under the present educational program, the boarding schools, which have been abandoned, were carried on in old and dilapidated buildings, many of which, because of their unsanitary or fire-hazard condition, have been condemned, and most of them have gone to salvage. Therefore the capital investment of $3,720,000 which I have just mentioned will be necessary for building and equipment. In addition to that, the Government will be forced to pay the $300 per capita pupil maintenance each year, whereas under the proposed plan this pupil maintenance will be only $100 per capita per year.

Can anyone dispute these figures or dispute the wisdom of passing this legislation?

The Department of the Interior, over the signature of Secretary Ickes, has approved of this program and of each of these bills; the Indian Department has approved of them and urges their passage; the only stumbling block is the Bureau of the Budget. I contend that the Interior Department and the Indian Bureau know more about this matter than the Bureau of the Budget; and I contend that the Indian Affairs Committee, which has given these bills some 2 months' consideration, and the special committee, which has held hearings upon them and gave them careful consideration, are all more competent to pass upon this subject than is the Bureau of the Budget.

These bills are authorization bills and gives the Indian Department a foundation upon which they may work to further their meritorious program.

This program is sound in theory, it is beneficial to the Indian, and it is in absolute harmony with good business judgment, for it is a vast saving to the Government. Ten of these bills have already passed the Senate. It is the purpose of our committee and sponsors and supporters of this legislation to give the Interior Department and the Bureau of Indian Affairs the benefit of this legislation in order that they may work out their meritorious educational plan. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. TABER. It has seemed to me that these bills were bad, and for this reason: We are now paying, as I understand, for the tuition of the Indian children a very large sum every year—$600,000, I understand.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Something like that.

Mr. TABER. If these people desire local school buildings, they can get the money from the P.W.A. and from the bill we passed the other day, which carries a tremendous sum of money. They do not require any legislation; the local authorities can do it. Why we should go ahead and have the Government contribute money for that purpose I cannot understand. The statement made yesterday I cannot understand—that there were schools where the Interior Department was taking care of these children and the buildings were abandoned. If that is true, why cannot they use these buildings instead of building new ones?

Mr. HOWARD. I will answer the gentleman: Some of these school buildings have already been distributed; have been deeded to the States to be used for other institutional purposes. We cannot get them back now.

Mr. TABER. If they have deeded away their school buildings, are we going to build some more in the same place? It looks like they were playing horse with Congress.

Mr. HOWARD. They are not to be built in the same place.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER, Mr. ELTSE of California, Mr. MILLARD, and Mr. SWICK objected.

SCHOOL BUILDING AT BROCKTON, MONT.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H.R. 7146, to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Brockton, Mont., in the extension of the public-school building at that place, to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLARD, Mr. TABER, Mr. ELTSE of California, and Mr. SWICK objected.

EXTENSION OF PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDING AT MARYSVILLE, WASH.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H.R. 7412, to provide funds for cooperation with Marysville School District No. 325, Snohomish County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings, to be available for Indian children.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER, Mr. MILLARD, Mr. ELTSE of California, and Mr. SWICK objected.

IMPROVEMENT OF PUBLIC BUILDING, FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

Mr. MILLARD, Mr. TABER, Mr. SWICK, and Mr. ELTSE of California objected.

SCHOOL BOARD AT QUEETS, WASH.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4864, to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Queets, Wash., in the construction of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the village of Queets, Jefferson County, Wash.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLARD, Mr. TABER, Mr. ELTSE of California, and Mr. SWICK objected.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HIGH SCHOOL AT FRAZER, MONT.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 5747) to authorize appropriations for the completion of a public high school at Frazer, Mont.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLARD, Mr. ELTSE of California, Mr. SWICK, and Mr. TABER objected.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I would like to know if the four gentlemen who continue to object are the Four Horsemen, since they persist in this horseplay?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 17–H, BIG HORN COUNTY, MONT.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8346, to provide funds for cooperation with school district no. 17–H, Big Horn County, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLARD, Mr. SWICK, Mr. TABER, and Mr. ELTSE of California objected.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL BOARD AT COVELO, CALIF.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SWICK, Mr. ELTSE of California, Mr. TABER, and Mr. MILLARD objected.

SCHOOL BUILDING, FORT BERTHOLD INDIAN RESERVATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 85, to extend Federal aid to certain school districts in the State of North Dakota upon condition that the public-school buildings benefited shall be available to Indian children of Fort Berthold Indian Reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLARD, Mr. SWICK, Mr. ELTSE of California, and Mr. TABER objected.

WINNEBAGO INDIANS, THURSTON COUNTY, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7255, for the relief of the Winnebago Indians residing in School District No. 17, Thurston County, State of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SWICK, Mr. MILLARD, Mr. TABER, and Mr. ELTSE of California objected.

OMAHA INDIANS, THURSTON COUNTY, NEBR.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 7256) for the relief of the Omaha Indians residing in School District No. 16, Thurston County, State of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SWICK, Mr. TABER, Mr. MILLARD, and Mr. ELTSE of California objected.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Who is recognized for these objections—the official objectors or the Four Horsemen?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Any Member has a right to object.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for a minute and a half.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PIONEER NATIONAL MONUMENT, KY.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to S. 3443, to provide for the creation of the Pioneer National Monument in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 380.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is the Bicentennial of the Anniversary of the Birth of Daniel Boone.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas no provision has been made to preserve some of the great shrines of pioneer history that played their part in the drama of the American Revolution, both in resistance to the efforts of the British and their Indian allies to wipe out the American colonists west of the Alleghenies and thus close in on the colonists along the Atlantic seaboard and in waging a counteroffensive that resulted in the conquest and acquisition of the old Northwest; and

Whereas four of these shrines in Kentucky represent in continuity a counterpart of the American Revolution east of the Alleghenies, to wit: (1) Boonesborough, where the first fort "In the West" was erected, the first highway to "the West, the Wilderness Road", terminated, the first colonization was effected, and the first legislature met; (2) Boones Station, whence Daniel Boone, as lieutenant colonel of the Fayette County Militia, rushed troops to the assistance of various other besieged stations as well as joined in the retaliatory campaigns under Gen. George Rogers Clark into the old Northwest, and where he buried his son and nephew, who fell at the Battle of Blue Licks; (3) Bryans Station, where the women of the fort sallied forth under the rifles of some 600 Indians to procure water for the besieged pioneers on August 18, 1782, contributing in large measure to the successful defense of the fort; and (4) Blue Licks Battlefield, scene of the accredited "Last battle of the revolution", August 19, 1782, which aroused all of the western colonists to unitedly launch a devastating campaign into the Ohio country, under the leadership of Gen. George Rogers Clark, that effectually stopped further invasion of Kentucky by the British and Indians and was the forerunner of the final conquest of the entire Northwest Territory for the United States: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept donated lands, without cost to the United States, of an area appropriate for the proper commemoration of the valor and sacrifices of the pioneers at the sites of Fort Boonesborough, Boones Station, Bryans Station, and Blue Licks Battlefield in the State of Kentucky, comprising noncontiguous tracts to be united by a memorial highway, all in its entirety to be dedicated to the pioneers of the "the West", and established and set apart as the Pioneer National Monument for the preservation of the historical structures and remains thereon and for the benefit and enjoyment of the people.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to designate a Commission, that shall serve without salary, to recommend the areas to be preserved for inclusion in the Pioneer National Monument.

SEC. 3. That the said Commission shall be authorized to use the franking privilege of the United States mails for the purpose of carrying on correspondence relating to, and in furtherance of, said work.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHAPMAN: Page 2, line 3, strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That when title to the sites of Fort Boonesborough, Boones Station, Bryans Station, and Blue Licks Battlefield, in the State of Kentucky, comprising noncontiguous tracts to be united by a memorial highway, together with such historical structures and remains thereon as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior as necessary or desirable for national-monument purposes, and for the proper commemoration of the valor and sacrifices of the pioneers of 'the West', shall have been vested in the United States, said areas and improvements shall be designated and set apart by proclamation of the President for preservation of a national monument for the benefit and inspiration of the people, and shall be called the 'Pioneer National Monument.'

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept donations of land, interests in land, and/or buildings, structures, and other property within the boundaries of said national monument as determined and fixed hereunder, and donations of funds for the purchase and/or maintenance thereof, the title and evidence of title to lands acquired to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That he may acquire, on behalf of the United States, out of any donated funds, by purchase at prices deemed by him reasonable or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, such tracts of land within the said national monument as may be necessary for the completion thereof.

"SEC. 3. That the administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid national monument shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled 'An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes', as amended."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The preamble was stricken from the bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS AGATE PASS, KITSAP COUNTY, WASH.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 372, H.R. 9723, to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act authorizing the Bainbridge Island Chamber of Commerce, a corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Agate Pass connecting Bainbridge Island with the mainland in Kitsap County, State of Washington", and to substitute therefor S. 3604.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I must object to returning to any bills that have been acted upon. I think we ought to get along with this calendar. I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Well, it will only be losing time.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. We just returned to a bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I was temporarily out of the Chamber, or I would have objected to returning to that bill. I object to the gentleman's request, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURAL EMERGENCY RELIEF ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2674, to amend an act entitled "An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes", approved May 12, 1933.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, is the sponsor of this bill on the floor?

Mr. ELTSE of California. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. TRUAX. I understand that, but I should like to know something about the bill. I have not had an opportunity to read the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield? I was interested in this bill because of the situation which arose in Michigan, and I am sure must have arisen in other States. This bill, as I understand it, simply provides that a miller or processor does not have to pay the processing tax on flour and other commodities which are subject to a processing tax which he delivers to municipalities for welfare purposes. Heretofore he has been compelled to pay the tax and then make application for relief. This gives him the privilege of making a report by filing a receipt, or something of that nature, so that he will get credit for the tax, instead of having to pay it and then file a claim for the return of it.

Mr. TRUAX. Has this bill been considered by the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes. It was reported out by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. UTTERBACH], and I assume it was considered by that committee.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. FULMER. A similar bill introduced in the House has been considered by the Committee on Agriculture and reported. The committee believes it to be a very fair bill, because when these parties have to pay the processing tax they have to wait a certain time to get the money returned; whereas under this bill they will not have to wait for the return of the processing tax.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is my understanding correct?

Mr. FULMER. It is absolutely correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I merely reserved the right to object to bring that point out.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman would be willing to accept an amendment providing that on September 1 the processing tax on hogs be discontinued.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have no objection; however, I think the committee should speak for it on that.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (c) of section 15 of the act entitled "An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes", approved May 12, 1933, is amended to read as follows:

"Any person, including any State or Federal organization or institution, delivering any product to any organization for charitable distribution, or use, including any State or Federal welfare organization, for its own use, whether the product is delivered as merchandise, or as a container for merchandise, or otherwise, shall, if such product or the commodity from which processed is under this title subject to tax, be entitled to a refund of the amount of any tax due and paid under this title with respect to such product so delivered, or to a credit against any tax due and payable under this title of the amount of tax which would be refundable under this section with respect to such product so delivered: Provided, however, That no tax shall be refunded or credited under this section, unless the person claiming the refund or credit establishes, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury (1) that he has not included the tax in the price of the product so delivered or collected the amount of the tax from the said organization, or (2) that he has repaid, or has agreed in writing to repay, the amount of the tax to the said organization. No refund shall be allowed under this section unless claim therefor is filed within 6 months after delivery of the products to the organization for charitable distribution, or use. The word 'State' as used in this section shall include a State and any political subdivision thereof."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MOUNT ROOSEVELT

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 349, designating or naming a certain mountain in the State of Tennessee "Mount Roosevelt", and for other purposes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman any objection to renaming Boulder Dam with its original name, "Hoover Dam", the name having been changed during the administration to Boulder Dam?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, that has nothing to do with the present bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman from California think he could find a second to his motion if he were to look all over the United States?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I doubt it.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I certainly could—20,000,000 of them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I thought the action in changing the name "Hoover Dam" to "Boulder Dam" was so small that it was beneath the dignity of any Member of this House to notice; so nothing has been said about it.

I want the RECORD to show, however, that those same gentlemen who would have objected to that action on the part of the Secretary of the Interior are not objecting to this bill. The reason we are not objecting is because we do not want to so belittle ourselves as to put ourselves in the same category with the Secretary of the Interior who belittled the office he holds in taking off the name of a former President of the United States from that great project for purely political purposes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this mountain is in my congressional district. As I understand it this name is not confined to the present President but includes the elder Roosevelt as well.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, this mountain is to be known as Mount Roosevelt.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. As a matter of fact the object of this measure is to do honor to the Roosevelt name.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is to be known as Mount Roosevelt, in honor of Franklin D. Roosevelt. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that this mountain is within the Tennessee Valley development and is a short distance from the Norris Dam. It is desired by the people and by civic bodies of public-spirited citizens in that section where the T.V.A. development is taking place that the name Roosevelt should be given to this mountain, a part of Waldens Ridge and within the Tennessee Valley development.

Mr. Speaker, no appropriation or expense to the Government is contemplated. This is simply an effort on the part of the citizens of Tennessee to do honor to the name of Roosevelt, the name of our great President.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. While I think the gentleman might have found a mountain over in his own congressional district to be dignified in this way, still I am proud of the fact that a mountain in my district is to receive this distinction.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, it is a consummation devoutly to be wished that as a result of the designation of this mountain as "Mount Roosevelt" that the great President may have no opposition in the great State of Tennessee in the future, and especially in my colleague's congressional district, the Second of Tennessee, where so much is being done for all the people by this Democratic President and great leader.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, has instituted a mighty national recovery program, included in which are many useful and needed projects in Tennessee; and

Whereas he visioned the tremendous possibilities of Muscle Shoals, the Tennessee Valley, and instituted or set up the Tennessee Valley Authority; and

Whereas through his able guidance and sterling leadership this Nation has been relieved of a most tense financial situation, changing the course of this Government from one of distress and destruction to one of peace and prosperity; and

Whereas the people of Tennessee are anxious to perpetuate the name "Roosevelt" as a symbol of thanks and appreciation for his efforts and accomplishments: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That from and after the passage of this resolution a certain mountain lying and being in Roane County, Tenn., on the east line or range of the Cumberland Mountains and on Waldens Ridge 3 miles southwest of Rockwood, Roane County, Tenn., and about 1.7 miles northeast of the Roane-Cumberland County line, and being the northeast terminus of United States Highway No. 70 at the Roane-Cumberland County line and being shown on the "Kingston, Tenn." sheet of reconnaissance map of Tennessee prepared by the Geological Survey as having an elevation of more than 2,000 feet, and being without a name, be, and the same is hereby, designated as "Mount Roosevelt."

SEC. 2. That all records, surveys, maps, and public documents of the United States in which such mountain is mentioned or referred to shall refer to same under the name of "Mount Roosevelt."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the preamble will be stricken from the joint resolution.

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE POLICY OF ISSUING TAX-FREE BONDS IS NOT ONLY UNETHICAL AND UNSOUND BUT IT IS BREEDING EVER-INCREASING DISCONTENT, BECAUSE IT UNEQUALLY DISTRIBUTES THE BURDENS AND BENEFITS OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I have frequently discussed the question of tax-exempt securities, contending that the policy was unsound, unethical, and productive of grave social injustice. I have insisted that by issuing tax-exempt securities we were unequally and unfairly distributing the burden of taxation, because men possessing great fortunes which they have invested in tax-free bonds do not bear their just proportion of the tax burden of the Nation, State, and city.

On the other hand those who contribute so largely to the social, civic, industrial, commercial, and economic life of a community, State, and Nation, and who assume the risks incident to industrial life and commercial ventures, not only pay their just proportion of the expenses of government, but the part of such expense that should have been contributed by a few citizens who escape taxation by changing their investments into tax-exempt securities.

The multiplication of fabulous fortunes in the hands of the idle classes seriously impairs legitimate business enterprise and threatens our economic life and national well-being. This is especially true if those colossal fortunes escape taxation and are not required to contribute their just proportion of the cost of maintaining our institutions. These great fortunes are protected by State and Nation, and there is no sound reason by their share of the cost of government should be saddled on the shoulders of those whose capital is not invested in tax-free bonds.

Following the World War, when our revenue laws were in process of revision, many beneficiaries of war-time profiteering argued that if the excess-profits tax were eliminated and surtaxes radically reduced, swollen fortunes and incomes would not seek refuge in tax-exempt securities. When Congress repealed the excess-profits tax and radically reduced surtaxes there was no visible reduction in the demand for tax-exempt bonds. In fact, the funds released by the repeal of the excess-profits tax and by the reduction of the high-bracket surtaxes were promptly invested in tax-exempt securities, and each year a much larger proportion of our surplus capital has found refuge from taxation in securities of this character.

It is questionable if the repeal of the excess-profits tax and the reduction of surtaxes have diverted much capital into industrial and commercial investment channels. On the contrary, this particular species of tax reduction has made available an ever-increasing supply of capital for investment in tax-free bonds. As a rule, tax-exempt securities are owned by those who have accumulated colossal fortunes, not in the ordinary industrial enterprises and commercial ventures which are helpful to mankind, but by war-time profiteering, monopolistic manipulation of markets, or other methods of unethical character. Will it be contended that our Government is powerless to reach, for the purpose of taxation, vast fortunes that are snugly hidden away in tax-free securities?

The rapid increase in the cost of government, local, State and national, is a matter of grave concern to all thoughtful students of present-day problems, in view of which it would be extremely unwise to limit either Federal or State sources of revenue. No class of property should be beyond a fair and reasonable exercise of the taxing power. In peace times, as well as in times of national peril, the right and power to tax every class of property, tangible or intangible, must be indisputable in order that taxation may be equalized, equitably readjusted, and ultimately reduced.

The power to reach every class of property, tangible and intangible, and subject it to the taxing power, is an essential element of sovereignty, and the just and moderate exercise of power is imperative if our national ideals are to be maintained. In order to establish a just and scientific tax system no securities or other properties should be placed outside of the zone of taxation, and by granting immunity from taxation to any form of investment we disregard the traditions and violate the principles that permeate, underlie, and vitalize our free institutions.

It is contended that to discontinue the issue of tax-exempt bonds will increase the interest rates on securities hereafter issued by States, counties, and other political subdivisions. This specious argument appeals to those who have not the time, inclination, or ability to analyze the proposition and discover its fallacy. In the last analysis the discontinuance of the issue of tax-exempt securities will not materially affect the interest rate on bonds issued by the Federal Government or States and their local subdivisions. On reflection everyone familiar with financial affairs knows that there is always a large amount of funds belonging to schools, colleges, universities, insurance companies, trust estates, and other institutions available for investment in the bonds of the United States, States, counties, and their subdivisions, even at a rate considerably below the interest on prime industrial or other high-class securities.

Repudiation of public debt is practically unheard of in America. Tax-secured bonds are safe and of the highest class. The interest and sinking funds for their ultimate payment are provided by taxation on tangible and intangible property, the assessed value of which is several times the bonded indebtedness. There is practically no element of risk, and bonds of this character, even if not free from taxation, will always be in demand, although the interest rate is considerably below the interest on prime commercial paper or securities. The procedure for the creation of indebtedness of this character is so simple and well established that the legality of bonds issued by the national, State, and local government is seldom questioned. It is the established policy of our courts to hold these issues valid unless the plain provisions of the Constitution and statutes have been recklessly ignored. Bond issues by States, counties, and their political subdivisions are rarely held invalid by our courts. The amount of these bond issues and the purposes for which they may be issued are matters of general knowledge and definitely established by our constitutions and statutes. These reasons have more to do with the price at which these bonds are sold than the tax-exempt feature, and there is always an ample supply of capital seeking this, the highest and most desirable type of security, to absorb bond issues by the United States, States, counties, municipalities, road districts, drainage districts, and other political subdivisions. Bear in mind that these securities would be absorbed at an interest rate considerably below the rate earned on choice industrial, transportation, and commercial issues.

There will always be a large class of investors who prefer public securities, even at a lower rate, to industrial securities bearing higher rates, but subject to fluctuation on account of varying economic conditions. This exemption privilege is not adequately reflected in the price at which these bonds are marketed or in the effective interest rates, because so many bonds of this character have been issued and are now outstanding that the market is saturated, and a very considerable proportion of these securities must be sold to persons whose incomes are comparatively small and to whom the exemption is of but little or no value.

This justifies the conclusion that the exemption privilege does not materially reduce the interest rate, and State and local governments are not in fact saving much, if any, interest by reason of the tax-exemption privilege, while, on the other hand, men of great wealth whose fortunes are invested in these securities are wholly or partially immune from normal and surtaxes on their income from these investments.

Treasury officials agree that the United States Government could have issued and sold several issues of bonds at practically the same rate if they had not included the tax-exemption feature. Prior to the adoption of the progressive income-tax system the slight advantage enjoyed by bonds of States and municipalities was largely because they were the obligations of responsible Commonwealths or their political subdivisions, because they were bottomed on the taxing power and payable out of public revenues, because their legality was undoubted and their flotation had been sanctioned by well-understood, constitutional, and statutory provisions, and, finally, because the faith and credit of responsible governmental agencies were behind such securities.

In answer to the argument that tax-exempt bonds promote public improvements and enable local communities to secure lower rates of interest on their obligations, I assert that what States or their local subdivisions save in interest they lose in taxes. The conclusion is inescapable that if we exempt one class of property or one form of investment from taxation we automatically and inevitably increase the taxes on all the other classes of property and forms of investment. It is idle to contend that we are getting something for nothing when we issue tax-free bonds. The apparent benefit in the form of a lower interest rate is lost in the higher scale of taxes that must be laid on other property to compensate for the revenue losses resulting from the issue of a great mass of tax-free securities.

If it be conceded that the tax-exempt feature does enable States and their local subdivisions to borrow money at a lower interest rate, it necessarily follows that the burden withheld from securities of this character must be placed elsewhere. If one community or class is given partial immunity from taxation, it means that the taxes remitted to that class or community must be laid on and collected from other communities or classes. Moreover, the policy of issuing tax-exempt securities automatically raises the rate of interest on all other forms of investment and takes the burden off those best able to bear it and who, in equity and good conscience, should carry it, and places it on the wage earner, the farmer, and the ordinary business man. It relieves of taxation the capitalist who buys these bonds, but a burden he would otherwise bear is transferred to the mass of common people.

If a great city borrows money for a public purpose, the people of that city get practically all the benefit, if any, from the transaction. The people outside that community and removed therefrom derive no special or peculiar advantage from the transaction, and yet by exempting the securities which represent the transaction from taxation the proportion of taxes borne by the general public is largely augmented.

Moreover, this policy of issuing tax-free bonds is not only breeding ever-increasing discontent, but to recoup the losses incident to their issue we not only increase the tax rate on other property but we are constantly under the necessity of devising new forms of taxation, many of which are obviously unscientific and extremely vexatious, and some are opposed to the spirit, if not the letter, of our organic law. A continuation of this unethical policy will perpetuate and fasten on our people a discriminatory, uneconomic, unscientific, illogical, and in many respects un-American tax system.

If only a few States or municipalities issued tax-free bonds, these securities, because of their exemption from taxation, would doubtless command a much lower rate of interest than taxable securities; but the practice of issuing tax-exempt securities is being so extensively followed by States and their local subdivisions that the former advantage in interest rates no longer exists, except to a very negligible degree.

May I say in closing that the prohibition of the future issuance of tax-exempt securities is not an attack on the sovereignty of the States, would not deprive them of any of their constitutional privileges. I am advocating policies which, if adopted, will remove an unjust and originally unintended privilege and result in a more equal and proper distribution of the tax burden. The American people will never be satisfied with any tax system which is not based upon the principle of equality. What the people want is, in the language of Professor Seligman:

Equality between States and Nation.
Equality between local and Federal bonds.
Equality between economic classes.
Equality between earned and unearned income.
Equality between rich and poor—that is the equality which we desire to achieve.

The problem of tax exemption is a problem of fiscal equality; it is a problem of social justice.

CALIFORNIA STATE PARK SYSTEM

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8684, to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State park system.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my objection, but permit me to say that it seems to me that when we started out today there was a concerted effort—probably on the part of the Republican strategy—on the part of the Republicans from California and certain sections of the East to knock off every bill on the calendar that affected Northern or Central Western States, without their giving a chance for an explanation, but by merely hopping up like robots to object to each one of these bills.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's words be taken down.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I am perfectly willing that they be taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will indicate the words he wants taken down.

Mr. TABER. That the gentlemen were jumping up like robots.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my remarks as to robots.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to this bill. May I call the attention of the gentleman from California [Mr. BURNHAM] to one particular paragraph of the splendid message of the President of the United States which we have just heard, and I hope he will indulge me a minute.

The extent of the usefulness of our great natural inheritance of land and water depends on our mastery of it. We are now so organized that science and invention have given us the means of more extensive and effective attacks upon the problems of nature than ever before. We have learned to utilize water power, to reclaim deserts, to recreate forests, and to redirect the flow of population. Until recently we have proceeded almost at random, making many mistakes.

I fear that the bill, which the gentleman offers, converting certain lands to the State of California for use of the California State park system might be one of these mistakes made at random. I sincerely believe that all such projects ought to go over until the next Congress meets; then have a comprehensive, unified program for all of these lands.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, in my reservation of objection I have the floor.

We had a number of bills up here today that vitally affected the schools of States in our section of the country. It appears to me that a concerted effort was made to strike bills from the Consent Calendar that vitally affected Northern and Western States, which are normally Republican, and which perhaps the strategists of the Republican Party hope to win back by such tactics. Now, we come to bills to transfer land to the State of California and other sections, and there is no objection to the bills from the Republican official objectors. Yesterday when we had a bill up transferring some land to a section in the Central West there were plenty of objections and the bill was taken off the calendar. I want to reach some agreement here where the bills affecting the Central West will get some consideration until they can at least be explained by their proponents.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, so far as this gentleman is concerned, there is going to be no agreement.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8683, to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State park system.

Mr. TRUAX, Mr. YOUNG, and Mr. O'MALLEY objected.

PATENTS TO SCHOOL SECTIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1825, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents to the numbered school sections in place, granted to the States by the act approved February 22, 1889, by the act approved January 25, 1927 (44 Stat. 1026), and by any other act of Congress.

Mr. CARTER of California and Mr. TRUAX objected.

DESCHUTES NATIONAL FOREST, STATE OF OREGON

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2924, to include within the Deschutes National Forest, in the State of Oregon, certain public lands within the exchange boundaries thereof.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CONVEYING CERTAIN LANDS TO STATE OF IOWA

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7834, to provide for conveying to the State of Iowa certain lands within the nonnavigable meandered lake beds within that State for use as public parks, recreation grounds, and game refuges.

Mr. CARTER of California and Mr. AYERS of Montana objected.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlemen withhold their objections?

Mr. CARTER of California. I will withhold my objection.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to withhold mine.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARTER of California and Mr. AYERS of Montana objected.

FALSE RETURNS BY POSTMASTERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7310, to enable the Postmaster General to withhold commissions on false returns made by postmasters.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. CARTER of California. I reserve my objection.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, may I make a statement with reference to the attack made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, in which he accused the Members on this side awhile ago of entering into a conspiracy, and particularly those Members from California. I was the only gentleman from California that made the objection to the gentleman's bill, and I objected on the merits of the bill.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CONVEYING CERTAIN LANDS TO STATE OF IOWA

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 338, the bill (H.R. 7834) to provide for conveying to the State of Iowa certain lands within the nonnavigable meandered lake beds within that State for use as public parks, recreation grounds, and game refuses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. AYERS of Montana. I object.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the gentleman from Montana was not on his feet when he objected.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object to returning to any bill that has been objected to. I am not objecting because of the merits or demerits of the bill but I am objecting to returning to any bill that has been objected to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that we have already returned to the bill by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman that we have already returned to the bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. There was objection by the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I understand there is now no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman from Montana on his feet seeking to object to returning to the bill?

Mr. WEARIN. No.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, in Iowa we have a peculiar condition of law respecting some nonnavigable, meandered lake beds and shallow ponds. It is proposed by this bill to transfer whatever title the United States may have in these lakes to the State of Iowa. Iowa claims them and the United States agrees by its Secretary of the Interior and land office that it does not own them. If you will read the report you will see that the Secretary thinks this bill is eminently satisfactory. The bill provides that these shall be transferred to the State so that the State can hold them in perpetuity, for ever and ever, world without end, for recreation grounds, parks, and game preserves. They are not to be drained. In this season of drought we want the State, through its conservation board, to have power to attend to these lakes.

The bill provides that the transfer shall be subject to legal and valid rights of everybody. It provides that the United States shall reserve its coal and oil and mineral rights. It also provides, in so many words, that Iowa shall be bound to use them in perpetuity for parks and recreation grounds and it goes further to say that if we do not do this, then the title shall revert to the Government.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In other words, you are seeking to restore the level of the lakes and not to drain them?

Mr. GILCHRIST. Yes; the purpose is to put them under our board of conservation so they cannot be despoiled. This is exactly what the bill does.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. Yes.

Mr. WEARIN. I should like to make a brief statement with reference to the bill.

I happened to be a member of the State Legislature of Iowa when we started a comprehensive program of conservation that is in harmony with the present national administration, and this bill likewise is in harmony with the program, both of the State of Iowa and the National Government, from the standpoint of conservation, and I can assure the Congress that the State of Iowa is now launching upon this long-term plan of developing its natural resources for purposes of general benefit to the public and I can also assure all of you that this is a very meritorious measure and I trust it shall go through without objection.

Mr. GILCHRIST. And if we do not do what we say we will do, the title reverts to the United States under the terms of the bill itself. I cannot conceive of a more wholesome proposition. There should not be the slightest objection to the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me the gentleman's program is just an incidental matter so far as the President's whole program is concerned as set forth in his message today.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I think it is a part of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the next bill.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, it is apparent we are not going to get anywhere today and I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was rejected

PUBLICATIONS OF LIMITED CIRCULATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8245, to reduce the fee to accompany applications for entry as second-class matter of publications of limited circulation.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STUDLEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a post office bill, and it is recommended by the Post Office Committee and also by the Department.

Mr. TRUAX. What does the bill propose to do?

Mr. STUDLEY. It proposes to reduce the fee to accompany applications for entry as second-class matter of publications of limited circulation.

Mr. TRUAX. Whom does it benefit?

Mr. STUDLEY. It benefits a lot of small bulletins and magazines like those of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Spanish-American War veterans and a lot of lodges and organizations, as well as various religious papers, that have a limited circulation. It is recommended by the Department and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on the Post Office.

Mr. TRUAX. With the gentleman's assurance that it does benefit all of the veterans' organizations and the fraternal orders, I withdraw by reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADJUSTMENT OF CLAIMS OF POSTMASTERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9120, to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the Postmaster General to adjust certain claims of postmasters for loss by burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty", approved March 17, 1882, as amended.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. What happened to no. 389 on the calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was objected to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently, there is not a quorum present.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

RATE CONTROL OF RAILROADS WITHOUT SIMILAR RATE CONTROL OF COMPETING FORMS OF TRANSPORTATION IS RANK DISCRIMINATION

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, this Congress should not adjourn until after it has enacted legislation which places all competing forms of commercial transportation under the same regulation which applies to the railroads. Such legislation has been before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee during the greater part of this session of Congress. Long before now it should have been brought out of that committee and passed by Congress.

More than 4 years ago, the House of Representatives passed a bill which placed commercial busses and trucks under governmental regulation and control. That bill was pigeonholed in the Senate. After that experience no similar legislation has been passed by the House. The House of Representatives should pass the bill which is now in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and then insist upon Congress staying in session until it is voted upon in the Senate. The entire railroad industry, capital and labor, is deserving of such legislation being enacted.

The railroads are the largest taxpayers in the country. The railroads are our principal form of transportation. The railroads are hamstrung by Government rate regulation. Every citizen in the country is vitally interested in the railroads in one way or another. Every citizen vitally depends upon the railroads for the transportation of many of the things which he buys and sells. Every citizen is interested in the railroads because the railroads bear such a great percentage of the tax burden of the country. If the railroads are impoverished then the tax burden which they are now carrying must be carried by the remainder of the people. Insurance companies have a large part of their assets invested in railroad securities. If these securities become worthless, the life-insurance policies of millions of our people become impaired. There are so many people employed in the railroad industry that practically every community is either directly or indirectly interested in the welfare of the railroads.

Yet, in the face of these facts, we have carried on the unwise policy of taxing the railroads to build parallel highways which are used by passenger busses and freight trucks in competition with the railroads. These commercial busses and trucks use these highways virtually free of charge. These public highways are to these commercial busses and trucks what the rights-of-way are to the railroads. The railroads have their money invested in their rights-of-way and their tracks. The upkeep on these tracks is a tremendous charge upon the railroads and it furnishes labor for thousands of our citizens. The amount which the commercial busses and trucks pay for the use of the highways is little or nothing as compared with the expenses of the railroads in the owning and maintaining of their rights-of-way.

This discrimination is only a small part of the governmental discrimination which is being practiced against the railroads. The railroads are held to rigid rates prescribed by law while these commercial busses and trucks practice a sort of a piracy by the undercutting of railroad rates for the transportation of passengers and freight. This constitutes the most vicious and unfair form of competition. We have set up the N.R.A., professing that our purpose is to eliminate unfair trade practices in industry. Yet, in the case of transportation, the Government is responsible for the worst kind of an unfair trade practice when it prescribes rigid rates for the railroads and then permits commercial busses and trucks to use the public highways virtually free and to undercut these established rates of the railroads.

These commercial busses and trucks are most assuredly common carriers and should be treated as such by the Government. Their rates should be prescribed by law. Their rates should be legally prescribed so that the public will be protected, and there will be fair and reasonable competition as between these commercial busses and trucks on the one hand and the railroads on the other. This is the legislation which should be enacted. This is the legislation which has been smoldering in the committee throughout this entire session of Congress. This is the legislation which should be enacted before we adjourn.

With hundreds of thousands of railroad laboring men unemployed, the obligation is upon the Congress to enact legislation which would insure fair competitive conditions between the railroads and competing forms of transportation. Such legislation would make it possible for a goodly part of these railroad men to get back to work.

In the special session of Congress at the request of the President, Congress enacted the Railway Transportation Act. This act provided for the Coordinator of the railroads. Congress, railroad capital, and railroad labor were all alike informed that the Coordinator under the Transportation Act would set about to adjust the intolerable and inequitable condition in which we find the railroad industry. The truth is, a year has gone by and nothing has been done to adjust the railroad situation. It is true that Congress cannot meet all the ills which beset the railroad industry. Congress can enact legislation which will provide for fair, just, competitive conditions as between the railroads and competing forms of transportation. Until this is done, the railroads stand as the forgotten industry. The unemployed railroad man stands out as the forgotten man. He is as much the forgotten man today, nearly 2 years after the election, as he was before the election in 1932. In fact, he is more forgotten today than he was 2 years ago. In the meantime, Secretary Ickes, the Public Works Administrator, has used public works money which Congress appropriated to take care of the unemployed for projects which when completed will make more unemployment on the railroads. I refer to Secretary Ickes' use of more than a hundred million dollars for the purpose of building hydroelectric projects. When these hydroelectric projects are completed, they will replace existing steam-generating electric plants. These steam-generating plants are operated by coal.

The coal for these steam plants is being hauled from the coal mines to the electric-light plants by the railroads. When these hydroelectric projects are completed and the steam-generating plants are out of business, there will be no demand for this coal.

For the years there have been about 10 or 15 cars of coal daily hauled out of southeast Kansas on the railroads into Nebraska to be used by steam-generating electric plants. Secretary Ickes has allotted Public Works money for the Loup River hydroelectric project in Nebraska. When that project is completed, the market for this Kansas coal will be lost. Then Kansas coal miners will have lost the employment of producing coal, and the Kansas railroad men will have lost the employment incident to the hauling of this coal. This is only one of many similar instances where railroad labor and coal miners are to be thrown out of work as a result of hydroelectric plants which are now being built from Public Works money.

At best the railroads have enough trouble without the Government in more ways than one going out of its way to make new trouble for the railroad industry.

SELECTION OF LAND IN CALIFORNIA FOR STATE PARK SYSTEM

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 384.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 384.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, what bill is that?

Mr. CARTER of California. It is H.R. 8684, to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State park system.

Mr. TRUAX. I object.

Mr. CARTER of California. Will the gentleman reserve the objection and give the author of the bill a chance to make an explanation?

Mr. TRUAX. I reserve the objection and yield to the author of the bill.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that the State of California may have the privilege of selecting certain desert lands owned by the Federal Government for the purpose of a State park system. The lands are of no value whatever. I have photographs here of the lands, showing that they are characteristic desert lands. The State would like to preserve these lands for the benefit of tourists from all parts of the country. They can now develop these arid acres and furnish employment for the unemployed.

Mr. TRUAX. I will say, as I did a little while ago, that the President of the United States has disclosed in his message which was read today, that he is now making a comprehensive thorough survey of all of our marginal lands and worthless lands.

Mr. BURNHAM. This is in harmony with it.

Mr. TRUAX. I think the gentleman should be willing to let the bill go over until the next Congress as the President suggests.

Mr. BURNHAM. I want to say that the Secretary of the Interior favors this. It does not cost the Federal Government a cent, and as a matter of fact the State of California pays the cost of the filing fee which amounts to several thousand dollars, and neither the gentleman nor I would give 10 cents for all of the land.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman want me to again refer to the President's message? I am sorry, but I am constrained to object.

AMENDING ACT AUTHORIZING POSTMASTER GENERAL TO ADJUST CERTAIN CLAIMS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H.R. 9120, to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the Postmaster General to adjust certain claims of postmasters for loss by burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty," approved March 17, 1882, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER of California. I object.

GOVERNMENT QUARTERS AT EL PASO, TEX.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H.R. 1731, to make provision for suitable quarters for certain Government services at El Paso, Tex., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER of California. I object.

Mr. THOMASON. Will the gentleman withhold the objection?

Mr. CARTER of California. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. THOMASON. It seems that some of us are unjustly suffering from this controversy. We are innocent bystanders.

Down at El Paso, Tex., there must be certain Government facilities at the Rio Grande in order to take care of customs, immigration, and public health, not only for Americans going into Mexico but for Mexicans coming into the United States. For many years the employees of our Government have had quarters in an old and out-of-date leased building. Five years ago Congress appropriated $535,000 for a modern Government building. A site was selected and contracted for. When the abstract of title was delivered to the Attorney General for examination he refused to approve same because the land is in what is known as the Chamizal Zone, which is a strip of land claimed by Mexico on account of changes in the channel of the Rio Grande.

It is absolutely necessary that our Government have proper facilities at the American end of the International Bridge. Since it is impossible at this time to acquire land there with good title, the only thing left in the world to do is for private individuals who claim the land to erect decent quarters there and lease them to the Government. As it is now, there are a great many customs, immigration, and Public Health employees working there day and night in a place that is not adequate or sanitary. When the river rises the water accumulates on the floor 3 or 4 inches deep. There are many aliens there every day who have to be examined. Customs business must go on. So I say to my good friend from California [Mr. CARTER] that an emergency situation exists and every interested department of the Government, the State Department, the Treasury Department, the Public Health Department, heartily approve this, because it is the only thing left to be done to provide adequate quarters not only for the representatives of the American Government but for the hundreds of people who pass through that port every day and who have important business to transact.

It is impossible to carry on the business much longer in the present location. It is also impossible for the Government to erect its own building there any time soon. We have private parties who are willing to build a modern building and lease it to the Government upon terms and conditions that will be approved by proper departments and where the interest of the Government will be served as well as safeguarded.

The session is nearing a close and I fear this bill will not pass if it fails today. I beg my friend from California not to object. I should not be penalized because he is peeved at the gentleman from Ohio for objecting to his bill.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SENECA INDIAN SCHOOL, WYANDOTTE, OKLA.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 555, to authorize the acquisition by the United States of the land upon which the Seneca Indian School, Wyandotte, Okla., is located.

Mr. STUDLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to no. 390 on the calendar, H.R. 8245, to reduce the fee to accompany applications for entry as second-class matter of publications of limited circulation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the bill which the Clerk reported?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STUDLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California objected, but I think if he would withhold his objection I could explain the matter.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object and yield to the gentleman from New York. First, what bill is before the House?

The SPEAKER. Calendar No. 393, S. 555.

Mr. STUDLEY. Mr. Speaker, I refer to Calendar No. 390.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, are we considering Calendar No. 393?

The SPEAKER. We are.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my right to object to that and I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. STUDLEY].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But that is not the bill the gentleman from New York has in mind.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 390.

The SPEAKER. But we have not yet finished with Calendar No. 393.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. STUDLEY] to return to Calendar No. 390?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. A policy has been adopted on the other side that we should not go back to any of the bills that have been once considered until we get through.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, there is a disposition on the part of certain Members to object to all bills on the Consent Calendar. I hope we are going to get somewhere in order that we may do business on this calendar. We are getting close to adjournment, and this calendar may not be called up again. If we can complete the calendar, we may get consent from all sides to go back and take it up again, and I think that would be the solution of the matter at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. STUDLEY] to return to Calendar No. 390?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ARRESTS BY CERTAIN MEMBERS OF DIVISION OF INVESTIGATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9476, to empower certain members of the Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice to make arrests in certain cases, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, Calendar No. 393 was called, and several gentlemen got to their feet, and as I understand it, no objection was made to Calendar No. 390.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California objected.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the gentleman from California reserve his objection until I can make a statement about the bill?

The SPEAKER. We are now considering Calendar No. 394.

Mr. DISNEY. I was on my feet trying to get recognition to ascertain the status of 393.

The SPEAKER. That is the status of it. It has been objected to.

Mr. DISNEY. I ask the gentleman from California to withhold his objection until I can make a statement.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California withhold his objection?

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my objection if the gentleman desires to make a statement.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, all that is involved in this little bill is $10,000 to pay the Wyandotte Indian Tribe for a piece of land that the Government has used for over 50 years for school purposes without paying the Indians a dime for it.

With this payment the Indian tribe can wind up its reservation affairs and close its business at once. It is the last piece of land which this tribe has. The school is used by the Government as a school for other Indians. There are five or six Wyandotte Indians who use this school. The Wyandottes who are left ought to be paid for this land. We are not asking for interest on the money or anything like that. The land is appraised at $60 an acre. I have seen the land and it is really worth more than that. You are not punishing anybody on this side or that side in objecting to this bill. You are simply holding up the clearing-up of the business of the Indian tribe. It will relieve the Indian department of a great deal of its work, and save a lot of expense. I hope the gentleman will not object. The bill has passed the Senate.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I must insist upon my objection. I object.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California informs me that he expects to object to every bill on the calendar. It is simply a matter of wasting time when we have other work to do, and I move that the House recess.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. FULMER. I will withhold it.

Mr. BYRNS. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that motion.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion.

EMPOWERING MEMBERS OF DIVISION OF INVESTIGATION OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE TO MAKE ARRESTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9476, to empower certain members of the Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice to make arrests in certain cases, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what I have to say is to try to get some place—to see if we can do some business here. To throw a little light on this subject, I wish to say that when we were considering the Indian bills, Calendar Nos. 325 to 345, early in the session today I made the statement that I had given very careful consideration to those bills and that I had talked with the Bureau of the Budget, and I said that I felt I had valid reasons for objecting to those bills on the Consent Calendar, and I objected to them. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

SWICK], and myself interposed objections. We interposed those objections in all good faith.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry, which I will transfer from the speaker to the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BYRNS. I should like to know if it is the purpose of the gentleman from California to continue to offer objections to all bills as they are called upon the Consent Calendar?

Mr. CARTER of California. While it is not a parliamentary inquiry, I think in fairness to the House and my colleagues I should make some statement on this matter. I want to say that objections were made to two bills, Calendar Nos. 384 and 385. The gentleman making the objection said he was not conscientiously opposed to the bills, but he was objecting to those bills because certain other bills had been objected to.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of California. In just a moment.

A call of the House intervened, and I asked unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 384, and the gentleman from Ohio interposed an objection to returning to the bill.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of California. In just a moment. I want to say that I regret very much to be compelled to pursue a course of this kind, but when gentlemen rise on the floor of the House and say that they file objection, as one gentleman did, because some other bills were objected to, and that he was not conscientiously opposed to the passage of the two bills to which I referred and to which he objected, I find this is the only means of protecting myself in this matter.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of California. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman knows that I do not subscribe to or endorse any action on either side of the Chamber in objecting to bills because some previous bill had been objected to. I think these bills ought to be considered on their merits. I do not think that one Member ought to penalize the entire House because some previous bill had been objected to, by objecting to all bills. But I suggest to the gentleman from California that two wrongs do not make a right.

If we could proceed with the balance of the calendar and consider the bills on their merits, well and good; but if we cannot, then I suggest to the Speaker that we take up the Private Calendar and see what we can accomplish with it.

Mr. Speaker, permit me to say to the Members of the House that all reason for taking a recess having now disappeared because of the fact that we can conclude this Consent Calendar today, it will be my purpose tonight to move that the House adjourn until tomorrow, and there will be no other chance before a week from Monday, if we are in session that long, to consider the Consent Calendar.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, who has the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor, but the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California objected to Calendar No. 384, to which bill I objected. The gentleman said I did not conscientiously object to the bill. I deny that statement.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I did not say that in reference to the gentleman's objection, but with reference to the first objection which was lodged against the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. I thank the gentleman. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to give to the State of California the right of acquiring certain land. The President in his message this morning stated definitely and repeatedly that he is undertaking a Nation-wide program of land conservation; and I am following the President of the United States rather than the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. HOEPPEL. This is merely desert land, and we are trying to preserve it in its natural state for posterity.

Mr. TRUAX. This is the first time I have heard that there is any desert land in California. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio in reference to following the recommendation of the President of the United States, the gentleman will find a report from the Secretary of the Interior, a representative of the President of the United States, recommending the enactment of this bill. It in no way conflicts with the President's policy. As a matter of fact, it is in direct line with the policy set out in the message of the President which was read here today.

Mr. TRUAX. The Secretary of the Interior is a Republican representative of the President of the United States.

Mr. CARTER of California. That may be the basis of the gentleman's objection.

Mr. TRUAX. If the gentleman will get the President's recommendation, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I understand it is the purpose of the gentleman from California to pursue the course he has indicated.

Mr. CARTER of California. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that for the present we abandon the calling of the Consent Calendar, inasmuch as we are not going to do any business under it, and that the Private Calendar be called under the order made yesterday.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the situation is as hopeless as that; I think there is a possibility of completing the Consent Calendar.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, there is no use asking consent to return to the gentleman's bill for the purpose of getting the gentleman's bill passed. We will not consent to it.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, in view of certain representations that have been made to me within the last few minutes, I shall abandon temporarily my procedure of objecting to each and every bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, in fairness to those Members to whose bills I objected, I ask unanimcus consent to return to those bills. I think they ought to be called sometime this afternoon. I objected to the bills in order to try to preserve a right I have here, and without any regard to the merits of the bills, but, as I say, in fairness to these Members I think their bills should be considered this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from California at any time to ask unanimous consent to return to the bills referred to.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9476, to empower certain members of the Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice to make arrests in certain cases, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director, Assistant Directors, agents, and inspectors of the Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice are empowered to serve warrants and subpenas issued under the authority of the United States; to make seizures for violation of the laws of the United States; to make arrests without warrant for felonies cognizable under the laws of the United States, in cases where the person making the arrest has reasonable grounds to believe that the person so arrested is guilty of such felony. Such members of the Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice are authorized and empowered to carry firearms.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "seizures", insert the words "under warrant."

Page 2, line 2, after the word "felony", insert the following: "and where there is a likelihood of the person escaping before a warrant can be obtained for his arrest, but the person arrested shall be immediately taken before a committing officer."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3040, to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to make and publish rules in actions at law.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will not the effect of this bill be to require attorneys in every one of the 48 jurisdictions of the United States to learn a lot of new rules of court procedure?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to the gentleman from California that if the Supreme Court promulgates these rules it will be necessary to learn them, of course. It is anticipated that the rules will be simple and that it will not be difficult for practicing attorneys to familiarize themselves with these rules. The Supreme Court, as the gentleman knows, has promulgated rules covering the practice in equity.

Mr. ELTSE of California. What is to be gained by this? At the present time the Federal courts follow the rules which prevail in the State courts?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. What is to be gained by setting up a new set of rules?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. To make for a uniform procedure; that is all.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will this be of material assistance to attorneys before the bar?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is anticipated it will be, and to the courts, too.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. May I ask the gentleman from Texas if it is not a fact that practically every bar association in the United States, including the American Bar Association, has advocated this legislation?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I understand that is true.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will not this set up a special class of lawyers who will practice in the Federal courts and compel the small-town lawyers, because of the intricacies of these rules which they will not understand from actual practice, to take in on these Federal cases lawyers who have specialized in practicing before the Federal courts?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to the gentleman that I have never heard that objection made, and I will be frank with him. I have heard the suggestion that it would make possible the development of interstate lawyers who would not have to employ local counsel in the event they wanted to go to a State other than the one in which they are accustomed to practice. It was thought by the Committee on the Judiciary that if we establish uniform rules of procedure the average lawyer in the little town could more easily familiarize himself with the whole practice from the time he went into the district court until he reached the Supreme Court, and in the long run have a better chance at Federal practice.

Mr. ELTSE of California. The gentleman knows that in actual practice the average small city lawyer goes into the Federal court possibly once a year or once every 2 years. At the present time he is just as much at home in the district court of the United States as he is in his own circuit or superior court, because the rules of practice are the same.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I believe if we had these uniform rules promulgated by the Supreme Court, so far as the lawyer in the small city is concerned, he would be better prepared to take his case and pursue it to the Supreme Court of the United States than he would be without uniform rules. Some people have thought that if we had these uniform rules and the lawyer from New York, for instance, went to another State he might not have to employ local counsel. That is the only objection I have heard from the standpoint of the lawyers at the bar. That objection, whatever may be its merit or lack of merit, does not seem to me to be well founded. Outside lawyers do not trust themselves alone before juries in foreign jurisdictions. The Supreme Court wants this and all of the bar associations have endorsed this, so far as I know.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Supreme Court of the United States shall have the power to prescribe by general rules, for the district courts of the United States and for the courts of the District of Columbia, the forms of process, writs, pleadings, and motions, and the practice and procedure in civil actions at law. Said rules shall neither abridge, enlarge, nor modify the substantive rights of any litigant. They shall take effect 6 months after their promulgation, and thereafter all laws in conflict therewith shall be of no further force or effect.

SEC. 2. The court may at any time unite the general rules prescribed by it for cases in equity with those in actions at law so as to secure one form of civil action and procedure for both: Provided, however, That in such union of rules the right of trial by jury as at common law and declared by the seventh amendment to the Constitution shall be preserved to the parties inviolate. Such united rules shall not take effect until they shall have been reported to Congress by the Attorney General at the beginning of a regular session thereof and until after the close of such session.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NAVY AND MARINE MEMORIAL MONUMENT

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 342, authorizing an appropriation to defray the expense of erecting the completed Navy and Marine Memorial Monument.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I cannot understand why it should cost any money to erect a completed building. That is what the title of this joint resolutions says: "A joint resolution to defray the expense of erecting the completed Navy and Marine Memorial Monument." If it is completed, I cannot see any reason for spending the money to erect it.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, this monument is entirely completed and is now in Cleveland, Ohio. The committee that has had this matter in charge for the last 10 years has spent about $380,000. In the last couple of years they have stopped functioning on account of the depression. The base and everything is right here on the Memorial Highway, and the firm in Cleveland, which has the monument completed, claims it will cost about $13,000 to bring it here and erect it complete. It will also cost about $5,000 for sodding and fixing up the approaches. Everyone that has passed on the Memorial Highway has been wondering what that thing was that is all boarded up. They spent $380,000, and if this bill is not passed it will cost a considerable amount of money to remove this granite base that has been lying there for several years. The monument is complete, and it will cost this much money to bring it from Cleveland and erect it here.

Mr. TABER. Was the other part of the expense paid by the Government?

Mr. BLOOM. No; nothing was paid by the Government.

Mr. TABER. This was a private enterprise which the Government is now being asked to defray?

Mr. BLOOM. I believe every Member of this House who has passed on the Memorial Highway has been wondering why this was boarded up. The thing is completed and it requires these few dollars to erect it. This Commission has practically gone out of business on account of the depression. I may say that some 2,000,000 school children have contributed to this thing.

Mr. TABER. Who contributed?

Mr. BLOOM. There is a long list in this book.

Mr. TABER. They thought they had money enough to complete it and now find they have not?

Mr. BLOOM. They cannot collect the amount of money that has been subscribed. For $13,000 we can complete and erect this monument. The money will be spent through the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. TABER. Would the gentleman accept an amendment reducing this to $13,000?

Mr. BLOOM. Complete?

Mr. TABER. The gentleman said it would cost $13,000 and in the resolution it is stated $18,000.

Mr. BLOOM. Thirteen thousand dollars for the monument and $5,000 for the sodding. If it does not cost that much money, well and good. The Secretary of the Navy has charge of the expenditure.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman mean that the people out in Cleveland want $13,000?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes. It will cost that much to bring it here and erect it. It is all completed.

Mr. TABER. Why is it necessary to have $5,000 more?

Mr. BLOOM. Five thousand is what they estimate it will cost to sod the ground and fix up the approaches.

Mr. TABER. It is to be on Government ground and to become a part of the park, is it not?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes. The gentleman can reduce it to $13,000 if he desires, but they were of the opinion that $18,000 would be necessary to cover everything necessary.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection, the gentleman from New York having agreed to an amendment reducing the amount from $18,000 to $13,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to ask the gentleman from New York a question. When the gentleman says he is going "to erect a completed building," is he going to do it by the Aladdin-lamp process or is he going to do it gradually?

Mr. BLOOM. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that this is not a building, it is a completed memorial.

Mr. BLANTON. It is stated here it is for the expense "of erecting a completed building."

Mr. BLOOM. A completed monument, ready for erection.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it going to be completed when it is erected?

I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the proviso in the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D.C., of a memorial to the Navy and Marine services, to be known as 'Navy and Marine Memorial Dedicated to Americans Lost at Sea'", approved February 16, 1924, is amended to read as follows: "Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the memorial shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts."

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $18,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, (1) for the transportation of the Navy and Marine Memorial Monument to the site on Columbia Island, D.C., chosen for such memorial in accordance with the provisions of such joint resolution of February 16, 1924; (2) for the erection of such memorial on the granite pedestal base already constructed on such site; and (3) for the landscaping and approach work of land adjacent to such base as the Secretary may deem necessary and appropriate.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 2, line 2, strike out "$18,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$13,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SENECA INDIAN SCHOOL, WYANDOTTE, OKLA.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 393, the bill (S. 555) to authorize the acquisition by the United States of the land upon which the Seneca Indian School, Wyandotte, Okla., is located.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not opposed to the gentleman's bill, but I think it would be unwise to return to any of the previous bills at this time. We have just established harmony and I think it would be better to go along with the calendar and then return to those bills later.

Mr. DISNEY. We cannot establish any harmony by breaking down the calling of the calendar by objecting to the bills of certain Members, when the objection is not based upon the merits of the bill, and then object to returning to them.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. All these bills will be returned to later; but if we try to pick them out one at a time and return to them, I think it will cause trouble.

Mr. DISNEY. And I have spent 2 hours waiting here to have this bill called.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am sorry, but I presume everybody else who is concerned in the matter has had the same experience.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXPERIMENT STATION AND EXTENSION WORK IN PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the next joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 270, to make available to Puerto Rico certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, for experiment station and extension work, which have not been paid because of unfulfilled conditions.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PROTECTION OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2248, to protect trade and commerce against interference by violence, threats, coercion, or intimidation.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. SCHULTE. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. This is the noted racketeering bill recommended here and agreed upon by organized labor and by the Department of Justice. It has been agreed upon by every factor involved in this kind of controversy. We have Mr. Green on record——

Mr. SCHULTE. Has the gentleman a letter from Mr. Green which states he is on record in favor of this bill?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Yes.

Mr. SCHULTE. If so, I shall withdraw my objection, if the gentleman will show me the letter.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I cannot show the gentleman the letter, but Mr. Green specifically agreed to it and it is stated in the report that there is a letter from the Attorney General embodying the agreement——

Mr. SCHULTE. I do not care anything about the Attorney General.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. And Mr. Green appeared before our committee and stated before our committee that he intended to go into a further conference——

Mr. SCHULTE. Will the gentleman give me his assurance that he has a letter from Mr. Green stating he has agreed to this bill?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I will not say I have a letter——

Mr. SCHULTE. Has the gentleman seen such a letter from Mr. Green?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. No; but I have seen an agreement in which the Attorney General said that Mr. Green had agreed to it.

Mr. SCHULTE. I object, but I will agree to having it passed over without prejudice.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will bear with me a moment—I do not know whether I can satisfy the gentleman or not. The members of the committee are very much concerned to have this matter straightened out if it can be done. Conferences have been had by the Attorney General with Mr. Green and with Mr. Easby-Smith, attorney for organized labor, and all the gentlemen of the committee believe the matter is entirely straightened and this bill is satisfactory to all those concerned.

Mr. SCHULTE. I am going to object at this time until you get in contact with Mr. Green.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Howe, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate requests the House to return to the Senate the bill (H.R. 7340) entitled "An act to authorize the Post Office Department to hold contractors or carriers transporting the mails by air or water on routes extending beyond the borders of the United States responsible in damages for the loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery, depredations upon, or other mistreatment of mail matter due to fault or negligence of the contractor or carrier, or an agent or employee thereof."

LEAVE TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORTS

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill S. 3025; and also until midnight to file a report on the housing bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, when does the gentleman intend to call up the conference report?

Mr. STEAGALL. Not before Monday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the two requests of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

PRINTING OF UNITED STATES CODE

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H.R. 6486, to repeal certain provisions of the act of March 4, 1933, and to reenact sections 4 and 5 of the act of March 2, 1929.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman reserve that motion?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will.

Mr. HARLAN. The deficiency appropriations bill that passed the Senate in the last hour of the Seventy-second Congress had an amendment, added to an appropriation bill, that came back with the conference report, and a lot of matters were injected into this amendment changing the rights of different committees—the Committee on Printing and the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. The present bill simply restores those rights and leaves the law as it was before. Senator FLETCHER, of the Joint Committee on Printing, did not object, and the representatives of the Joint Printing Committee in the House had no objection to it. It is simply a restoration of the rights of the two committees. The Committee on Revision of the Laws cannot proceed unless this bill is passed.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Why not?

Mr. HARLAN. Because the legislative reference service of the law department in the Congressional Library cannot function. We are getting out a code, and they are cooperating with us, and the man who is doing it is without any present authority.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Cannot you bring the bill in and compensate him later?

Mr. HARLAN. This legislation was all a mistake. It took away the prima facie character of the general code, and it was impractical all around. It was all done in the eleventh hour of the closing of the Seventy-second Congress.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. As far as that is concerned, this should have been brought in before the eleventh hour of the closing of the Seventy-third Congress.

Mr. HARLAN. It was a Senate amendment on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. But this is a House bill.

Mr. HARLAN. Yes; this is a House bill that has been passed by the Senate. The bill was filed in the early part of the session.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And it was put on the Consent Calendar when? On the 30th day of May of this year?

Mr. MARLAN. The subcommittee passed on it; and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING] had sickness in his family, and it was delayed.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It is not an emergency measure.

Mr. HARLAN. I want to say to the gentleman that if this bill does not pass I do not know how we are going to get out the code.

Mr. TRUAX. Will that be any great calamity?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If the gentleman says that it is necessary in order to get the code out, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. TRUAX. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Does this provide for the employment of more people?

Mr. HARLAN. It does not. It does not do anything except restore to the committee rights they had before.

Mr. TRUAX. Then the gentleman cannot use the argument of reemployment of men, as we do on most bills?

Mr. HARLAN. No; there is no new deal; no relief, no employment.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman thinks it is an emergency matter, and unless the laws are revised this year there will be hell popping in this country?

Mr. HARLAN. It has been 8 years since the Federal Code was gotten out, and we are supposed to codify it every 5 years.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I know that my colleague devotes a lot of time and energy and attention to the revision of the laws, and I am going to withdraw my objection upon his assurance that it is an emergency.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Senate bill, S. 3237, will be substituted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That such provisions in section 1 of the act of March 4, 1933 (47 Stat. 1603), as purport to amend "sections 4 and 5 of the joint resolution approved March 2, 1929 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 1, secs. 54 (a) and (b)", and hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. Sections 4 and 5 of such joint resolution of March 2, 1929 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 1, secs. 54 (a) and 54 (b)), shall hereafter be in full force and effect as originally enacted.

SEC. 3. That, subject to the provisions of the second section, the Joint Committee on Printing is hereby empowered to authorize the printing of any bill or resolution, with index and ancillaries, in such style and form as the Joint Committee on Printing shall deem to be most suitable in the interest of economy and efficiency, and to so continue until final enactment thereof in both Houses of Congress; and such committee may also curtail the number of copies of such bills or resolutions, including the slip form of such public act or public resolution.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 6486) was laid on the table.

NATIONAL PLANNING MEANS CONTROL OF ALL BUSINESS

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein an address delivered over the radio last evening by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech delivered by Hon. HAROLD MCGUGIN, of Kansas, over the National Broadcasting Co.'s circuit on Thursday, June 7, 1934:

"NATIONAL PLANNING" MEANS CONTROL OF ALL BUSINESS

The country is being committed to the program of "national planning." This is a program which all of us are learning more about and know more about than we did a year ago when it was presented to the country by the Roosevelt administration as a mere temporary emergency program. "National planning" means that in the end the control of every activity of the citizen has passed from the individual citizen over to the Government. It means that we are taking on a new form of government which is directly opposed to our plan of government under the Constitution.

The Democratic Party has committed itself to this program. It did not do so deliberately. Two years ago the Democratic Party went before the people with Franklin D. Roosevelt as its candidate and with a platform which was committed to the traditional precepts and principles of the Democratic Party, and which was in perfect keeping with constitutional government. The people accepted the Democratic Party upon its platform and the preelection statements of the Democratic candidate Mr. Roosevelt.

What happened is, President Roosevelt upon entering office chose not traditional Democrats to carry out the major responsibilities of his administration. He turned to another class of people, who are commonly known as the "brain trust." These "brain trusters" are committed to the philosophy in government known as "national planning." With President Roosevelt having taken this course, it is now no mere accident that his administration has cast aside the principles of the party of Jefferson, Jackson, Cleveland, and Wilson.

When the Roosevelt administration turned to those of the "brain trust" and accepted the program of "national planning", it was utterly impossible for this administration to keep faith with the traditional principles of the Democratic Party, to keep the pledges of the Democratic platform, to keep the preelection promises of President Roosevelt and to respect the liberties of the American citizens under the Constitution. It is as impossible to accept the program of "national planning" and at the same time preserve the constitutional rights of the citizen and the principles of the Democratic Party as it is for a man to travel east and west at the same time.

I am going to call a witness to substantiate my statements. In doing so, I must call a witness who is universally accepted as the foremost authority on "national planning." I must call a witness whose views cannot be depreciated by the suggestion that he is a political foe of this administration. I shall call Prof. Rexford G. Tugwell, who is the dominant personality in this administration and the foremost engineer of the administration program of "national planning." I shall use the testimony of Professor Tugwell as set forth in his speech before the American Economic Association in December 1931. At that time he held no public office and was under no obligation to color his statements in order to pacify any public sentiment. In this speech, he was discussing the subject of "national planning." In setting forth the requirements for "national planning", he said: "We have a century and more of development to undo." In this speech he set forth the three necessary changes which we must endure in order to have "national planning." They are, first, changing our constitutions and statutes once and for all; second, destroying business as we have known it; and, third, destroying the sovereignty of the States. After setting forth these requirements, he said: "All three of these wholesale changes are required by even a limited acceptance of the planning idea."

Before the American people move on to such a new and untried scheme of things they must have the right in an open election, with "planning" as the sole and paramount issue, to make their decision as to whether or not they choose to make this change once and for all. There is only one way that such a campaign could be placed before the American people. That is for the Republican Party to meet the issue squarely and declare its unqualified opposition to such a wholesale destruction of our constitutional Government and our civilization as we have known it. This is the obligation and the duty of the Republican Party to the country. In fact, it has no other choice, except to pass into nonexistence. Willingly or unwillingly the Democratic Party has been committed to this "planning" program by the Roosevelt administration. The Democratic Party has no alternative other than to give its unqualified support and endorsement to "national planning." Such a campaign will mean the breaking of political ties such as we have not seen since the election of 1860. The Republican who wants "planning" must give up his party ties and embrace the Democratic Party. The Democrat who believes that we should run this country within the Constitution and preserve our traditional rights and liberties under the Constitution must give up his Democratic ties and embrace the Republican Party.

In such a campaign the Republican Party must place the issue so squarely before the people that all will know that with "planning" no private business in which they are interested is a matter of their own concern but rather that such business is subject to the control and domination of Government. Upon that score Professor Tugwell said:

"There is no private business, if by that we mean one of no consequence to anyone but its proprietors; and so none exempt from compulsion to serve a planned public interest."

The issues must be placed before the people so clearly that they will understand that there is no way to have a "planned economy" except to make modifications in both our business and governmental structures so serious as to mean destruction and the rebeginning of both. Upon that subject Professor Tugwell said:

"It is, in other words, a logical impossibility to have a planned economy and to have business operating its industries, just as it is also impossible to have one within our present constitutional and statutory structure. Modifications in both, so serious as to mean destruction and rebeginning, are required."

The issues must be placed before the people so clearly that they will understand that there is no middle ground on this subject. Many of our citizens labor under the belief that we can have a "planned economy" by the Government acting as a mere advisory council with the citizen still operating and controlling his own activities. This is not true. On this subject Professor Tugwell said:

"The necessary conditions of planning are not established by any 'purely advisory national economic council.' An advisory council might guess, but it cannot plan."

In this speech before the American Economic Association, Professor Tugwell rendered a distinct service to the American people in that he made clear the price which we must pay for "national planning." The difference between Professor Tugwell and me is that he is eager to pay this price and to embrace "national planning", while I am not. In this speech he expressed his undying love for "planning." These are his words on that subject:

"The prospect of a planned economy is so congenial to every hope and belief that I have."

The issues in such a campaign must be made so clear that all will understand that the present program of control of government passing from Congress to the Executive, with Cabinet officers and commissions issuing rules and regulations, for the violation of which citizens are sent to the penitentiary, are all integral and inherent parts of "national planning." In other words, the people must understand that with "planning" it is inescapable that legislative government must give way to the system of government by Executive order. In this country we call these Executive orders "rules and regulations." In other countries they are honestly labeled "edicts."

The issues must be made so clear that the people will understand that this program of "national planning" is inescapably similar to the destruction of the rights and liberties of the citizens in Russia under the Soviet, in Germany under Hitler, and in Italy under Mussolini. What these three countries have is "national planning", with the government dominating and controlling all business and activities of the citizens. In order to have such a program it is inescapable that freedom of speech, freedom of the press, the right of labor to organize and bargain, and the citizen's right of contract must all be denied. These privileges of the citizens can only exist in a society where the people do their own planning and run their own business. There is no room for such privileges in a society where the government does the planning.

In such a campaign the Republican Party must also present an affirmative program. This affirmative program must include the correction of the evil which unbridled greed has brought upon our country. Our pledge must be reform, but reform within the Constitution. Our reform must be in keeping with the reforms of Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt. They had courageous programs of reform, but they kept them within the Constitution.

If we are to obtain public confidence in our pledge, we must first assure the people that the Republican Party is free from those selfish interests of concentrated wealth which have heretofore abused their American privileges and imposed too selfish a grip upon the Republican Party. The Republican Party must make its position so clear that no one can understand its pledge to operate under the Constitution to mean a privilege or a grant to any citizen or any class of citizens to enjoy any special privilege over the rest of the people. The affirmative program of the Republican Party must insure the rights and the liberties of the American people under the Constitution. At the same time, its position must be so clear that all will understand that protecting the rights of the individuals does not include the special privilege of small aggregations of individuals to band together in order to monopolize the economic opportunities which rightfully belong to the individual citizens of America.

The Republican Party must take a bold and affirmative position that agriculture is the basic industry of this country, and as such it must to a great extent depend upon world trade. Our program must include an interest in the world markets for agriculture as well as protecting the American markets for American industry.

In brief, the Republican Party must be so courageous, and so clear and explicit in its position and action that both seekers and foes of special privilege will know that the Republican Party of today is in spirit and in fact the rejuvenated party of Abraham Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt.

From the beginning, we must realize that such a program will bring to us powerful opposition. Large monopolistic institutions are now enjoying rights and privileges under the N.R.A. and its codes, privileges which were denied to those institutions by the antimonopoly laws that were given to this country by the Republican Party. These selfish beneficiaries of the present program are not going to give up their new privileges without a struggle. None the less, we must make bold our position that we stand for effective laws prohibiting monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade, together with an impartial enforcement of such laws, and that we are unalterably opposed to the suppression of the antimonopoly laws by codes, written and administered by monopoly, under the protection of the N.R.A.

In considering the fruits of the N.R.A. to date it is well to remember that the true benefits which it has accomplished are the shortening of the hours of labor and the reducing of child labor in industry. The N.R.A. and its codes were not at all necessary in order to obtain these benefits. The interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution grants the same power to Congress to accomplish these two benefits by legislation that is granted to authorize the codes under the N.R.A. If the codes which shorten the hours of labor and prohibit child labor are constitutional, likewise direct legislation on the same subjects would be constitutional.

We must realize from the beginning that the power of concentrated wealth, coupled with the power of the present administration, which is pouring out billions of dollars of public funds, will make a most formidable foe for us. If the Republican Party is to keep faith with its traditions and meet its responsibility to the country, it will rededicate itself to the fundamental principles of the party, and do so unmindful of the power and the force of its opposition. It will make its appeal to the great mass of people and take its chances on the people yet having as their paramount interest the preservation of the liberties passed on to them by their fathers.

If the love of liberty and justice and the spirit of our fathers yet linger in the hearts of the American people, we cannot lose; we will not lose. Whatever may be our chances of victory, there is no choice left to us other than to make this fight. It is in such a struggle that the greatest reward for the Republican Party is to be found. This is true whether the end be temporary defeat or victory. It is better for us to go down to defeat defending the true traditions of our country than it is to ride through to victory by joining a crusade to destroy constitutional government.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

FEES ON APPEAL AND BONDS IN ADMIRALITY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9091, to amend the laws relating to proctors' and marshals' fees and bonds and stipulations in suits in admiralty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to permit the author of the bill to make a brief explanation of it. There are so many maritime terms in it that I do not know what it is all about.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY] should be given the privilege of explaining the bill.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to amend the admiralty laws. The first amendment proposed is to add a section which would allow a small docket fee on appeal, besides the cost of brief. At the present time there is no provision for that. However, the courts on appeal have often held that an appeal is a new trial and have allowed a docket fee not provided by statute. This provision would make the fee uniform, so that there would be this small graduated docket fee on appeal in every jurisdiction, and besides that the cost of the brief, which is usual in all of our State courts. This amendment has the approval of the American Bar Association, the Maritime Bar Association, and the admiralty committee of the Bar Association of the City of New York.

Mr. TRUAX. Does it provide for increased fees?

Mr. KENNEY. In substance it does not.

Mr. TRUAX. Does it in fact?

Mr. KENNEY. It makes them uniform. In one jurisdiction it might increase the fees, but in another jurisdiction it would not, and in any case the fee is very small, a graduated one. And the bill further provides that no commission shall be paid the marshal where he does not sell any property, and no money passes through his hands; then the bill furnishes the means of reducing the amount of the bond required to release property libeled.

Mr. TRUAX. What is the fee?

Mr. KENNEY. It is stated in the bill. It is based on the amount involved in the litigation. If the gentleman will refer to the bill he will see that the fee provided for is quite small.

Mr. TRUAX. Does it not increase the fee from $50 to $100?

Mr. KENNEY. No; it fixes uniform fees where none existed before by statute, although the courts have allowed varying fees on appeal in different jurisdictions. A $100 fee will only be allowed where the amount involved exceeds $5,000. The minimum fee is only $20, and that fee has been allowed in many jurisdictions, although no provision is made expressly by statute.

Mr. TRUAX. The present fee is $50 on amounts of $5,000 and over?

Mr. KENNEY. There is no fee fixed now on appeal, but the courts on appeal have held in some jurisdictions that it is a new trial, and they allow the fees provided by statute for trials in the court below.

Mr. TRUAX. What justification is there for doubling the fees at this time?

Mr. KENNEY. There is not a doubling of the fee.

Mr. TRUAX. It says so in the bill.

Mr. KENNEY. I do not see that in the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. I call the gentleman's attention to line 9 on page 1 where there is a fee of $50 provided and the amount involved is over $5,000, and a proctors' docket fee of $100.

Mr. KENNEY. No; provision is made for a $20 fee where the amount involved is not over $1,000; a fee of $50 where the amount involved is from $1,000 to $5,000; and the $100 fee where the amount is over $5,000. The American Bar Association met and at first thought that a $100 fee would be proper in all cases, but later it was felt that the graduated fees would be more equitable.

Mr. TRUAX. But $50 has been the fee heretofore, has it not?

Mr. KENNEY. There has been no fee fixed by statute heretofore for cases on appeal. I am telling the gentleman that in different jurisdictions the courts have fixed varying fees, made different allowances. This bill would tend to unify the docket fees and procedure in all jurisdictions, and the $100 provided for is only in cases above $5,000. The litigation might involve a million dollars, and yet the court would under this bill allow only this small fee of $100.

Mr. TRUAX. I have always been of opinion that lawyers' fees are plenty high enough as they stand today.

Mr. KENNEY. The docket fee would come from the unsuccessful party, to be paid to the successful party.

Mr. TRUAX. Then the loser would pay the winner.

Mr. KENNEY. Would pay a small docket fee, as is usual in litigation.

Mr. TRUAX. One hundred dollars?

Mr. KENNEY. Oh, no; only a single docket fee; the amount would depend on the amount involved but in no case more than $100.

Mr. TRUAX. What does he pay him as the law now is?

Mr. KENNEY. It differs in different jurisdictions. It all depends on the court.

Mr. TRUAX. As I understand it, the fellow who loses will be soaked with $100 fee?

Mr. KENNEY. We are not going to soak him. We are going to limit him so that he cannot be charged with a docket fee of more than $100.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

JAMES WILSON AND SEAMAN A. KNAPP

The Clerk called the next business, Senate Joint Resolution 100, authorizing suitable memorials in honor of James Wilson and Seaman A. Knapp.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the archway connecting the new building of the Department of Agriculture (commonly known as the "South Building") with the west wing of the main building of the Department of Agriculture shall be designated the "Wilson Memorial Arch" in memory of James Wilson, Secretary of the Department of Agriculture for 16 years, and shall be suitably inscribed as such.

SEC. 2. The archway connecting such new building with the east wing of the main building of the Department of Agriculture shall be designated the "Knapp Memorial Arch" in memory of Seaman A. Knapp, who rendered great service to American agriculture, and shall be suitably inscribed as such.

SEC. 3. The Grand Council of the National Honorary Extension Fraternity, Epsilon Sigma Phi, is hereby authorized to place, without expense to the United States, in each such memorial arch a suitable memorial tablet; but such tablets shall not be erected until the plans and specifications therefor have been submitted to and approved by the Commission of Fine Arts.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAYMENT OF FARM-LOAN MORTGAGES WITH BONDS ISSUED BY JOINT-STOCK LAND BANKS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7663, to authorize payment of farm-loan mortgages with bonds issued by joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill if it would not be possible for redemption to be made at any time, even though it be more than 15 or 20 years of age, after foreclosure? It will disturb titles. A mortgagor can redeem under this bill even though his mortgage had been foreclosed for 5 or 10 or 15 years.

Mr. FULMER. It puts the farmer whose lands have been closed out on the same basis he is now in dealing with the land bank, and he can only redeem his land if it is still in the possession of the joint-stock land bank. He could not go back and interfere with any private, innocent purchaser.

Mr. ELTSE of California. But under the proviso at the end of the bill there is no limitation put on at all. If there has been a foreclosure within a year after the organization of the joint-stock land banks and the land bank is still in possession, the mortgagor can still come back and redeem.

Mr. FULMER. Absolutely.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Suppose it gets into the hands of a third party?

Mr. FULMER. Oh, he could not redeem. If the joint-stock land bank has sold that land, it would be the same as it is now. He would not have any right to repurchase unless the owner would agree to sell to the farmer, and in that case he could not use these bonds.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I think the gentleman will find that the period within which redemption can be had from a real-estate mortgage is entirely within the jurisdiction of the State, under the control of State statutes, and that this bill could not have the effect extending the period of limitation longer than the period fixed by law in the State in which the mortgage is foreclosed.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The joint-stock land banks have gotten into the habit of buying the mortgages of the Federal land banks, with the notes payable at the home office, and I have known of them bringing suit 500 miles away from the farmer's home, where there were homestead features connected with certain parts of the land involved, and forcing the poor farmer to go 500 miles from home to fight them in their courts, far away, in order to protect his homestead rights. I think this bill is worthy, and I hope it will pass.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I want to ask the gentleman whether he does not believe there might be some injustice resulting to the joint-stock land banks——

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I have seen so much injustice done by them that I do not have any sympathy for them.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I do not yield to the gentleman from Texas. I was asking the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER] a question. Suppose the joint-stock land bank has made an improvement to the extent of $5,000 or more on the property, under this bill the mortgagor can redeem and not have to pay the joint-stock land bank anything for the improvements put on?

Mr. FULMER. I will be glad to accept an amendment to care for that.

Mr. ELTSE of California. But under the bill you say he has a right to purchase it for the same amount for which it was foreclosed.

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Suppose the land bank has erected a barn or a house at an expense of $4,000 or $5,000, the mortgagor can come in and redeem that property by paying the amount of the judgment, after which judgment the expenditures were made by the land bank.

Mr. FULMER. You would not find that to be the case. If the gentleman will just give me a minute to explain this——

Mr. ELTSE of California. Certainly.

Mr. FULMER. There was a provision in the emergency land bank act whereby joint-stock land banks could borrow money for the purpose of extending time to farmers. They have borrowed that money. They have borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They have come along ruthlessly and sold out farmers and bought in their own bonds at 20 and 25 cents on the dollar, canceling same 100 percent on the dollar, and have made a profit out of it, and left the farmer without his land.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I appreciate all of that.

Mr. FULMER. May I say further, as a matter of fact, the gentleman understands that private owners of mortgages are scaling down in various instances, but these banks refuse to make proper cuts and refuse to sell to the farmer who has lost his land, at any price. However, they sell it at a ridiculously low price to a man on the outside and then buy in and cancel their own bonds, making a profit in some instances as stated.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will not the gentleman concede that there might be cases where it would be very inequitable for the mortgagor to redeem the mortgage without proper compensation for money expended by the land bank on improving the property?

Mr. FULMER. I do not, for the reason that if the joint-stock land bank can get the original indebtedness on the loan repaid they will be doing well. The gentleman need not lose any sleep over anything that may be lost through improvements made by the land banks, for there are not many; but if the gentleman wants to amend the bill to take care of it I would have no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. The land banks have not played fair with the people. A year ago it was provided by law that they could loan a further $100,000,000. They have not done so largely because of the fact that there was coupled with the permission to loan a reduction of interest to the farmer of 1 percent.

The land banks do not improve the lands on which they loan money. They simply get what little income they can from the borrower and sell the property as quickly as they can when the borrower fails to meet his payments.

This is a righteous law and ought to pass. The farmers ought to have the advantage of going into the market and buying this land cheap if they can, instead of the land banks being the only ones who can buy these bonds in as low as 40 cents on the dollar.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. This is not a new thing. This bill has been before Congress for a number of years. When I was Chairman of the Committee on Banking we held extensive hearings on this bill, not as the Fulmer bill, but as the Hare bill. We held extensive hearings, but the committee did not see fit to act favorably upon it. It is a bad bill. There is much more to it than appears on the surface. I am quite in sympathy with some of the things that have been said in favor of the bill, but if you want to disrupt your whole Federal farm-loan situation pass this bill.

Mr. TRUAX. It has disrupted the farmer.

Mr. McFADDEN. If the Farm Loan Administration is not administering the law properly, appeal to the management to correct the defects.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. You are listening to the voice of a banker. This friend of ours from Pennsylvania is giving you the bankers' side of this proposition. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] was giving you the side of the farmer; and I appeal to my friend from California not to listen to the banker's voice but to listen to the farmer's voice.

Mr. McFADDEN. May I ask the gentleman from Texas how he is qualified to speak on this bill; whether as a banker or as a farmer?

Mr. BLANTON. I have represented the farmers against the bankers, when their rights have been jeopardized, and I have been proud of it.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman from Texas is usually very complimentary to me, which I appreciate. I wish to correct the gentleman, I am not a banker.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is an ex-banker like most of them are now.

Mr. McFADDEN. Because I was chairman of the Committee on Banking is no reason now to call me a banker.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not complimentary to call my friend an ex-banker?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman reserve his objection to permit me to make an explanation?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my objection for the moment.

Mr. FULMER. I would remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Hare bill was reported by his committee.

Mr. McFADDEN. I realize that, but it was not passed by the Congress. There was certain pressure brought to report the bill out, but the members of the committee saw to it that the bill was not passed.

Mr. FULMER. It was reported late in the session.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman that I quite agree with a great many of the things he has said concerning this bill, but I do not think any Member of this House need have any fear that this bill will ever become law. You cannot compel a joint-stock land bank to accept its bonds in payment of a loan any more than you could compel the gentleman from Pennsylvania or any other individual to accept bonds or stock in payment of a mortgage which he might hold.

The bill is unconstitutional, and if the Department of Justice gives the President of the United States an opinion on the bill before he acts on it, the President of the United States will never sign it, because it is unconstitutional. I wish, however, that it might be passed and become law. I wish it might be passed to stop this practice on the part of joint-stock land banks of buying up their own bonds at 30 cents on the dollar and not passing the benefit of these purchases back to the farm owners. The only thing I do not like about this bill is that it is not worded in such a manner as to make it constitutional, so that the President of the United States can sign it if he wants to.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, the gentleman is quite correct in that he says this bill has not had proper consideration by those who are advocating its passage.

I am quite in sympathy with the arguments that are being made as to the plight of these borrowers, but this is not the proper bill to remedy the situation; therefore I object.

RIFLE RANGES FOR THE ARMY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2130, to authorize an appropriation for the purchase of land in Wyoming for use as rifle ranges for the Army of the United States.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a sum not to exceed $16,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of 1,600 acres of land adjacent to Fort Francis E. Warren in the State of Wyoming for use of the United States Army for rifle-range purposes. All purchase of land under this act shall be made by the Secretary of War pursuant to law governing the acquisition of land for the use of the Army of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PURCHASE OF FOREST LANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9011, to facilitate purchases of forest lands under the act approved March 1, 1911.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a similar Senate bill, S. 3521, for the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to allow and facilitate the purchase of forest lands under the provisions of the act approved March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 961; U.S.C., title 16, secs. 613–521), in States which desire that such purchases shall be made but cannot give their formal consent thereto until the next meeting of their legislative bodies, it is hereby provided that a written statement of consent signed by the Governor of the State prior to January 1, 1935, and containing the certification that a majority of the individual members of the current State legislative body have expressed in writing to the Governor their concurrence in and approval of such statement of consent shall be regarded as fully complying with and satisfying the requirements of that part of section 7 of said act of March 1, 1911, which provides that no deed or other instrument of conveyance shall be accepted or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture under said act until the legislature of the State in which the land lies shall have consented to the acquisition of said land by the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER BETWEEN ROCKPORT, IND., AND OWENSBORO, KY.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9721, authorizing the Spencer County Bridge Commission, of Spencer County, Ind., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River between Rockport, Ind., and Owensboro, Ky.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of the bill how near the nearest bridge to this is?

Mr. MILLIGAN. I cannot advise the gentleman whether there is another bridge in that vicinity or not.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Is the gentleman familiar with that area?

Mr. MILLIGAN. I am not.

Mr. ELTSE of California. This is a toll bridge?

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a toll bridge?

Mr. MILLIGAN. It is.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Operated by a private company?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No; it is operated by a county official.

Mr. MILLIGAN. By the county commissioners of the county where the bridge is located.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Spencer County Bridge Commission, of Spencer County, Ind., be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Rockport, Ind., and Owensboro, Ky., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Spencer County Bridge Commission, of Spencer County, Ind., all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operation of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Spencer County Bridge Commission, of Spencer County, Ind., is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge, the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures of maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT FLORENCE, DOUGLAS COUNTY, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9698, authorizing the Florence Bridge board of trustees to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near Florence, Douglas County, Nebr.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, for the purpose of propounding a parliamentary inquiry: Will an opportunity be given to return to the bills which were objected to at the time of what I call "the flare-up"?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that such a request will be made by the gentleman from California. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill, S. 3230, in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Florence Bridge Commission (hereinafter created, and hereinafter referred to as the "Commission"), and its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at or near the city of Florence, Nebr. (now a part of Omaha, Nebr.), at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Commission and its successors and assigns the right and power to enter upon such lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use such real estate and other property in the State of Nebraska and the State of Iowa as may be needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of the State in which such real estate and other property are located, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation of private property for public purposes in said States, respectively.

SEC. 3. The Commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. The Commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to provide for the payment of the cost of the bridge and its approaches and the necessary lands, easements, and appurtenances thereto by an issue or issues of negotiable bonds of the Commission, bearing interest at not more than 6 percent per annum, the principal and interest of which bonds and any premium to be paid for retirement thereof before maturity shall be payable solely from the sinking fund provided in accordance with this act. Such bonds may be registrable as to principal alone or both principal and interest, shall be in such form not inconsistent with this act, shall mature at such time or times not exceeding 20 years from their respective dates, shall be in such denominations, shall be executed in such manner, and shall be payable in such medium and at such place or places as the Commission may determine. The Commission may repurchase and may reserve the right to redeem all or any of said bonds before maturity in such manner and at such price or prices, not exceeding 105 and accrued interest, as may be fixed by the Commission prior to the issuance of the bonds. The Commission may enter into an agreement with any bank or trust company in the United States as trustees having the power to make such agreement, setting forth the duties of the Commission in respect of the construction, maintenance, operation, repair, and insurance of the bridge, the conservation and application of all funds, the safeguarding of moneys on hand or on deposit, and the rights and remedies of said trustee and the holders of the bonds, restricting the individual right of action of the bondholders as is customary in trust agreements respecting bonds of corporations. Such trust agreement may contain such provisions for protecting and enforcing the rights and remedies of the trustee and the bondholders as may be reasonable and proper and not inconsistent with the law and also provisions for approval by the original purchasers of the bonds of the employment of consulting engineers and of the security given by the bridge contractors and by any bank or trust company in which the proceeds of bonds or of bridge tolls or other moneys of the Commission shall be deposited, and may provide that no contract for construction shall be made without the approval of the consulting engineers. The bridge constructed under the authority of this act shall be deemed to be an instrumentality for interstate commerce, the postal service, and military and other purposes authorized by the Government of the United States, and said bridge and the bonds issued in connection therewith and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from all Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation. Said bonds shall be sold in such manner and at such time or times and at such price as the Commission may determine, but no such sale shall be made at a price so low as to require the payment of more than 6 percent interest on the money received therefor, computed with relation to the absolute maturity of the bonds in accordance with standard tables of bond values, and the face amount thereof shall be so calculated as to produce, at the price of their sale, the cost of the bridge and its approaches, and the land, easements, and appurtenances used in connection therewith. The cost of the bridge shall be deemed to include interest during construction of the bridge, and all engineering, legal, architectural, traffic surveying, and other expenses incident to the construction of the bridge, and the acquisition of the necessary property, and incident to the financing thereof. If the proceeds of the bonds issued shall exceed the cost as finally determined, the excess shall be placed in the sinking fund hereinafter provided. Prior to the preparation of definitive bonds the Commission may, under like restrictions, issue temporary bonds or interim certificates with or without coupons of any denomination whatsoever, exchangeable for definitive bonds when such bonds have been executed and are available for delivery.

SEC. 5. Upon the completion of such bridge, it shall be the duty of said Commission, until said bridge shall be taken over or acquired by one or more governmental units as provided in this act, to supervise the collection of tolls and to authorize and audit all expenditures of money received from the collection of tolls, to see that all revenues received from the bridge, except such amounts as may be necessary for the repair, operation, and maintenance thereof, shall be paid into the sinking fund and used for the amortization of the outstanding indebtedness incurred for the construction or improvement of such bridge. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been provided, the bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, and the Commission, its successors and assigns, shall thereupon convey by proper instrument of conveyance all right, title, and interest in said bridge and its approaches to the State of Nebraska and the State of Iowa jointly upon the agreement of such States to accept and to maintain and operate such bridge as a nontoll bridge.

SEC. 6. For the purpose of carrying into effect the objects stated in this act, there is hereby created the Florence Bridge Commission, and by that name, style, and title said body shall have perpetual succession; the right to contract, sue, and defend in courts of law and equity; possess a common seal; hold title to real estate and other properties; and shall have and possess all powers necessary, convenient, or proper for carrying into effect the objects stated in this act.

The Commission shall consist of one person named by the governing bodies of each of the following governmental units, to wit: Douglas County, Nebr.; city of Omaha, Nebr.; Pottawattamie County, Iowa. In the event that any of said governmental units shall fail to take the necessary action, then the person holding the office of county attorney of Douglas County, Nebr., and the person holding the office of county attorney of Pottawattamie County, Iowa, shall become members of said Commission. Any vacancy occurring in said Commission shall be filled by the governmental unit that made the original appointment. The members of the Commission shall serve without pay, but shall be reimbursed out of any funds in its hands for necessary expenses incurred in the conduct of its business. The Commission may employ a secretary, treasurer, engineers, attorney, and such other experts, assistants, and employees as it may deem necessary, and fix the compensation of such persons. All expenses and salaries shall be paid solely from the funds provided under the authority of this act.

Nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the Commission, or any member thereof, to create any obligation or incur any liability other than such obligations and liabilities as are dischargeable solely from funds provided by this act.

SEC. 7. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the provisions of the House bill for the language of the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLIGAN: Strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and insert the following: "That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, Charles J. Andersen, John A. Kuhn, and Henry Rief, all as trustees, or their successors in office, are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Florence, Douglas County, Nebr., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters', approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act; said trustees shall own and hold said bridge in trust for Douglas County, Nebr., and Pottawattamie County, Iowa; said trustees being known as and functioning as the 'Florence Bridge Board of Trustees' and serving without compensation. Said board of trustees is hereby granted the right to assign, transfer, and mortgage all of the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act.

"SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon said board of trustees such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operation of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

"SEC. 3. The said board of trustees is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

"SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches; the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same; and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

"SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to certain bills that have been objected to, beginning with no. 384 on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object. If we are going back, we will have to go back a little further than 384.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I thought the understanding was that after we finished the Consent Calendar we would go back.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand the rule concerning the consideration of the Consent Calendar provides that a bill to be in order for consideration on the Consent Calendar must be on the calendar for 3 legislative days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Have not all the bills which have been on the Consent Calendar for 3 legislative days been considered?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's statement is correct.

Mr. CARTER of California. That was my understanding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this morning I made a similar request to go back to no. 372 on the Consent Calendar, H.R. 9723, which was put on the same basis yesterday, and to substitute S. 3604. The gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MARTIN, objected to going back. I renew the request at this time.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, I have the floor.

Mr. DISNEY. If the gentleman will yield, I have a bill involved, and the Clerk was engaged in the reading of the bill at the time the flare-up occurred.

Mr. CARTER of California. The gentleman's bill would be included in my unanimous-consent request. My request was to go back to no. 384 on the Consent Calendar and call those bills that were objected to from there on.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object to going back to no. 384 on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. TRUAX. I withhold my objection.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 372 on the Consent Calendar and substitute in lieu thereof the Senate bill, S. 3604, and that other bills objected to, under the same circumstances, be likewise considered.

Mr. TARVER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, on yesterday when Calendar No. 377, relating to the disposal of surplus property of the C.C.C. camps, was called, the gentleman who makes this request demanded the regular order and prevented my explaining the terms of the bill to the House.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Oh, no; if the gentleman will look at the RECORD, he will find that no one asked me to reserve the objection.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] did not object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Take a look at the RECORD.

Mr. TARVER. The inquiry I desire to make is whether or not the gentleman will include in his request that we return and give further consideration to Calendar No. 377?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The request I make, Mr. Speaker, is from 372, and includes all the bills from there on that have been objected to in an arbitrary manner.

Mr. MOTT. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 372 and substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to go back as far as Calendar No. 319 and consider that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will consider only one unanimous-consent request at a time.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the request of the gentleman from Washington, as I understood, is to return to Calendar No. 372 and continue the call from there forward.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. The request is to return to Calendar No. 372 and call the bills that have been arbitrarily objected to from that point on.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, unless we go back to Calendar No. 325, I must object to the request.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to object to any request that is made, but I simply want to call the attention of the Members of the House to this fact. After the consideration of this calendar has been concluded, we want to take up the Private Calendar and there are a great many Members interested in the bills on that calendar. The Consent Calendar has had a chance and while I am not going to object to any request that is made, I do think we ought to hurry along and not spend too much time considering this calendar.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may return to and reconsider all bills on the Consent Calendar that have been objected to today.

Mr. TRUAX. I object to that request, Mr. Speaker. We want to get along with the Private Calendar and that is what our leader wants done.

Mr. BYRNS. I have no objection to the request, but let us look at the matter in a sane way, and consider what we have done. I would not object to going back to any bill that has been arbitrarily objected to, but to go back to bills that have been considered and objected to, without any question of arbitrary action or anything of that sort, is simply asking too much.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman from Tennessee is exactly right.

Mr. BYRNS. If you want to consider bills that have been objected to arbitrarily and without consideration of their merits, I can see some fairness in that, but if we go back to all bills objected to we will be here until 6 o'clock without taking up the bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Who is to be the judge of what is arbitrary?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, ad interim, I will submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the matter now pending before the House?

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 372 and to call the bills from there on, including Calendar No. 372, that have been arbitrarily objected to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Upon that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I object.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask that the Private Calendar be taken up.

Mr. GILCHRIST and Mr. DISNEY objected.

The SPEAKER. This concludes the calling of the Consent Calendar.

The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I presume from what I hear around me that there will be objection, but I want to keep faith with many Members here and that is what I propose to do. I ask unanimous consent that it first be in order to call Senate bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the majority leader if that was the understanding yesterday?

Mr. BYRNS. No; we had no understanding yesterday, and I am making the request now and any Member can object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Consideration of Senate bills is what the gentleman wants to do today?

Mr. BYRNS. I am making the request, and it is up to the Membership of the House whether that is to be the procedure or not. It is a matter of indifference to me, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am not disposed to object, but what I have in mind is this: If the Senate bills are called, we are going away beyond the point where we have prepared ourselves for bills on the calendar.

Mr. BYRNS. I get the gentleman's point, and I may say it is entirely a matter of indifference with me. I am simply carrying out the request of a number of gentlemen.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the floor leader a question. Does the gentleman propose to continue with the Private Calendar tomorrow?

Mr. BYRNS. I am going to ask unanimous consent to do so, but that is a matter of unanimous consent, and I do not know whether the House will be willing to do it or not.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion, I think it would be a wise thing to take up the Private Calendar and consider bills that have been passed by the Senate, but at the same time I think notice should be given that we are going to do that. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion, if we are going to take up the Private Calendar tomorrow, inasmuch as it is impossible to prepare in advance for those bills now, would it not be wise to ask unanimous consent that such bills on the Private Calendar be considered tomorrow, so that the Members may be prepared at that time?

Mr. BYRNS. Well, we will find out whether we will take it up tomorrow. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow it be in order to consider bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to, and that the Senate bills be called first.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask my leader, the gentleman from Tennessee, a question—if he thinks that calling us here at 11 o'clock in the morning and sitting until 6 o'clock at night, we should do it on Saturday for the consideration of private bills, relieving private individuals mostly, when millions whom we ought to do something for are suffering?

Mr. BYRNS. Let me say that among the reasons for coming in at 11 o'clock, one reason was to preserve the right to call the Unanimous Consent Calendar. We have now completed the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and I have no other purpose than to move to adjourn tonight in the regular way.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman says we have completed the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Does he think we have had a fair show, when bills have been objected to without consideration and the Consent Calendar is going to be abandoned?

Mr. BYRNS. No; I mean this: We had half an hour on yesterday and up until this time today on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I will say to my friend that these bills on the Private Calendar are entitled to some consideration. If the session continues, there will be another call of the Consent Calendar next Monday week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And we can take up the Consent Calendar at any time by unanimous consent.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Why cannot that be done today? There are a number of gentlemen who did not get an opportunity to present their reasons for their bills. They ought to be entitled to have their bills presented.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to say that I was for the Indian bills. I was in the chair at the time they were called up. Considerable time was taken in discussion of the bills.

Mr. O'MALLEY. But the bills were not taken up individually.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. TRUAX. I object.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER of Tennessee in the chair). Two hundred and ninety-three gentlemen have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

LIBERALIZATION OF THE EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT OF 1933

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on H.R. 9528.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks on H.R. 9528, my bill to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, which has just passed the House as S. 3540, I wish to make these observations.

Among the outstanding achievements of the present administration and the 73d Congress, are the home-loan legislation and the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933. These two pieces of legislation have opened up the field of hope to both home owners and farm owners where there was only despair before. The great majority of our citizens, who had known the joy of owning a home, had come to the place where they were also burdened by the sorrow of seeing that home slip away. This deplorable condition was brought about by the recent business depression in which real estate has had no loan or collateral value in ordinary business channels.

To my mind, any unbiased person will admit that the present administration has done more to alleviate the distressing conditions facing the tillers of the soil than has any other administration in the last half century. It is deeply regretted that in many instances this legislation came too late to help.

The Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 was an outstanding humanitarian achievement and it helped to pay an obligation that this Government owed its citizens. This legislation had become necessary because that great farming class of our citizens was standing, back to the wall, and were not receiving a fair price for their products. They were unable to meet their debts and obligations and were losing their farms and homes by the thousands all over the country, because of a condition primarily brought about by former policies of this Government, which have ruined our foreign trade and closed our foreign markets. These same policies also had much to do with destroying the purchasing power of our own people. It was, therefore, necessary for the Government to do something and to do it at once, and I am glad to say that our party, led by a great President, has already taken active steps to permanently remedy the situation by placing new tariff-making authority in the hands of the President in order that satisfactory rates and schedules may be at once arranged with foreign countries.

However, the immediate problem that faced the administration was to provide a breathing period for these farmers, to call a halt upon foreclosures, and to enact legislation that would allow them to hold their ground until the Government could step in and provide other active and permanent remedies.

Among remedial legislation offered by the President and passed by the Seventy-third Congress was the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933. Under this act the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized and directed to allocate and make available to the Farm Loan Commissioner the sum of $200,000,000 to make loans to farmers under certain conditions. These loans were to be secured by a first or second mortgage on the farm property affected, including crops. The amount of the mortgage could not exceed 75 percent of the normal value of the property, as determined upon appraisal pursuant to the terms of the Federal Farm Loan Act. The law further provided that a loan could not be made in excess of $5,000 to any one farmer. Each mortgage was to contain an agreement providing for the payment of the loan on an amortization plan by means of annual or semi-annual installments, which installments covered interest on unpaid principal at a reasonable rate, and also equal payments to be applied on the principal of the debt as would extinguish the debt within an agreed period of not more than 10 years. There were other provisions in the bill as to method of procedure of obtaining a loan for the purpose mentioned.

It was, and is my opinion now, that the Government should provide for the farmers such loans as were provided under the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act, at an interest rate less than the rate stipulated therein, but, regardless of my personal opinion in the matter, it cannot be said that there are not many benefits in the act, and there is no doubt that thousands of farmers throughout the country have been able to retain or to recover their farms, where, if this legislation had not been provided, they could never have acquired this right. In section 32 of the Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 it was also provided that farmers who had lost their farms by foreclosure since July 1931 would have the legal right to obtain a Commissioner loan for the purpose of recovering their farms, provided a satisfactory arrangement could be made with the parties who were in possession at this time.

When it was called to my attention that farmers who had lost their farms by foreclosure before July 1, 1931, could not come under the benefits of the act, I introduced in the House H.R. 9528 to amend the Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, with the purpose of extending to farmers who have lost their farms by foreclosure prior to July 1, 1931, the same privilege as is now extended under the law to those who lost their farms by foreclosure since that date. I am glad to say that I was able to obtain the approval of Mr. W. I. Myers, Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, for this legislation. A unanimous majority report was received from the Committee on Agriculture, and when, on June 7, 1934, the bill was called up on the calendar of the House, I found that the identical bill, S. 3540, had been passed in the Senate the day before.

When my bill was called up in the House, I requested Chairman Jones of the Committee on Agriculture, to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, otherwise it would have been necessary for the measure to be returned to the Senate again for approval, with the possibility of no definite action at this session of Congress. This was done and the bill passed with little opposition.

It is my hope that this legislation will provide a means whereby many farmers who have lost their farms by foreclosure before July 1, 1931, will be able to secure Commissioner loans and recover their farms from which they have been driven by force of circumstances over which they had no control. When a farmer has tilled the soil and provided a livelihood for his family on the same farm for many years and is forced to give it up because of debts that he cannot pay, something snaps in him and in many instances his fight and confidence are lost and he has no further incentive to work and toil, plan and dream for his family, because, of all things dear to an American citizen's heart, the home and ownership of soil is dearest. It is my hope that the Farm Loan Commissioner will be generous in handling the applications for loans in the field which has been opened up by my amendment to the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act, and that happiness will be restored to many farmers under the liberalized provisions of the original mortgage act.

PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT, COMMUNICATIONS BILL

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers on the part of the House be permitted until 12 o'clock tonight to file a report upon the communications bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman call that up tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. If the Senate should pass it early enough tomorrow we might call it up, if it is agreeable.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is agreeable to me.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the Senate passes it early in the day, we will do that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—A NEW ERA IN SOCIAL PROGRESS

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, President Roosevelt's message on social legislation is one of the most important he has ever sent to the Congress.

It is deep and far-sighted. It shows that the President understands the fundamental ills of our American people. In this message the heart and mind have united to construct a new road toward a better, toward a more secure future for the average man.

"Americans should never forget," the President says, "that security of the men, women, and children of our Nation comes first * * *." "This security depends," he continues, "primarily upon three factors * * * decent housing, employment, and security against unemployment and old age."

THE NEED AND VALUE OF AN ADEQUATE HOUSING PROGRAM

I want to discuss briefly the first two parts of this program and then dwell on the third. It is evident that the President has definitely concluded that a long-term program of housing is necessary to provide living quarters for the people.

Nearly one-third of the people of the United States are living in homes which are not only substandard but in many cases unfit for human beings.

Slum clearance alone is inadequate. It must be followed by the construction of new low-cost housing. We must have both. Further, a long-term extended housing program is the most practical way to pull the American people out of this depression.

On January 3, 1934, on the very first day of the convening of Congress, I introduced a bill which provides a practical way to solve this problem. I am happy that the fundamentals of that program have been approved by the President and that he is calling upon the Congress and upon the best interests of this Nation to devote their efforts toward a large scale of housing construction, both as a measure of necessity and as a means of recovery.

In his message the President next points to an opportunity for employment as the second fundamental requirement of recovery. There can be no well-being or security in this Nation—individually or nationally—until every man and every woman who is willing and able to work has a fair chance to find suitable employment.

SECURITY THROUGH SOCIAL INSURANCE

The third factor stressed in the message of the President concerns "security against the uncertainties and hazards of life." I would like to dwell upon this factor at some length, and therefore want to read a part of the Presidential message to Congress. The President says:

Next winter we may well undertake the great task of furthering the security of the citizen and his family through social insurance.

* * * the various types of social insurance are interrelated; and I think it is difficult to attempt to solve them piecemeal. Hence I am looking for a sound means which I can recommend to provide at once security against several of the great disturbing factors in life, especially those which relate to unemployment and old age. * * * I believe that the funds necessary to provide this insurance should be raised by contribution rather than by an increase in general taxation. Above all, I am convinced that social insurance should be national in scope. * * *

THE ELLENBOGEN OLD-AGE PENSION RESOLUTION

I am truly gratified about this part of the Presidential message. At the beginning of this session I introduced a resolution in the Congress of the United States which directed a study to be made for the establishment of an old-age-pension system, a system which was to be national in scope and which was to be based upon contributions and not upon general taxation. The funds were to be raised by contributions from employers and employees instead of being paid out of the Public Treasury. The unemployed were to be free from contributions. Out of this fund a pension was to be paid to every aged person residing in the United States.

There is nothing new about an old-age-pension system in the United States. It has been advocated for years, but until my resolution was introduced it had never been proposed in the Congress of the United States to create a national system of old-age pensions based on a system of contributions and not upon taxation.

The resolution was passed by the House of Representatives February 15, 1934, and the subcommittee which was directed to make the study is now working under it. I have consistently maintained that old-age pensions, to be lasting and permanent, must be national in scope and must be based upon contributions and not upon payments from the Public Treasury.

THE PRESIDENT HAS ENDORSED THE CONTRIBUTORY SYSTEM

And now, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, in a solemn message to the Congress has upheld the principle of contributory pensions in clear and unmistakable language.

The President has said:

I believe that the fund necessary to provide this insurance should be raised by contributions rather than by an increase in general taxation.

The data are now being gathered in Government departments in Washington, and I am very happy that I have the privilege of cooperating with the various studies now going on.

The next Congress will have before it a bill for the establishment of a national system of old-age insurance and of unemployment, both on a contributory system, and I hope the Congress will pass it.

OLD-AGE-PENSION SYSTEMS IN OTHER COUNTRIES

The national contributory system which I have advocated is not new. It has been tested in various countries and under various conditions, and has been proven to be the very best system of social security we can have.

Forty-two foreign countries have old-age-pension systems, and of these, 31 have the contributory system which I advocated.

It is interesting to note here that experts in this field all over the world have so decidedly come to the conclusion that the contributory system is the best that they have given to other pension systems which are in operation the title of "transitory pension systems." In other words, they look upon these systems as temporary and preliminary to the adoption of the contributory system.

I have told you of all the countries that have national systems of old-age pensions. What countries do not have national systems? The only large ones that do not have a national system of old-age pensions are India, China, and our own United States. We have belonged to this minority too long. I am thankful that I have been given the great privilege of taking a part in leaving that minority as soon as possible.

THE AGED HAVE A RIGHT TO SECURITY

We have been proud of the advances we have made in this great country in the fields of science, invention, and mechanical progress. Thus far we have not had the opportunity, nor the right, to point with the same pride to the advance which we should have made in the field of humanity.

In the field of mechanics for the past few years we have heard a great deal about obsolescence—the problem of the wearing out of machinery. We should have an equal, a much greater concern with the wearing out of the greatest piece of machinery of all—the human body. Now we shall concentrate on that piece of machinery. We shall not say that because it is worn out, because its parts are no longer as good as when new, it must go to the scrap pile. It is up to us—to you and to me—to give it the very best care and attention it needs; and this the President's announced program brings.

Ladies and gentlemen, I need hardly point out to you that this vast program cannot be carried out properly unless we have a firm foundation on which to base our studies on national needs for unemployment insurance and old-age pensions.

THE VALUE OF AN UNEMPLOYMENT CENSUS

Last Thursday the House of Representatives approved and passed the plan which I have advocated for the last 6 months calling for a national census of unemployment, population, occupations, agriculture, and livestock to be held next November 12. I say to you that the adoption of this plan was one of the most important and one of the most significant pieces of legislation carried out by the House of Representatives during this session of Congress.

WHAT THE CENSUS WILL ACCOMPLISH

With this census we will know exactly how many unemployed there are in this country, we will know where they live, how old they are, the work for which they are fitted. We will have the basis for planning on an accurate scale for their future needs not only for immediate emergency relief but for a long term and vast program of social progress, such as I have been discussing here.

For these reasons I know you will appreciate how exceedingly happy I am that this census plan was adopted.

The bill now goes to the Senate. It has already been favorably reported there, and we can therefore hope that the Senate will also approve it and it will become law.

My friends, I sincerely wish that all of you will feel as happy as I do about these things—about the promise contained in the President's message, about the passage of the census bill.

THE GREAT HOPE FOR THE FUTURE

I tell you that we are on the threshold of a new dawn. The President has endorsed fully a great program of social legislation embracing unemployment insurance and old-age pensions. Further, he has definitely stated how that great program will be carried out. I regret that it seems necessary to wait until the next session of Congress to pass this legislation rather than at the present time.

However, the American people have been shown again that we can look forward to the near future, when under the inspired leadership of a great President, the Congress of the United States will give the American people a system which provides against unemployment, a system which guarantees a real and true security for their old age.

For untold centuries people have been able to look forward to old age only with fear and dread. It promised no safety, no comfort, and no happiness. At least we shall do away with all that.

In one of his poems, Robert Browning, one of the greatest poets in the English language, has written:

Grow old along with me;
The best is yet to be.

This is the message of hope which the President has now brought the American people. It is a message which brings within our grasp the attainment of better and happier lives.

NATIONAL SECURITY AND DEFENSE

Mr. KNIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short bill that I introduced today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this little time so that I might call attention to a bill which I introduced this morning, which would provide further for our national security and defense.

I am one who believes that there should be no excess profits in the purchase of war supplies of any other Government operations necessitated by a state of war. I am persuaded that if men are to be conscripted for war that that policy should be broadened so as to include all of the things made necessary by a state of war.

There would have been no World War from 1914 to 1918 if the people of the nations involved could have had their way about it. It is the average citizen whose neck is risked in war and not the powder, steel, or chemical manufacturers along with their international financing friends. The fact that the commercial motive is one of the strong factors that stimulates war is unchallengeable, and that being the case private profit should be taken out of war so as to remove the incentive on the part of those who make great profits. The burden of war would thereby be equalized.

Many of our present difficulties are attributable to the late war. The deadly germ of war ultimately attacks the blood and bones of nations that participate in it. Much is said and written about the cancelation of the debts. Our taxpayers are called upon for over $400,000,000 yearly to meet interest requirements on bonds, the proceeds of which were loaned to European governments. The debts cannot be canceled any more than the destruction of a cyclone can be canceled. Someone must bear the loss and our people are at this time, some 15 years after the World War, still struggling under the galling yoke of this burden.

The next war, however, can and should be canceled forthwith.

When nations engage in legalized killing reaching into the millions, the war fatalities are not confined to battlefields but encompass our entire civilization.

Mere talk against war in itself will not prevent it; and I have therefore introduced a bill which, if enacted into law, will have a repressive effect upon those who might be willing that we engage in conflict because of the profits that would ensue to them, and I ask at this place in my remarks to have my bill printed in the RECORD.

A bill to provide further for the national security and defense

Be it enacted, etc., That to promote the efficient utilization and control of resources and industries during the existence of a national emergency in time of war, the President shall be, and he is hereby, authorized in the prosecution of any war in which the United States is engaged, when the conscription of persons is provided by law, to take private property (including money) for any military or nonmilitary purposes, but in no case shall persons or private property be conscripted for any purpose unless such powers are exercised concurrently, and no profit shall be paid as compensation for the taking of any private property.

The fact that tumult exists throughout the world is undeniable. I do not anticipate war with any nation in the very near future. We do not want war. At least 98 percent of the people we represent are unalterably opposed to war, and what I seek to do by the introduction of this bill is to foreclose any chance of the United States becoming involved in the future.

The theory that the jurisdiction of the United States should follow industrialists of this country, and in many cases they are associated with industrialists of European countries, into foreign lands when those industrialists go there for exploitation purposes, is unsound. If any American business man wants to go into a foreign country, where revolution is or soon may become in progress, in the hope that he may make great profit on his investment, he should be willing to take the risk and no obligation should rest upon the American Government to send armed protection there to safeguard his private business adventures when they are subjected to the risks of civil or military disturbance in a foreign country. Morally the practice cannot be justified; it is unsound legally and it is contrary to the principles of justice in international affairs.

People who are willing to go into a foreign country to exploit the resources of that country during civil disturbances should be warned of those existing dangers. Then if they are unwilling to leave, if they wish to subject themselves further to civil or military strife in a foreign country, there should be no obligation on the part of the United States Government to send our Army and Navy into the jurisdiction of a foreign country to aid them in their progress of moneymaking and thus jeopardize the lives and the peace and safety of our American citizens.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

GEORGE A. CARDEN AND ANDERSON T. HERD

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, if I correctly understood, the special order the other night called for the calling of Calendar No. 583, H.R. 8482, on the first call of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. That is correct. The Clerk will call the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill, as follows:

H.R. 8482, a bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on certain claims of George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 2898) on the Speaker's table, will be substituted therefor.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, notwithstanding lapse of time or any statute of limitations, or other limitations upon the jurisdiction of such court, to hear, consider, and render judgment upon any claims, legal or equitable, of George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd, or their legal representatives, against the United States, involving the steamships Erny, Lucia, Anna, Teresa, Clara, Ida, Dora, Himalaia, Franconia, and Campania: Provided, That in determining the amount of any judgment on any such claim, allowance shall be made for any amount heretofore awarded the claimants on account of such claim: Provided further, That separate suits may be maintained (by or on behalf of the claimants or their legal representatives) with respect to any of such claims, but no suit shall be brought after the expiration of 1 year from the date of the enactment of this act: And provided further, That the record of the proceedings before the War Department heretofore had with respect to certain of such ships and the evidence there taken may be introduced, together with the exhibits therein offered, before the Court of Claims, with the full force of depositions, subject to objections as to competency and relevancy: Provided further, That if the Court of Claims shall upon the evidence reach the conclusion that the contract of sale included any right to the operation of the ships and that such right was not satisfied by the subsequent payment by the Secretary of War as an accord and satisfaction, then the recovery shall be limited to the duration of the World War.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LLOYD: Page 2, line 14, after the word "relevancy", insert the following: "Provided further, That if the Court of Claims shall upon the evidence reach the conclusion that the contract of sale included any right to the operation of the ships and that such right was not satisfied by the subsequent payment by the Secretary of War as an accord and satisfaction, then the recovery shall be limited to the duration of the World War."

The committee amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House bill, H.R. 8482, was laid on the table.

GLADDING, M'BEAN & CO.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that Calendar No. 614 on the Private Calendar, H.R. 3782, for the relief of Gladding, McBean & Co., at a previous call went over with the same understanding and the same status as the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER. That is correct, and the Clerk will call the bill.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 3782) for the relief of Gladding, McBean & Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is exactly the same as quite a number of others that were passed by consent. Those bills have been enacted into law. This is a bill for the purpose of reimbursing Gladding, McBean & Co. for losses it sustained on fabricating material in the construction of post offices on which the contract was canceled by the Government because the contractor's bond was found to have been forged.

Mr. TRUAX. What year?

Mr. EVANS. A little more than a year ago. There is no objection to the bill by the Treasury Department. They paid half a dozen other bills of exactly the same kind. The Senate passed this bill after overlooking this item in the list of bills for relief of other subcontractors who sustained losses on the same job. It has been passed and approved by the Senate committee, passed by the Senate, and it occupies exactly the same status as a number of other bills that were passed. It was overlooked.

Mr. TRUAX. I notice the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, does not definitely give his approval to this bill. He said if the bill is to be given favorable consideration, however, it is recommended that lines 7 to 11, inclusive, be amended to read as follows.

Mr. EVANS. That amendment has been put in. This is the same report that is made on all these bills, but it does say in the report that there was no fault on the part of the claimant, and he should be reimbursed. That is the purport of the report.

Mr. TRUAX. What is the amount asked for?

Mr. EVANS. About $6,000. It represents actual losses of the claimants in fabricating this material.

Mr. TRUAX. What material?

Mr. EVANS. For the building of a post office in the State of Nevada. It turned out there was a forged bond, and the contractor was irresponsible and failed. All of the other claimants except this one have been paid, and this claim is in exactly the same status. There is no difference at all.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I know the facts in this case. The company which manufactures this brick and wall material is not in my district. It is in the district represented by my colleague [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS. No. It is in another district. It is just over the line.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Perhaps it is in my district. I know the facts of the case. It is a very justifiable claim. Every other claimant who did work on this post office has been taken care of.

Mr. TRUAX. This case has been the subject of complete hearings before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. Did that committee approve this bill?

Mr. EVANS. Exactly.

Mr. TRUAX. Very well. Then I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute an identical Senate bill, S. 1173.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Gladding, McBean & Co., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $6,602.40 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for losses suffered by the said company by reason of the default of the Plains Construction Co., general contractors for the construction of post office at Las Vegas, Nev., and the contractor's failure to furnish a valid bond as required by law for the protection of labor and material men furnishing labor and material on public works: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

CHARLES J. WEBB SONS CO., INC.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 603, S. 2138, for the relief of Charles J. Webb Sons Co., Inc. It was objected to under a misapprehension, and the gentleman who objected has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, what is this bill?

Mr. SABATH. That is a bill for the relief of Charles J. Webb Sons Co.

Mr. TRUAX. Involving how much money?

Mr. SABATH. It is for money paid into the Treasury and later on the Treasury stated it was paid under a mistake.

Mr. TRUAX. Is that the Dickstein bill?

Mr. SABATH. That is the Dickstein bill.

Mr. TRUAX. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles J. Webb Sons Co., Inc., the sum of $18,648.87, in full satisfaction of all claims for reimbursement on account of amounts erroneously collected and covered into the Treasury which had been tendered by such company in connection with a conditional offer in settlement dated January 4, 1932, and amended January 8 and 19, 1932, the conditions of which offer were not performed by the Government and the settlement not consummated.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 7, after the word "claims", insert "against the Government of the United States." On page 2, after line 3, insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the fact that I think we should not go back to bills that have been previously objected to because it causes nothing but confusion and a lot of hard feelings. I think at this time, with an agreement on the other side, we should not go back to any bills previously considered and objected to, unless there was some special order with previous notice.

TO AMEND SETTLEMENT OF WAR CLAIMS ACT OF 1928, AS AMENDED

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the resolution (H.J.Res. 365) to amend the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

BOROUGH OF BROOKLAWN, STATE OF NEW JERSEY

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, Calendar No. 616, H.R. 4672, for the relief of certain purchasers of lands in the borough of Brooklawn, State of New Jersey, was placed upon the preferred list on the last call of this calendar. I ask that it be called up at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 616, H.R. 4672. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk called the bill, H.R. 4672, for the relief of certain purchasers of lands in the borough of Brooklawn, State of New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, this proposes an expenditure of $163,940.

Mr. WOLVERTON. No; if the gentleman will read the report carefully, I think he will find as I explained to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] the other night, and after the explanation he withdrew his objection, that the original bill which was introduced would have provided for that amount, but the bill which was subsequently introduced, and which is now before the House, and which has passed the Senate, would not carry that amount. It would be approximately $93,000.

Mr. TRUAX. What was the year in which these claims were incurred?

Mr. WOLVERTON. It would be difficult to fix any particular year.

Mr. TRUAX. Oh, this is a war claim?

Mr. WOLVERTON. No; subsequent to the war. In 1923, a village which had been built by the Government to house ship workers was sold into private hands on terms that carried a 70-percent mortgage payable in 3 years, which brought payment date up to 1926.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman says long before the war. How long before the war?

Mr. WOLVERTON. No; I think the gentleman misunderstood me, it was long after the war.

Mr. TRUAX. That is what I am trying to determine. In what year did these claims originate?

Mr. WOLVERTON. That is what I was just stating to the gentleman. These properties were sold by the Government at public auction in 1923 on terms that permitted the mortgages to run until 1926. In 1926 the Government insisted upon payment. Some paid, others did not; and the mortgages continued to run until 1931 and 1932 when the Government made another sale.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman wants to go back to 1926, and pay $165,000 on claims arising out of the war. Does not the gentleman think this is entirely too large an amount to consider in this manner?

Mr. WOLVERTON. If the gentleman will observe carefully the report that was made by the Shipping Board in this matter, the gentleman will find that the Shipping Board on November 16, 1932, which was when this matter was at its height, passed a resolution recommending the payment of this refund to the claimants.

Mr. TRUAX. Just a moment. Has this bill been recommended by the Treasury Department?

Mr. WOLVERTON. The Treasury Department had nothing to do with it. As the gentleman will notice, it has been recommended by the Shipping Board.

Mr. TRUAX. When was the bill first introduced?

Mr. WOLVERTON. A year ago, but it was not reached on the calendar until last Friday night.

Mr. TRUAX. No claim was made until a year ago?

Mr. WOLVERTON. The claimants were not in a position to make a claim prior to that time.

Mr. TRUAX. Why not?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Because the matter was not reported by the Shipping Board until 1932.

Mr. TRUAX. I am sorry, but I shall have to object to the bill, as I have objected to all bills that dipped into the Treasury for the satisfaction of claims which arose years ago.

Mr. WOLVERTON. This is not such a bill. This matter is current. As a matter of fact, this is an effort to rectify a situation which is very unjust; and if the gentleman will give me the opportunity, I think I can explain it to his satisfaction.

The purpose of this bill is to refund to certain owners of property in the borough of Brooklawn, N.J., who had purchased the properties from the United States, 28 percent of the purchase price where the full purchase price of said lands, or the full value of the United States Shipping Board mortgage, has been paid by such owners into the Treasury of the United States.

The refund, totaling $93,000, will benefit approximately 106 individuals who purchased homes at Brooklawn, N.J., built by the Government to house shipyard workers during the war. The payment of this money is amply warranted by the facts.

The beneficiaries of the proposed refund purchased the properties in question from the Government in 1923. They paid 30 percent in cash and gave purchase-money mortgages for the remaining 70 percent. The mortgages were for a 3-year term. When the 3 years expired, the Shipping Board demanded payment on threat of foreclosure. Some paid the Government by refinancing their mortgages with banks, building-and-loan associations, and private agencies, thereby making payment to the Government in full. Others in subsequent years did likewise. These individuals fulfilled completely their obligation to the Government and to the local municipality.

The remaining purchasers, however, paid no attention to the demands of the Shipping Board for payment of the mortgages. They defaulted in the payment of principal, interest, and taxes. This continued for several years, until the condition became so bad that pressure was brought upon the Shipping Board to foreclose or sell out its interest in these properties. The impelling reason for demanding this action from a local or municipal standpoint was that the law made it impossible for local authorities to sell for taxes any property in which the Government had an interest. These delinquent owners, being aware of this, paid no taxes, even though receiving all the benefits of the schools, police, and fire protection, and other advantages, the same as those who paid taxes. This delinquency meant that only about one-half of the properties in the borough were paying the entire cost of the municipal government. Finally the condition became so bad that the borough was about to close its schools and apply for a receivership. It was then that the Government started foreclosures and sold the properties and mortgages to a private agency at about a 40-percent reduction of the amount due on the mortgages held by it. In making such sale, however, provision was made that the property owners could settle their mortgages on the 40-percent-reduction basis. Thus, the delinquent owners, the very ones who had refused to pay and defaulted in payment of principal and interest and municipal taxes, were permitted to settle their mortgages at a discount of 40 precent and escape payment of interest for several years as well as local taxes. Thus defaulting owners by their delinquency were given a substantial advantage over the owners who had faithfully and conscientiously performed their full obligation to the Government and the local municipality. No one can justify such a condition as that. It is unjust, unfair, and unconscionable. Certainly, those who were honest and faithful to their Government should not be required to suffer or be penalized therefor. Yet, that is what has happened, and what this bill seeks to remedy.

The matter was brought to the attention of the Shipping Board; and after several hearings and careful consideration, the Board, on November 16, 1932, passed this resolution:

Whereas the Brooklawn Real Estate Taxpayers Association, representing purchasers of Brooklawn, N.J., properties, by its representatives, appeared before the Board at a hearing held on October 6, 1932, and thereafter submitted a petition dated October 14, 1932, for refunds of payments made to the Shipping Board upon satisfied mortgages, etc., and

Whereas the Board has been advised by its general counsel that there is no law which authorizes the Shipping Board to make refunds in the manner prayed for by the petitioners, and that the petition therefor should be denied and the petitioners notified that their only source of relief is from the Congress of the United States: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the petition above referred to be, and the same is hereby, denied for the reason that there is no law authorizing the Shipping Board to make such refunds and that the only source of relief is from the Congress of the United States, where such matters only can be determined; and it is Further resolved, That the said the Brooklawn Real Estate Taxpayers Association be further advised that the Board expresses its sympathy with the object of the petition filed and will favorably recommend the passage by Congress of a proper bill to cover the situation.

The subject matter of the proposed legislation has had the careful attention and consideration of both the House and Senate Committees on Claims and has received the unqualified approval of both.

The Shipping Board, as will be seen by its report on the bill, has approved it and recommended its passage.

The Senate has passed the bill of Senator KEAN, similar in purpose to this bill introduced by myself, and there is no valid reason why this legislation should not have the unanimous approval of the House. This act of justice is due the hard-working, honest, and sincere men and women who in good faith have performed their obligations to the Government.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from New Jersey that I take the position with regard to these bills that this year we shall have to spend millions of dollars to take care of drought-stricken people and others in want. In none of these bills is any provision whatsoever made to raise the revenue to pay the claim. The President is working overtime and bending every energy to conserve money for the relief of all the people, not a few. I must object to the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. There is this difference between claims against the Government for injuries and the disaster in the drought-stricken area: The United States did not cause the drought, but the United States did cause these injuries.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. LAMNECK. It is not clear to me how the United States Government is responsible in this case. As I understand it, the Government had this property and sold it at public auction to private purchasers.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Yes.

Mr. LAMNECK. How did the Government get back into the picture in such a way as to be responsible?

Mr. WOLVERTON. These claims arose in the way I have indicated. The Government sold the property on terms of 30 percent cash and 70 percent mortgage. When the mortgages fell due in 1926, the Shipping Board insisted upon payment in full. Certain citizens of the community paid by refinancing their mortgages through building-and-loan associations and other sources and settled with the Government in full. The greater number, however, did not do so, but permitted the mortgages to run until they were greatly in arrears not only as to payment of principal and interest but also as to payment of taxes as well. It finally created such a condition that the borough of Brooklawn was about to go into the hands of a State receiver. The Government paid no taxes on the property it owned nor were taxes paid on the properties on which it held mortgages. The result was that finally the Shipping Board, seeing the injustice of the situation, ordered foreclosure sales and as a last resort an auction sale of properties and mortgages in which it had an interest, and then permitted the delinquents to settle for 40 percent of the mortgages, without the payment of back taxes or any of the other delinquencies.

Mr. TRUAX. Has the gentleman conferred with the Appropriations Committee about this bill?

Mr. WOLVERTON. No; this bill must first be passed as an authorization.

Mr. TRUAX. Has the gentleman conferred with the Director of the Budget?

Mr. WOLVERTON. The Shipping Board——

Mr. TRUAX. No; has the gentleman conferred with the Director of the Budget?

Mr. WOLVERTON. No; I have not. This bill must first be passed before it becomes a matter to be considered by the Budget Director.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Will not the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes; I withhold my objection for a moment.

Mr. WOLVERTON. This bill has the approval of the Shipping Board. In their resolution they say not only that they are in favor of relieving the situation but that they will also favorably recommend the passage by Congress of a proper bill to cover the situation.

Mr. TRUAX. Yes, I recall; but the Shipping Board is a group of tax spenders, not taxpayers. They would recommend practically anything.

If the gentleman wants this bill passed, let him get the approval of the Director of the Budget and of the Appropriations Committee of the House.

Mr. WOLVERTON. The House Committee on Claims has passed upon it favorably, the Senate committee passed on it favorably, and the United States Senate has passed on it favorably.

Mr. TRUAX. If the gentleman had not made the latter statement, there might be a better chance.

Mr. LAMNECK. I did not get an answer to my question. This is to reimburse those property holders who did pay in cash?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Yes; to give them the same status as was given to those who, through delinquency, received a discount on their mortgages.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman has failed to mention the liability of the Government in these cases. He merely mentions that the Shipping Board recommends that the bill be passed.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Because they know the facts.

Mr. TRUAX. But they do not raise the money.

Mr. WOLVERTON. If the gentleman feels his judgment and knowledge are superior to that of those who know, that is for him to decide.

Mr. TRUAX. I do not feel that my judgment is superior to the judgment of the Shipping Board on paying claims, but I feel that my judgment is as good as anyone's for the taxpayers of this country who are going to pay these bills.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

L. R. SMITH

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 870, for the relief of L. R. Smith.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to L. R. Smith, of Fortine, Mont., the sum of $19,223, said amount being in full settlement and reimbursement to the said L. R. Smith for the construction of a graded truck road, 7 miles in length, on Graves Creek, within the Blackfeet National Forest Reservation in the State of Montana, in pursuance of a survey made by the Forestry Bureau and proposed road development on said reservation in the Blackfeet National Forest.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 7, after the word "settlement", insert "of all claims against the Government of the United States."

On page 2, at the end of line 3, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONCRETE ENGINEERING CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1540, for the relief of the Concrete Engineering Co.

Mr. ZIONCHECK and Mr. HOPE objected.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentlemen withhold their objections?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I withhold my objection.

Mr. HOPE. I withhold my objection.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, this bill involves $4,300.

There was a firm down in Houston, Tex., that was in the construction business and had to buy some steel forms. These steel forms were shipped by boat from various manufacturing plants in the North. They charged them, under section 304 of the Revenue Act, 0.3 of a cent per pound. Under section 312 the charge should have been 0.2 of a cent per pound.

The firm, being new in its business, instructed its certified warehousing agents to file a protest against the excess charge in all of 22 instances which occurred in the years 1926 and 1927. The agents upon whom these people relied filed protests in 17 of the instances, and the excess tariff payments were in each instance refunded. This firm thought that they had filed protests in the remaining five cases, but the protests had not been filed.

The amount of excess payments which the Treasury has received is $4,300. The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Ogden Mills, in the year 1932, recites these facts and says that because no protest was currently filed he cannot recommend payment, but he recites the fact that the Treasury has collected $4,300 in excess of a correct interpretation of the law. These people requested their certified warehousing agents, upon whom they relied, to file a protest in each instance.

The Senate committee has unanimously reported this bill. The Senate has unanimously approved the bill. The House committee have unanimously reported this bill favorably. It is upon this calendar. There is no moral or legal ground why these people should not have the $4,300 back that everybody, including the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Ogden Mills, in 1932 said that the Treasury had of their money in excess of a true interpretation of the statutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, what State is the gentleman from?

Mr. HOPE. Kansas.

Mr. EAGLE. You will not pass another bill this session or any other session that I am a Member of.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think we need to take any threats from that side of the House.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2139, for the relief of the Western Union Telegraph Co.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that there is not a quorum present. I will not be treated this way on an honest bill. No one will pass a private bill from now on this session, and you might just as well go home.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and sixty-three Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] is one of the loyal, dependable Democrats in this House, and he is surely following his leader.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I shall follow him if they vote down this motion.

Mr. BLACK. Does not the gentleman realize we have only had two quorum calls today?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Only two? I have been answering roll calls for quorums here all day.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] is too good a Democrat to gum up the cards, when it is not the wish of his majority leader [Mr. BYRNS].

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Colorado insist upon his motion?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

TRANSPORTATION OF THE MAILS BY AIR OR WATER

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request from the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
June 6 (calendar day of June 8), 1934.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H.R. 7340) to authorize the Post Office Department to hold contractors or carriers transporting the mails by air or water on routes extending beyond the borders of the United States responsible in damages for the loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery, depredations upon, or other mistreatment of mail matter due to fault or negligence of the contractor or carrier, or an agent or employee thereof.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the Senate will be complied with.

There was no objection.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Private Calendar.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

The Clerk called the bill, S. 2139, for the relief of the Western Union Telegraph Co.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to this bill.

This bill is to pay $1,100 to the Western Union Telegraph Co., owned by Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TRUAX. I will amend the bill, if the gentleman will accept the amendment, to make this an off-set on the income taxes that they have robbed the Government of during the past 8 or 10 years.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Is this the gentleman's own bill?

Mr. TRUAX. No; I have no bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No; I guess the gentleman has not, because the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from California, Mr. ELTSE——

Mr. TRUAX. I have saved the taxpayers of this country $1,000,000 today.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. And you have wasted $10,000,000 worth of time while you were doing it.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman is being paid for being here, the same as I am.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS AND CITIZENS' MILITARY TRAINING CAMPS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2688, to validate payments for medical and hospital treatment of members of Reserve Officers' Training Corps and citizens' military training camps.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object——

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, it is quite evident that for one reason or another we are not going to be able to transact much business today on the Private Calendar, and may I suggest to the Speaker that possibly we should take up some of the rules that are on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees with the majority leader that it is useless to continue the call of the calendar.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

FEDERAL MEMORIAL COMMISSION

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 356 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 93. After general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Library, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the joint resolution to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "1 hour", and insert in lieu thereof "30 minutes."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] desire some time on the resolution?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes; we should like to know what the bill is, as copies of the measure are not available at the desk.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As the gentleman from Massachusetts suggests that copies of the bill are not available, I will yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] to explain the purposes of the bill. I had assumed, of course, that copies of the bill were available to Members, as is usually the case.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate joint resolution. A companion measure was introduced in the House by me. It authorizes the creation of a Federal memorial commission to consider and formulate plans for the construction near St. Louis of a permanent memorial to the men who made possible the territorial expansion of the United States, which includes Thomas Jefferson, Livingston, Monroe, and those who negotiated the Louisiana Purchase.

The resolution does not carry even an authorization for any money. Remember that. It provides for the appointment of 3 members by the President, 3 by the Vice President, 3 by the Speaker of the House, and 6 by the association which has been organized and has members throughout the area covered by the Louisiana Purchase. This area purchased by Jefferson in 1803 consists of over 2,000,000 square miles, the value today being estimated at $165,000,000,000. This cost the Government but $15,000,000.

The officials of the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial Association are Bernard F. Dickmann, mayor of St. Louis, honorary chairman; Charles Nagel, former Secretary of Commerce and Labor, honorary vice chairman; Rolla Wells, former mayor of St. Louis, honorary vice chairman; Luther Ely Smith, chairman; Morton May, Carl F. G. Meyer, Frank C. Rand, vice chairmen; John G. Lonsdale, treasurer; Tom Gilmartin, secretary.

Members of executive committee and chairmen of special committees: Plan and scope, Judge Jesse McDonald, chairman; press and publicity, W. C. D'Arcy, chairman; finance, Sidney Maestre, chairman; legislation, Gale F. Johnston, chairman, William J. Gibbons, Isaac H. Orr; historical data, McCune Gill, chairman; legal, Charles P. Williams, chairman; transportation, Col. Albert T. Perkins, chairman; speakers, Mrs. George Gellhorn, chairman, Claude B. Ricketts, Max O'Rell Truitt; Mrs. E. M. Grossman, executive secretary.

It is desired to erect this memorial on the banks of the Mississippi River at St. Louis. In advocating this site the association says:

> Here came Capt. Amos Stoddard in 1303, representing President Jefferson as well as France, to take possession of Louisiana. The flag of Spain was lowered, the flag of France was raised to signify the reacquisition by Napoleon 2 years before; then the Lilies of France came down, and the Stars and Stripes were raised over America's new domain. To this spot had previously come the explorers Joliet, Pere Marquette, and La Salle.
> Later came the Germans under Gottfried Duden and Carl Schurz. Scandinavians came through St. Louis, some bound for the Northwest, and sons of other nations. Such famous men as Zebulon Pike, Benton, Robert E. Lee, Doniphan, Douglas, Lincoln, Sherman, Blair, Mark Twain, James B. Eads, and Eugene Field were here. St. Louis was a starting point for the Santa Fe Trail, the Oregon Trail, the fur-trading enterprises, the Lewis and Clark Expedition, the migration to Texas under Moses and Stephen F. Austin, and the "Forty-niners"—a myriad of unknown pioneers and frontiersmen. This is sacred ground in American history.
> However honored by pageants, presentations, and Presidential praises, the United States has thus far had no adequate, permanent national memorial to those men who, as pioneers, gave to our Government, and held for posterity, an area west of the Mississippi double that east of it.
>
> It is well to honor Jefferson, Lewis and Clark, Livingston, and Monroe, and that galaxy of statesmen, patriots, and pioneers who had this great vision of the national expansion that was to be. Every great movement must have its leaders. They should be honored.
> And we should honor the unknown pioneers who came from New England and New York, Virginia, Maryland, the Carolinas, and Georgia and formed a westward movement that is one of the marvels of the history of the world.

St. Louis gave you the greatest world's fair the country ever knew. It will give you this memorial.

The people in the area are extremely anxious for the passage of this resolution so that the permanent commission can be organized.

We have precedents for the passage of legislation of this kind. One passed in the last Congress, which provided for a commission to investigate a similar project in North Carolina—the advisability of erecting a suitable memorial in honor of the first white child born in America.

I do not think there is any more I can say in reference to the resolution. It is sponsored by Republicans and Democrats alike.

Mr. CARTER of California. What is the salary to be paid these commissioners?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. None whatever; the only cost to the Government is for printing this resolution.

Mr. CARTER of California. What about the expenses of the commission?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The Government is obligated in no way for any expenses of the commissioners or anyone else.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman will not say that they will not come to Congress later for an appropriation?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No one has indicated to me there is any such thought in their minds.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But he will not guarantee that they will not come back and ask for an appropriation?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. They would have a hard time getting it. The country has done a great deal in the gentleman's State in the way of erecting historical memorials.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Section 2 says the United States commission may in its discretion accept from any source, public or private, money or property to be used for the purpose of making surveys, and so forth. Is not that an invitation to the world to come forward and also for the United States to step in?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I think the gentleman from Ohio is drawing on his imagination. I doubt if the commission will be here in my time asking for money.

Mr. MILLIGAN. They can accept contributions from private sources to carry into effect the proposition, and section 3 of this bill provides that it shall be no expense to the Federal Government.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is true. The Federal Government is not responsible in any way. The resolution so provides. What more could be asked?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Why could not the city of St. Louis take care of this?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It probably could, but there is a desire to bring in all States and municipalities in the area covered by the Louisiana Purchase.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Is not this the bill that was brought in with the request that the Government contribute $30,000,000? Was not that the way the bill started out?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I was requested to introduce such a resolution, and the day I introduced it in the House I gave to the press a statement that, in my opinion, it would never get out of the committee. I explained that Congress would never approve of such a proposition. This is a new resolution, and is so worded that it makes no charge on the Government and no appeal for even an authorization, let alone an appropriation. The resolution passed the Senate without an objection; without even being discussed.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman state what was the original cost of the Louisiana Purchase—the original purchase—was it not $15,000,000?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes; $15,000,000; and the area is now worth $165,000,000,000.

Mr. McFADDEN. And this is to cost twice what the original purchase cost?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman is like the gentleman from Ohio, drawing on his imagination. The gentleman has not read the bill. There is no provision, I repeat, for the Government to advance one dollar. If the Members will read the resolution they will see that that is true.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have read the bill and I remember participating in the debate when the bill was under consideration before and was defeated. The gentleman knows very well that authority is going to be asked of this Congress at a subsequent date to appropriate $30,000,000.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is an excellent mind-reader if he knows any such thing to be a fact. I am not asking for an appropriation, the resolution simply provides for a Federal commission. I shall not ask for any $30,000,000 appropriation.

Mr. McFADDEN. I know the gentleman will not, but the gentleman is proposing to leave this body and go to another body. If I thought this would help the gentleman succeed in his ambition, I might be in favor of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not want the gentleman to consider my political ambitions at this time, but I do appreciate his kind remarks.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, this proposal calls for no appropriation or authorization for an appropriation. I am sure that the resolution is offered in good faith and that neither this Congress nor any other Congress will be called upon to make an appropriation for the furtherance of this most worthy project. Is not that true?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Absolutely.

Mr. LOZIER. Here is a project which not only has its cultural aspects, but it involves a national recognition of the greatest single incident in American history since the adoption of our Federal Constitution. There is no event in the history of our Republic that contributed more to the expansion, stabilization, and the perpetuity of our Republic than the purchase of the Louisiana territory. While the acquisition of Louisiana territory, according to Jefferson, was of doubtful constitutionality and bent the Constitution almost to the breaking point, yet such purchase fixed irrevocably and unchangeably the destiny of the United States and made it a world power, forever removed the danger of being hedged about or absorbed by any European nation, and insured our ultimate and peaceful expansion to the Pacific.

This project is worthy of the enlightened and progressive millions who inhabit this vast trans-Mississippi area, the natural resources and riches of which stagger human comprehension. It is fitting that this epoch-marking, history-making event should be recognized by a memorial in keeping with the importance of the transaction that was destined to transform the United States from a weak and struggling state into a virulent and puissant Nation dedicated to human freedom, the reign of law, and social justice.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the Federal Government is not supposed to pay anything toward this $30,000,000, how is the gentleman going to get the money?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The commission is going to get the money throughout the area covered by the Louisiana Purchase, an area valued now at close to $200,000,000,000.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman think it is wise, at a time when there is drought and depression and with prospects for the continued depression, to stand for a proposition like this, especially when the gentleman expects to be elected to the United States Senate?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The public-spirited citizens interested in this project feel that it will benefit the unemployment situation, and that is one thought behind it. Blocks of buildings will be removed and a splendid memorial thereon is their goal. They are going out to try to find a way to raise money to construct a memorial, and if the memorial is constructed, it will require labor to construct it. This means work for the unemployed. It is, I admit, a gigantic task, but if the gentleman only knew the personnel that compose the association he would have hope that they will reach their objective as I have.

Is there any reason why we should not encourage them by providing for a national commission? I cannot conceive of any good reason and I do not think anyone can advance a sound reason.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. To partially answer the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER] when he asked why this great gentleman should not be honored, I cannot see why the Democratic Party wants to honor him when they have pulled so far away from the principles of Thomas Jefferson. He was a believer in State rights, and I cannot understand how the party which has abandoned State rights wants to honor him.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Let me say to the gentleman from California that I believe if Thomas Jefferson had been here on March 4, 1933, and had found his country and his people in the condition that President Roosevelt found them, found them in the condition a Republican administration left them, he would have done exactly as President Roosevelt has done. He would have taken care of them. He would have fed, clothed, and housed them. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts use some of his time?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution. The place for a memorial to Thomas Jefferson is in the National Capital, and not on the western bank of the Mississippi River. It is to the everlasting disgrace of this Nation that up to now we have not in this Capital a suitable memorial to Thomas Jefferson. To my mind no one contributed more to the founding of this Union and to its perpetuity than did Thomas Jefferson. I have had a bill before the Congress for the last 8 or 9 years providing for a memorial to Thomas Jefferson. I have searched the entire city of Washington, and I have failed to find a statue of Thomas Jefferson. Hidden away at the east entrance of this Hall is a small statue of Jefferson in a narrow hall, and unless somebody calls attention to it you will not see it. That is the tribute that a grateful—with an interrogation point after the grateful—country offers to the memory of Thomas Jefferson. The Louisiana Purchase was a great achievement, yes; but why do not the States that were carved out of the Louisiana Purchase get up this memorial themselves on the bank of the Mississippi and pay for it. I am opposed to a national memorial anywhere in the country to the memory of Thomas Jefferson until a suitable memorial is erected here, where it ought to be, in the Nation's Capital. I have suggested that the block immediately east of the Archives Building on Pennsylvania Avenue, known as the "Apex block", be set apart by Congress as a suitable site for the erection of the Nation's tribute to Thomas Jefferson.

This is the place and this is the city where it should be, not out along the western bank of the Mississippi. The Nation's Capital is the place where it should be. If the States in the West want this memorial, why do they not start it and pay for it, and not come here looking to the Federal Government for help?

Let us examine the report of the Committee on the Library. What does it say?

> The Committee on the Library, having had under consideration Senate Joint Resolution 931, respectively report the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

That is all the report says. Nothing else.

Now, I think it is a serious mistake to pass this resolution. I should like to see a thousand memorials to Thomas Jefferson, but until there is one here, where it ought to be, the Congress should not authorize a memorial in any other part of this Nation. We have been ungrateful, we have been unmindful of the work that Thomas Jefferson contributed to the cause of our beloved country, and until proper action is taken here, no other memorial should be considered.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if he does not believe, as I do, that Thomas Jefferson directed his own memorial in the writing of the Declaration of Independence, the Virginia Statutes of Religious Liberty, and in the founding of the University of Virginia?

Mr. BOYLAN. Thomas Jefferson directed that those achievements alone, including religious tolerance, be inscribed on his tombstone.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Did the fact that Grant's Tomb was erected in New York prevent the Government of the United States from erecting the beautiful memorial at the foot of Capitol Hill? Illinois has a wonderful memorial to Lincoln, but we also have the Lincoln Memorial in Washington.

Mr. BOYLAN. No; but the city of New York paid for the Grant Memorial erected there at his tomb.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is there anything in this resolution that indicates the Government is going to pay for this? Why not give our people a chance to see what they can do.

Mr. BOYLAN. If you want the memorial in St. Louis, why do you not get the money and build it there?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. There is nothing in this resolution which provides that it shall come from the Federal Government. It sets up a Federal commission. That commission is to do just what the gentleman wants—raise the money for this memorial.

Mr. BOYLAN. No, not now, but later you will be seeking Federal funds.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOYLAN. Are there any other questions?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. BOYLAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can understand the great interest that the gentleman from New York takes in perpetuating adequately the memory of Thomas Jefferson. I am familiar with the efforts the gentleman has made for a number of years to have such recognition given by some appropriate memorial in the city of Washington; but what assurance have we that there is any prospect of effectuating the gentleman's desire at any time within the immediate future? Coupled with that, and set over against that uncertainty, here is a concrete proposition upon the part of the citizens of that great area affected by the Louisiana Purchase, by which they propose by their initiative, to set up a memorial in that section of the country, and they are not asking for any Federal appropriation for that purpose. I should like to have the gentleman's answer to those questions.

Mr. BOYLAN. Well, it is true that there is nothing in the world to prevent those distinguished citizens from commencing and pursuing their work; the National Government will not prevent it in any way, and I am sure will not offer any impediment to any action they might take.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. The gentleman is acquainted with that great bridge from his city over to the State of New Jersey, called the "George Washington Bridge." I should like to have the gentleman, while he is on the subject, see to it that whoever may name the next bridge should give it the name of that great statesman, Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. BOYLAN. I think the gentleman has made an excellent suggestion, and I certainly will do everything I can to bring it about.

Too much honor cannot be given to Jefferson's memory, but I believe the initiative and the start should be in the Nation's Capital. Until something is done here, fitting and adequate, or in a measure promising to be adequate, to the respect of his name and his works, no memorial commission should be established by the Congress. For this reason and on account of the great respect and reverence I have for the memory of Thomas Jefferson, for the respect I have for the work he performed for the perpetuation of this Nation, and in the hope that we may be awakened to a realization of the debt we owe to his memory, I shall oppose this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to note the position taken by my friend from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] on this resolution. As a rule it is my good fortune to find myself in accord with him on matters coming up on the floor. As a matter of fact, we are in heartiest agreement on the principal issue presented by this resolution this afternoon—the honor due Thomas Jefferson and the proper acknowledgment of his genius and achievements, especially in the acquisition of the Louisiana territory.

No one can stand in Statuary Hall and look upon the effigies there of the men who have made American history and who have had so large a part in the founding and preservation of the Republic without a feeling of surprise and regret that Jefferson is not there. Although he was the greatest thinker of the Revolution, second only to Washington and Franklin in the consummation of that vast enterprise, there is no fitting memorial to him within the confines of the Nation he helped to establish.

But I am inclined to think that the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Kentucky, who have just spoken, on a hasty perusal of this resolution, have misconstrued its real purport. The memorial proposed is not merely a tribute to Jefferson, but is also in commemoration of an epoch-making event in the history of the Nation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Missouri must have misunderstood my meaning. I am one of the greatest admirers of Jefferson that there is in the House of Representatives. I merely wanted to stress the fact that Jefferson himself had said, as is engraved upon the monument marking his last resting place, that the three great achievements of his career were the writing of the Declaration of Independence, the writing of the Virginia Statutes of Religious Liberty, and the founding of the great University of Virginia.

I shall vote for this resolution. I believe we ought to pass not only this resolution but a resolution that would cause the erection of a monument to Thomas Jefferson in the capital of every State of the Union.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am glad the gentleman is supporting the resolution. I note he quotes the inscription from the tomb of Jefferson. I recently made a week-end trip to Richmond and there enjoyed the hospitality of our former colleague, Gov. George C. Peery, of Virginia. Among other points of history I visited Monticello and read the inscription to which the gentleman refers. It was written by Jefferson himself. When he came to sum up in one sentence the noblest achievements of his life and career he made no mention of his services as Secretary of State under Washington, or as Ambassador to France, or that he was twice President of the United States. He referred instead to his authorship of the Declaration of Independence, of the Virginia Statutes for Religious Liberty, and the founding of the University of Virginia. But could Jefferson have looked forward to this hour and have appraised the events of his administration at their true worth, he would have added a fourth. He would have written, author of the Declaration of American Independence, of the Virginia Statutes for Religious Liberty, father of the University of Virginia, and purchaser of the Louisiana Territory.

No other event since the adoption of the Constitution has affected so profoundly the history and destiny of the American people as the acquisition of the Louisiana Purchase—characterized by Speaker Clark as the greatest transaction in real estate since the devil took the Savior to the top of a high mountain and offered him the world if he would fall down and worship him. From that moment the modern United States was possible. The acquisition of Texas, California, and the Northwest Territory inevitably followed and as a result no nation today exercises a more effective or beneficent influence on world affairs. But for the Louisiana Purchase the Republic would have remained a petty state surrounded by overshadowing provinces of European powers, without influence abroad or opportunity at home, and ultimately the helpless prey of foreign aggressors. Surely both the man and the deed are entitled to this belated recognition.

I fully realize the force of the suggestion which has been made here, that in times like these, with men and women and children to be fed and cared for, the attention of the country should not be diverted from the utilitarian. But "life is more than meat and the body is more than raiment." A nation which does not remember its great men and commemorate their virtues and their deeds will not long produce men deserving of remembrance or deeds and virtues worthy of commemoration. We can adequately care for the needy and at the same time honor the immortals who established a form of government which serves all mankind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the further suggestion has been made that the memorial proposed in this resolution be placed in Washington. That would be highly inappropriate. The proper place for such a memorial is the spot on which occurred the stirring event which it commemorates. The historic soil of old St. Louis, where the standard of France was lowered and the Stars and Stripes were raised on that fateful day in 1803, is the natural and logical site for such a memorial.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution is neither provincial nor partisan. Its provisions are not limited to the city of St. Louis or the State of Missouri. It is national in its scope and world-wide in its significance. The objection that it proposes a charge on the Federal Treasury is disproved by the terms of the resolution itself. It does not ask for a dollar of appropriation. It merely asks for the appointment of a commission. It is my understanding that St. Louis is ready to contribute its part of the expenses. I am certain the State of Missouri will be glad to participate. And I have no doubt that each State in the Louisiana Purchase will want to have a part in supporting it. I trust the resolution will receive the support of Members from all States and from both sides of the aisle. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I do not minimize the greatness of Thomas Jefferson. I appreciate fully he merits a monument, and many have been erected in his honor, but I do say this is not the time to be spending money for monuments. The resources of the country and the people are being taxed to the utmost to take care of relief demands.

The proponents of the measure say it is not their purpose to ask the Government of the United States for any money. It is true, they do not ask for it right now, but just as sure as I am standing here, before their monument contract is awarded they will be back asking Congress for an appropriation. Why am I confident in this prediction? Because it was only a few months ago it was proposed to have the Government contribute $30,000,000 for the monument, and when the opposition was too formidable, the advocates revised their plans and sought merely a commission to receive donations from States and individuals.

This resolution calls for 3 persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, 3 Senators by the President of the Senate, 3 Members of the House of Representatives and 6 members from the district where the monument is to be placed. It is very evident from the complexion of the committee the purpose is eventually to secure money from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Possibly the gentleman is not aware that provision has already been made for the expenses of the committee. It is my understanding that a number of public-spirited men of St. Louis have already guaranteed the expense and support of the commission proposed in the resolution, and that no appropriation will be asked for that purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman whether he does not expect the commission will come back here eventually and ask for a contribution from the United States Government?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I have never received any information from anyone connected with it indicating that they expect a contribution from the United States Government. I am not authorized to speak for anybody in that connection. But I have never received any such intimation and the resolution speaks for itself.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Originally was there not a contribution asked from the Federal Government?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I understand when it was first mentioned some enthusiastic friends suggested that the United States Government might contribute $30,000,000. Of course, anyone knows that is out of the question. The Government has in the past contributed generously to such projects. The Rushmore memorial in the Black Mountains to Washington, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt, for example, was a Federal project in which the United States matched dollars with the State, and such instances may have encouraged some to think the Federal Government should make a like contribution to the Jefferson memorial, but so far as I am aware the responsible proponents of the resolution have not asked a penny from the United States Government, either in their hearings before the committee or their interviews with the State delegation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I wish I could believe that, but I have been here so long, and I have seen these projects all start in this manner. When they first come to the House no one wants any money. It is merely official recognition desired. But they all come back, and eventually they get the money because persistency in the end prevails.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Massachusetts has served here long enough with our able and highly distinguished colleague from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] to know that he has been one who has fought harder and has done more to save the money of the United States for the people of the United States than any other man I know of in Congress. Every one of us here highly appreciates the valuable service of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]. He has saved enough public money that the gentleman ought not to impute an attempt upon his part to improperly expend public funds.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I say that I do not impugn the motives of either one of the gentlemen from Missouri who spoke here. I think they are sincere. They are both able and fine men, and I do not think they will individually ask for an appropriation. I do not fear either, but someone else will ask for an appropriation. I believe in the interest of economy we ought to stop this project right here, and I hope the House will reject the rule.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. UMSTEAD. If the Congress should be later asked for an appropriation to establish a memorial in that territory to Thomas Jefferson, would the gentleman vote against the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would vote against such a proposal. I have voted against most all of these monuments in recent years because the needs of the Government are so great in other directions that we cannot afford to spend money except for essentials.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Even for a monument to the memory of Thomas Jefferson?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Even for a monument for Thomas Jefferson.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, it was not my purpose to comment upon the resolution, but I find it possible in this case to agree both with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], and with the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Coming from the ancient and classic State that boasts the nativity and resting place of Thomas Jefferson, it seems to me that it is highly appropriate that this great achievement that the resolution seeks to memoralize should be carried on. Nor do I find myself very much horrified by the very probable prospect that eventually Congress will be asked to make a contribution to that worthy project. The resolution does not ask for it now, but as the work progresses very likely we shall be asked in the future. And why not?

We have built memorials to everyone else. We have spent the money of the American taxpayer lavishly in memoralizing this national hero and the other, and if, in the judgment of some future Congress, it should seem appropriate to have the Federal Government make a contribution to this great memorial, I think it would be entirely proper to do so. May I say I think the Federal Government should immediately take steps to establish some appropriate shrine in the Nation's Capital to Thomas Jefferson. That ought to be a Federal project, built out of Federal funds, and in keeping with his life and service, not only to America, but to democratic governments the world over.

We have memoralized in Washington Lincoln and other great characters in American history, and we ought to have here in the heart of the Nation's Capital some appropriate shrine to Thomas Jefferson. Even in the days of economic stress when we are, as I say, spending money so lavishly on many projects that some of us may think questionable, I would not stand back in an effort to start a memorial now in the Nation's Capital to this great hero of liberty and justice in government. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELTSE].

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] and also the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] that the seat of the Nation's Government is the proper place to establish this memorial.

Those of us who are familiar with American history know of the great battle that went on between Hamilton and Jefferson, Hamilton believing in centralized government and Jefferson, on the other hand, believing in a decentralized government. I submit that this monument ought to be established here in the city of Washington and that there should be inscribed on it for all those who may come the words that "Government is an evil, a necessary evil, and the less of it the better", or words practically to this effect.

In these days when there is a tendency toward centralization of government and taking away the sovereignty of States for which the States fought and for which Jefferson stood, it is high time we have such a memorial at the seat of government and the Capital of the Nation, where all who come may see and be inspired to follow his dictates and the principles taught by the famous and the immortal Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. No.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California in order that he may submit an inquiry or otherwise use the time.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to remind my colleague from California that through the purchase of Louisiana it is possible for him to sit in this great assembly today and express his views, because, without the geographical contiguity between California and the Atlantic States, California probably would never have become a part of this Union. This was made possible by the purchase of the Louisiana Territory by Thomas Jefferson, and I think all of the Members from California and the Southwest are under deep obligation to him, and we owe him a tribute the same as the people of the State of Virginia and the Louisiana Purchase area.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman think Thomas Jefferson conferred any benefit on the country by allowing the gentleman from California to come here? [Laughter.]

Mr. ELTSE of California. May I ask the same question with respect to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. COLDEN. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from California [Mr. ELTSE] is my colleague, and I believe it is my duty to protect him to that extent.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one question and an observation?

Mr. COLDEN. I yield.

Mr. LOZIER. Is it not true that Missouri, the brightest of the many stars of first magnitude in the constellation carved out of the Louisiana Territory, furnished Moses Austin, who planned, and Stephen Austin, who began the Anglo-American movement into Texas? The grant of Texas lands was made by the Mexican Government to Moses Austin in 1820 or 1821, and in 1822 Stephen Austin founded his colony on the Brazos.

The Louisiana Territory produced rugged men like the Austins, who planted civilization in the Texas wilds, which subsequently resulted in the independence of Texas, the establishment of the Republic of Texas, and its subsequent entrance by treaty into our Federal Union. Then followed the Mexican War and the Treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, which increased our coast line 1,500 miles and added to our public domain 1,000,000 square miles of territory of great strategic importance and with enormous mineral deposits and other natural resources so diversified and stupendous that no statistician has ever attempted to approximate their intrinsic value.

Is it not meet and proper that we should rear in the historic city of St. Louis, the key and gateway to the Louisiana Purchase area, a stately monument of marble and bronze in honor of Thomas Jefferson, and to commemorate the acquisition of this far-flung domain that has so enormously enriched our Nation and so mightily influenced our national destiny?

Mr. COLDEN. Yes; and I may say further that the contribution from the States of the Middle West that furnished the Republican majority is responsible for my colleague being here. [Laughter.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to use any more of his time?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favor of suitable memorials to men like Thomas Jefferson, because it was from the gray matter of men like Jefferson and Hamilton and Washington and others that we were given the Constitution of the United States.

I would not be averse in this instance to an appropriation by the Congress of a reasonable amount for this particular memorial. My interest, however, was aroused in the first instance by the presentation of a bill providing for a $30,000,000 appropriation. This was unreasonable, because this monument is to be erected in the West, and it should have been the pride and the ambition of the locality to have had an opportunity to subscribe to a monument of this importance.

I recall that in Pennsylvania, where the Constitution was adopted, for a good many years nothing was done to mark the memory of Robert Morris, who was among those who, along with Jefferson, had much to do with the formation of this Government of ours, and it is to the credit of the people of Pennsylvania that a few years ago they took it upon themselves to place in the city of Philadelphia a suitable memorial to Robert Morris. I happened to be the chairman of the committee that undertook this work and we did not ask for any appropriation from the Congress. The memorial, perhaps, could have been more elaborate, but there is always the matter of sentiment attached to these memorials, and I am heartily in favor of marking the memory of the men who in the early days gave us this great chart under which we have been operating until just recently. [Laughter and applause.]

To my mind it is rather a traversty for this Congress to appropriate money to commemorate the memory of Thomas Jefferson when, as a matter of fact, practically everything they have done has been to undo all that Jefferson stood for and everything he tried to impress, not only upon the men of his time, but upon future generations as to the necessity of maintaining constitutional government in the United States.

There are many other men in the United States whose memory we should revere and mark by suitable memorials. Some come from my own congressional district, and I may refer to David Wilmot, one of my predecessors and another former Member, Galusha A. Grow, who was Speaker of this House during the Civil War.

I have tried recently to get legislation that would do something to construct a memorial for Wilmot, but of no avail.

There are other men for whom I should like to see a memorial constructed in suitable places throughout the United States—memorials for every man who signed that great Constitution of ours. I believe the generations to come, when constitutional government has passed out, as it is now passing out, will revere the memory of these great men who stood up as they saw fit to do for the future maintenance of this great country of ours. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I trust that there will be no misapprehension about the real purpose of the resolution from the Rules Committee making the joint resolution in order, and the Senate joint resolution, which has passed the Senate of the United States.

As has been clearly stated in the debate, it is simply a proposition to set up a commission of the number named in the resolution for the purpose of considering and formulating a plan whereby this tremendously important event in the development and construction of the Government of the United States is to be properly memorialized, and that it may have behind it the dignity and endorsement of representatives of the Federal Government appointed by the President of the United States.

I cannot conceive of any place in the country—despite the argument made by my genial friend from New York for the erection of a monument here to the memory of Jefferson—I cannot conceive of any more appropriate place for the construction of such a memorial than in the territory to which it applies.

As pointed out by the gentleman from Kentucky, it would not be necessary that Jefferson should be memorialized. He is enshrined in the hearts of the American people and will ever live in the affections and gratitude of the people of this country. [Applause.]

Just as the reply was made in London in that great cathedral constructed by Sir Christopher Wren, when a visitor asked, "Where is the monument to Wren?" the reply was, "Look around you."

Just as a visitor to St. Peter's in Rome might ask for some memorial to Michaelangelo, the answer would be to look above him and view the great frescoes that he had painted on the dome of that historic edifice. There would be the memorial to him. So that it is not necessary for the purpose of history to actually construct a memorial to Thomas Jefferson anywhere; but, for the benefit of future generations of that great western empire that his genius made possible, for the encouragement of the recollection of great historic events in the minds and hearts of the youth of this country, it seems to me that it is as little as we can do to give the endorsement of the Congress of the United States to a project undertaken by the citizens themselves of that great territory, to merely authorize the appointment of a commission to work out appropriate plans and provisions for a memorial.

Mr. BOYLAN rose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I see the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] rising in his place. I join with him in the expression of the hope not only that this great memorial, somewhere along the Mississippi River, will be brought to a successful fruition, but I trust that the time will not be long delayed when here in the Capital of this Nation some great effigy of appreciation shall be constructed in memory of the author of the Declaration of Independence. [Applause.] But where there is a proposition, possibly, to construct two great memorials to this great man, when we have this immediate opportunity to begin a work of this magnitude, I do not think it is logical to discourage it upon the ground that sometime possibly in the future we will get permission to construct a memorial here in the city of Washington.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate everything the gentleman has said. He has delivered a most eloquent address, one of the kind that he is able to deliver; but I know the gentleman will agree with me that the first memorial and the first step taken in anything we may do for the memory of Thomas Jefferson—although, as the gentleman has stated, he needs no memorial, for his works and achievements are embedded in the hearts and the minds of the American people—should, in the first instance, be to prepare a national memorial in the Nation's Capital, where visitors from the world over may see it and have called to their attention his life and works.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to the gentleman why I cannot agree with the logic of his position.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. MAY. In view of the fact that the Congress of the United States has heretofore expended several hundred thousand dollars in a bicentennial to memorialize the life of Washington, and considering the relation that Jefferson sustained to Washington and to this Republic in its formation and foundation, what other tribunal in America is there that could more appropriately pass a resolution on this subject than the Congress of the United States?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman's conclusions in reference to that. I have spoken in support of the passage of the rule. Gentlemen will understand that 30 minutes is given for consideration of the resolution upon its merits, and I certainly hope gentlemen will not only adopt the rule but, when the vote comes, that they will adopt the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and the amendment thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHALLENBERGER). The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 115, noes 15.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that it is late in the afternoon and that it is the desire to finish this matter before we adjourn, I wonder if we could not reach an agreement to submit the resolution upon its merits without debate and without going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That would be agreeable to me.

Mr. TABER. Would it then be the purpose to adjourn?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The majority leader informs me that he expects then to adjourn. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be put upon its immediate passage without intervening motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 93

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a commission, to be known as the "United States Territorial Expansion Memorial Commission" (hereinafter designated as the "United States Commission") for the purpose of considering and formulating plans for designing and constructing a permanent memorial on the Mississippi River, at St. Louis, Mo., said Commission to be composed of 15 commissioners as follows: Three persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, 3 Senators by the President of the Senate, 3 Members of the House of Representatives by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and 6 members of the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial Association to be selected by such association.

SEC. 2. The United States Commission may in its discretion accept from any source, public or private, money or property to be used for the purpose of making surveys and investigations, formulating, preparing, and considering plans and estimates for the improvement, construction, or other expenses incurred, or to be incurred.

SEC. 3. The United States shall not be held liable for any obligation or indebtedness incurred by the United States Commission, the State of Missouri, the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial Association, the city of St. Louis, Mo., or any other agency or officer, employee, or agent of them, or any of them, for any purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I find myself in thorough accord with both the spirit and purpose of this resolution, and I am greatly delighted to have this opportunity of again expressing my views upon the life and services of Thomas Jefferson to not only the United States, but to all humanity in all the world for all time. To me there never was nor indeed could there be a place, a time, or a tribunal more appropriate in which to consider a resolution proposing a memorial to the immortal Jefferson than here at this time in this Hall.

We have in the recent past very appropriately and wisely paid a just and much-deserved tribute to George Washington by the creation of a bicentennial commission to provide a celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Washington which reached its happy climax here in this historic Hall on February 22, 1932. Since the resolution calls for no appropriation of funds from the Federal Treasury and merely seeks to provide a commission to plan a fitting memorial to Jefferson's great accomplishment in the acquisition of the Louisiana Territory, I find neither reason nor justification for the opposition now coming from the other side of this House. All around this great Capital City we find erected statues honoring many great soldiers and statesmen, and most of them inspired by military achievements in some great battle involving the destruction of human life and property. Here we have a resolution to memorialize the deeds of one not noted as a warrior but one whose life typified the saying: "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war." Yes, Mr. Speaker, a resolution proposing to create a memorial in marble and granite to stand out to the gaze of generations unborn and for centuries to come, as a beacon of hope and inspiration to noble deeds; a memorial that shall stand beside the pathway of civilization and liberty along which traveled the crusaders of liberty and democracy, carrying the self-evident truth "that all men are created equal" and have certain inherent and inalienable rights, among which is the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; yes, Mr. Speaker, crusaders that carried into the jungles of a vast and impenetrable wilderness the hope of future generations of Americans, that Jefferson's philosophy of life, "Equal and exact justice to all men and exclusive privileges to none", might be the rich inheritance of all generations in this and every other land under the sun.

This greatest achievement of his administration, the acquisition by peaceable means of the Louisiana Territory, was the opening gate to a mighty empire, every foot of which is made sacred by the heroism and sacrifice of the men and women of the days of the covered wagon, and why not express in imperishable marble and granite the appreciation of a grateful people for such a statesman, philosopher, and patriot as Thomas Jefferson? My State bequeathed to the Nation Abraham Lincoln, the child of destiny, that followed the trail of the covered wagon and carried into that great land of promise the political philosophy of Thomas Jefferson "that this must be a government of the people, by the people, and for the people", and may I pause to remark that Jefferson's philosophy of government has for three-quarters of a century had its opponents in that same school of thought from which its adherents on the other side of the aisle now emerge as the opponents of this resolution.

In the eternal destiny of things, thank God, the fundamentals of government and the political philosophies of Jefferson have survived the attacks of the last few decades and emerge today more potent, powerful, and glorious than ever. It has come forth in glorious triumph to again reveal "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people" under the wise and superb leadership of another great Jeffersonian Democrat. [Prolonged applause.]

In the mind and heart of that matchless humanitarian and statesman was developed by his training and environment that immortal trinity, life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, which he wrote into the Declaration of Independence. A memorial to Jefferson though amply justified as a tribute to him as a man is also a recognition of these great fundamentals of democratic government. They were later embodied and written into the Constitution of the United States. In every sentence in that great document running like threads of gold and cords of strength is found the spirit of these three great divinely inspired principles. Jefferson the architect, the engineer, the master of political economy; the student, scholar, and statesman long before his elevation to the Presidency, has laid strong and secure foundations upon which he and his contemporaries had planted the Constitution under which we now live. Under that Constitution that guarantees to us and our posterity the blessings of liberty, that document that was designed to promote the general welfare and secure these blessings, no law should ever be enacted that is not a breathing and vital expression of the will of the people. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that as the result of it, pilgrims of all future generations as they pass from the great populous East to the broad plains of the West, may look upon a bright and shining memorial to Thomas Jefferson, that shall give hope and inspiration to the young and the old, to the Jew and gentile alike through the centuries. I shall vote for the resolution. [Applause.]

EMERGENCY CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC HIGHWAYS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CARTWRIGHT submitted a conference report (Rept. No. 1923) on the bill (H.R. 8761) to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and for other purposes, for printing in the RECORD.

FREEDOM AND PLANNING

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein the Sieff political economic plan and an analysis of that plan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following secret document entitled "Freedom and Planning" issued from the inner council of the members of the Political Economic Plan, otherwise termed "P.E.P." The chairman of the organization and author of the document is Israel Moses Sieff, London, England. This is followed by an analysis of the plan.

FREEDOM AND PLANNING

COLLAPSING CIVILIZATION

This generation is faced with the threat of a world collapse of modern civilization and the advent of a period comparable with the dark ages which followed on the collapse of the Roman Empire in the fifth century A.D.

We are apt to regard such statements as pleasantly scarifying, pardonable exaggerations in the mouths of those who are trying to spur us to action against the very real ills of the times, but not meant quite seriously.

The threat is serious.

Chaos will overtake us if we cannot show intelligence enough to extricate ourselves.

For more than a year now nothing has enabled civilization to keep some sort of course and to ride out the storm except the immense momentum of ordinary economic processes and the inertia of habit and custom. It is the resisting powers of these forces and human intelligence which has thus far staved off the collapse.

They cannot bring us back prosperity, but they may suffice to carry the world through the immediate crises. If so, we shall for a time be able to live on our capital, the material capital stored up from past generations, the intellectual and moral capital of men and women trained for civilization and citizenship. But what chance will the next generation have, if half of them find no employment for their youthful energies, and all of them are living under the oppression of hopelessness and decay?

What forms collapse will assume no one can foresee. It may not come suddenly. More probably there will be a gradual decline with fleeting periods of revival.

SHRINKING CREDIT AND SHRINKING TRADE

Modern life depends on world-wide interchanges of goods and services. These in turn depend on confidence and credit. Confidence and credit are being progressivly impaired. Without them it is impossible to maintain for long not merely existing standards of life but even life itself for a large proportion of the world's population.

Imagine the plight of Great Britain if the complex economic and financial machinery which supplies the vast bulk of our population with its food were to cease to function. Such a catastrophe is not, it is true, as yet in sight, but this machinery depends wholly on confidence and credit, and with dwindling world trade and social and political trouble growing in other countries the moment is not far off when we shall be unable in these islands to support either present standards or our present aggregate population.

Applied science puts at man's disposal foodstuffs, raw materials, services of all kinds, in ever-growing abundance, enough not alone to maintain existing standards of life but to raise these standards for all far above the highest now enjoyed by any of us.

Only our intelligence and powers of organization and our moral and spiritual capacity to work in mutual cooperation with each other are proving insufficient to meet the growing complexity of the machinery for regulating production, distribution, and consumption.

First one, then another vital part of the machine is being thrown out of gear. Increasing friction is being generated in the effort to distribute to the consumer that which man is producing. The quantity of things produced and things consumed declines. The volume of world trade, both of internal trade within each country and still more of international exchanges of goods and services, is progressively lessened.

WORLD-WIDE ECONOMIC DISTRESS

Cracks are appearing everywhere. In China and in India economic distress is both aggravated and concealed by the social and political unrest of which it is the main root.

In South America revolution has become endemic and all but one or two of the most solid countries are financially in default.

In central and southeastern Europe financial default is imminent, but that is by itself of little moment in comparison with the consequent social and political upheaval which will follow. It is open to question whether the populations of Germany and central Europe can be fed and kept alive next winter and how long any organized government can control the situation in these countries.

In the United States of America loss of confidence is absolute. The strain of material suffering in a population, none too homogenous, accustomed for generations to rapidly increasing prosperity, may lead to a breakdown of existing institutions and forms of government. The outcome is unpredictable but the consequences throughout the globe may be catastrophic.

World disorganization, famine, pestilence, and the submergence of our civilization are visible on the horizon.

WHY?

Not because nature has been niggardly. Not because individual human achievement or capacity have grown less. They have won ever greater and greater triumphs over nature and throughout the material field in the last two generations.

These triumphs have been won by an ever-wider and even bolder application of the principle of division of labor, till man's powers of large-scale organization have been overstrained. He can control and adapt the forces of nature, but the task which he has now set himself requires more than that. He has still to learn so to control and adapt his own human nature and so to work together with the human nature of his fellows as to fit them and himself into their proper places in the organization without losing for himself and for them all that makes life worth living.

"Mankind is not clever enough to control the machine which he has created."

There is no lack of human good will and desire to serve our generation. Yet all of us are acutely conscious of the exasperating frustration of our best efforts. We see the evil plight to which we and the world are being reduced, and we confess that for the moment human intelligence seems bankrupt.

A RESPITE?

This essay cannot concern itself with remedies for the immediate crisis or with the means we may hope to restore for a time some semblance of order in the world's economy. It is necessary to assume that, whether with or without the help of intelligent human leadership, the economic structure will find within itself enough powers of resistance to secure for us a temporary respite.

The respite will be a short one. We must use it to make a new start or our doom is sealed.

BRITAIN'S PLIGHT

Great Britain and some parts of the British Empire have in some degree improved their own position since last autumn. Absolutely the improvement in Great Britain has been small, though relatively to other countries it is striking.

This achievement is of real value to the world, even though some part of it has been made at the expense of added difficulties for others.

It has been attained thanks to a remarkable demonstration of the self-discipline and well-disposed spirit of public service and the sober imperturbability and reasonableness of the British citizen in face of a crisis.

It is in this evidence of British character that the best hope for the future rests.

BRITAIN'S NEED OF A PROSPEROUS WORLD

Britain cannot however prosper in a distressed world. Entirely dependent on external trade for her food and raw materials, Britain cannot escape world catastrophe by isolating herself.

Moreover, that world-wide loss of control of the machinery of civilization is all too visible in Britain and in British institutions.

If Britain is to save herself and give the world that leadership which is urgently demanded, the first need is for complete reconstruction of our national life on lines fitted for the new needs of the twentieth century.

Here a fundamental difficulty must be faced. Economic nationalism is no solution. On the contrary, it is among the main causes of the world's troubles. Recovery depends on building up afresh and extending even more widely than before world-wide exchanges of goods and services which everywhere cross national and political boundaries.

The United Kingdom is far too small in area to form today an economic unit commensurate with the vast scale of modern commercial and industrial operations.

The aim must always be the widest possible international cooperation.

To assume, however, that for this reason the first steps must be international would under present conditions result in mere futility. Action, if it is to be both practicable and advantageous, must be taken within the sphere now open to us. Economic reconstruction within that sphere will moreover, at least in the earlier stages, tend to draw other countries within the orbit of returning prosperity.

Our attention must first be directed to the United Kingdom and to those regions whether within the British Empire or in countries of complementary trade where political and economic associations offer promising opportunities of effective cooperation.

Every care must, however, be taken to secure that in focusing our gaze on our own sphere of action we do nothing to exclude the wider division, and that we work gradually for the extension of complementary planned relations over the widest possible area.

THE NEED FOR PLANNING

"Almost all British constitutional safeguards are safeguards against being governed."

"Communism is a tremendous extension of government and consequently a great encroachment on liberty."

"Mussolini understood that what was keeping the people slaves was their determination to be what they called free."

"No real business that had to do positive work could achieve anything on the British Parliamentary system."

None of these aphorisms of Mr. Bernard Shaw can be rejected as untrue, even though they offer no proof that communism or fascism are either necessary or desirable.

Their truth can be illustrated in every branch of our present-day life.

We have allowed the numbers of our feeble-minded to double themselves in the last 20 years.

We have watched the purchasing power of our currency fluctuate wildly and play havoc with our economic life, and have been powerless to help ourselves.

The Road Act of 1910 gave powers both to build motor roads and to prevent ribband-building, but we still permit it and spoil our countryside and our motor roads.

Notoriously unsuitable candidates "got themselves elected" (this is our habitual way of speaking of what happens) to Parliament and local councils.

Prime ministers got nervously worn out in the mere effort to grapple with the everyday business which faces them.

In the imperial sphere there is practical unanimity as to the need for organizing the Empire as an economic family and yet we have the spectacle of the imperial conference of 1930.

In the sphere of foreign affairs the nations sign the Kellogg Peace Pact and arm themselves to the teeth.

Or again we keep alive the pretense that reparations and intergovernmental debts will continue to be paid, and because we dare not settle these obligations on terms which seem to involve inequitable distribution of the sacrifices involved, we wait with folded hands for the enforced default which will involve even greater iniquity and will strike a further blow at the foundations of the world's economic life. A year ago a broadminded settlement would have restored economic activity and staved off the financial crisis. Today, though an essential step on the road to recovery, cancelation of these obligations will by itself be of little avail. Its chief value now would be the evidence it would give of our capacity to reach international agreement.

THE FAILURE OF OUR POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC MACHINERY

Our political and economic machinery is breaking down. The great fund of individual and corporate good will, greater probably than at any previous period of our history, goes to waste and all our wills are frustrated for want of a large-scale plan of national reorganization.

Neither in politics nor in economics have we grasped that the first and urgent necessity is planning ahead.

Particular projects often of great potential value are put forward in Parliament or elsewhere without any effort being made to relate them to each other or to a national plan, and they either break down or function imperfectly through needless friction engendered by absence of ordered planning.

Frequently where public opinion has become exasperated at its failure to get something done to remedy a defect which everyone recognizes as intolerable, our distracted legislators with desperate unanimity unite to pass into law a compromise which is wanted by no one and merely aggravates the evil.

It is a common occurrence for a government to be pursuing two or more mutually inconsistent politics at one and the same time.

CAN WE SAVE OUR FREEDOM?

Mr. Bernard Shaw's mordant words pose directly the poignant question, Is national reconstruction possible without sacrifice of the essentials of personal and political freedom?

For all their difference, bolshevism and fascism have two outstanding features in common. Both stress the primary need for conscious forward planning on a national scale. Both repudiate the claims of personal and individual freedom.

In this country we hold fast to the concept of freedom as one of absolute validity.

We know in our hearts that we are in imminent danger of losing both our freedom and our material well-being if we go on drifting.

But, if indeed, national reorganization has to be bought at the price of losing our freedom, many of us feel that it would be better for humanity to descend once again into the abyss of barbarism and struggle back painfully at some later epoch to a civilization capable of satisfying both its material desires and its spiritual aspirations.

Is the dilemma absolute? Can conscious forward planning of our economic life be reconciled with the essential and overriding claim of freedom?

Is it true that what we need is more government and a great encroachment on liberty?

Observe that it is in the sphere of our economic life, in the sphere of material things only, that conscious forward planning is demanded.

May it not be that an unprejudiced reexamination of what we call freedom may reveal unexpected possibilities?

Our ideal is a nation of free men and women self-disciplined by an active social conscience.

FREEDOM AND THE MOTORIST

The growth of a code of law and of custom for motorists shows what can be done by free cooperation. The law and the custom are dynamic; not static. They are continually developing. At the moment indeed the toll of life and limb on the public roads is evidence of the urgent need for further improvements both in law and in custom. As a rule the law steps in only to interpret the collective will already expressed in a code of behavior, and to put compulsion not on the motorist in general, but only on the "road-hog."

Self-discipline and collective action enable the motorist to enjoy a large measure of freedom. Without the help of the code and without the intervention of authority to help him to enforce it, the will of the motorist in general would be everywhere frustrated and he would enjoy far less freedom than is now secured for him.

Is this "more government and a great encroachment on liberty?"

Can we not do for ourselves as a nation what we as motorists have done for ourselves as motorists?

"The law came in because of sin", but insofar as we are self-disciplined and our social consciences are active, we have won true freedom for ourselves in the particular field of motoring.

We do not rely solely on the enlightened self-interest and unregulated competitiveness of motorists to serve providentially the greatest good of the greatest number, and sternly forbid legislative intervention.

Yet, so long as we worship at the altar of laissez faire as the guiding principle of our economic life, we are trying to conduct our industry and commerce in exactly that spirit which we have wisely rejected in the field of motoring.

Laissez faire represented a reaction against the doctrine of mercantilism and in its day has served this country and the world admirably, but our free institutions were won long before the principle of laissez faire was enunciated.

There is not a prior reason for regarding freedom of thought, freedom of speech, freedom of conscience, free institutions as incompatible with conscious forward planning of our economic life.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR LAISSEZ FAIRE

The problem, then, is to find a new economic philosophy to replace the doctrine of laissez faire. The great virtue of laissez faire was that it seemed to provide a miraculous self-adjusting system of regulating the flow of production in accordance with demand in a freely competitive individualistic world. Even today there are unrepentant individualists whose cry is for a return to unrestricted laissez faire. Sweep away, they urge, all governmental and bureaucratic interference, abolish unemployment insurance and health insurance and all these new-fangled social services. Reduce taxation correspondingly, and industry will look after itself.

It is not always realized how fortuitous and temporary were many of the conditions on which the successes of laissez faire depended in the nineteenth century.

In many cases the economic life of the world has become too complex, the scale too large, the marvelous stream of new scientific invention too bewildering, the annihilation of distance, and the speed of transport and communication have drawn the Nation too closely together to allow of any return to nineteenth century methods. The mere size of the modern industrial unit is alone enough to destroy the effectiveness of the old methods.

And the social conscience of mankind has rightly revolted against the brutality of the economic adjustments on which in the last analysis depended the self-regulating machinery of the system of laissez faire.

Moreover, however firm their faith in the doctrine, statesmen and governments always tempered its rigors with pragmatic justice by intervening at this point and at that to enforce factory acts, acts restricting hours of labor and the like. And the rigidity of trade-union regulations today is part of our evil inheritance from the intolerance of laissez faire doctrinaires.

With the advent of the twentieth century and particularly after the war, Government intervention began rapidly to operate in increasingly wider spheres. And by this date the nature, form, and extent of Government intervention tended to be more and more uneconomic and antieconomic in their results precisely because they were conceived and applied by local authorities, Government departments, and parliaments and cabinets which still did lip service without conscious hypocrisy to the principles of laissez faire.

It was in principle permissible for the State to levy taxation on industry according to the needs of the public purse. It was in principle permissible for the State to make laws and regulations restricting the freedom of business activities in the interests of health, sanitation, safety of life and limb, conditions of labor. It was not permissible in principle for the State to recognize responsibility for the efficiency or remunerativeness of business. That was intolerable State interference in a region which it had no right to enter.

The rigidity of the doctrine has indeed been relaxed in many directions and with the advent of a protective tariff we have entered on an entirely new era in the relations between State and business. Yet it remains true that taxation and regulation of industry have been excessively and needlessly hampering in their effects just because our political and economic philosophy forbade the state "interfere with the free play of natural economic forces."

It must be left for separate essays to deal in greater detail with suggestions for building up a plan of national reconstruction in the special fields of agricultural and industrial production, finance, marketing, transport, housing, town-and-country planning, and the like.

The purpose of this essay is rather to examine how far it is true that conscious forward planning involves encroachment on freedom.

THE FREEDOM OF THE CONSUMER

The basic principle of human economic activities, except in Soviet Russia, is, and has been ever since the first steps in the direction of the division of labor were taken, that the would-be consumer determines for himself which of his competing wants he will satisfy within the range of choice which his available purchasing power (even when he was living under a system of barter before money was invented) and the available supply of goods and services offered.

It is the consumer's choice which settles the relative prices of the various goods and services which the producer (or middleman) offers for sale.

The Communist system attempts to fix relative prices and to deny to the consumer the right to exercise this fundamental freedom of choice. The reason for this is that the Communist ideal is a mechanized state which will produce according to plan the maximum output of consumable goods and distribute them with maximum efficiency. The state accordingly fixes by decree the quantity and quality of production of all kinds and cannot afford to leave it in the power of the human consumer to cause variations in demand by exercising a free choice among his competing wants.

The consumer in fact is treated not at all as a consumer but as a part of the mechanism of production requiring a given quantity of fuel, etc., to keep him going as a producer. There is no reason whatever to regard this ultimate denial of freedom to humanity as necessary to conscious forward planning.

Reasonable standardization of some articles of ordinary consumption and some limits to excessive stimulation of the demand for the satisfaction of more whims which arises from unbridled competition among those who cater to them may indeed be welcomed. But the economic aim of a free community must always be to give the consumer the widest opportunities for satisfying as many of his wants as possible.

If there is to be a planning authority, its function must be to attempt to forecast demand and to regulate production and distribution accordingly, not to control or dictate consumption.

Control of consumption on special cases, e.g., of alcoholic liquor, may be necessary for reasons arising out of human weakness, but the limits of such control are narrow, and its existence does not invalidate the general argument.

Again rates and taxes levied for such purpose as the provision of free education or for display of flowers in a public park involve the enforcement of a form of collective consumption, but the individual is not compelled to use the public park or the free education if he has the desire and the means to choose alternatives.

This last example is, however, a significant illustration of our ready acceptance of collective restraints in our own or the general interests without feeling that our freedom is being filched from us.

A PLANNING AUTHORITY

Conscious planning leaves the consumer free but involves the substitution of some organized control over overproduction and distribution on behalf of the community to take the place of that free play of supposedly automatic economic forces on which laissez faire relied.

Control implies a controlling authority. To the average man and woman among us there jumps to the mind at once the picture of a large number of new Government departments and hordes of new officials attempting to take the place and to do the work of the business man, the manufacturer, the farmer, the banker, the shopkeeper, or at least to tie them all up hand and foot and dictate to them in the management of their daily affairs. And we see further a glimpse of Parliament and local bodies overwhelmed by the task of fulfilling their new functions.

Few people today would deny that the old social idea of putting the whole business of the nation into the hands of bureaucratic Government departments would prove a hopeless failure in practice and would be no improvement on present conditions.

Is there not a middle way, or better still a new way, of meeting the need for organization and coordination of those economic tasks which the break-down of laissez faire is leaving unaccomplished.

THE PUBLIC-UTILITY CONCERN

Without much distinction of party successive governments have tended in recent years to try, in various fields, to find a new way forward through the setting up of public-utility bodies, of which the B.B.C., the central electricity board, and the projected London passenger-transport board are outstanding examples. These bodies are not government departments, and their methods of management and direction and control are modeled rather on those of commercial concerns. Their purpose is to perform collectively for the community certain functions and to provide collectively certain services, in which monopoly rather than competition is, in the general belief, likely to give the best results. For this reason it is felt to be necessary to put the emphasis on the rendering of public service and not on the securing of profits, while insisting that the work ought to be done on a self-supporting basis and not dependent on a subsidy from the rates or taxes.

In all the instances cited the earning of surplus profits for private shareholders is excluded, and this must no doubt be the usual argument where monopoly is involved. It need not, however, be an invariable rule.

One special merit of this form of organization is that it claims to give flexibility of management and avoid the major risks of red tape, and while maintaining the ultimate control of Parliament and the nation provides for a large degree of self-government, and so reduce rather than increase the amount of governmental interference.

It is possible to envisage a considerable extension of this form of organization of the nation's business. A new picture begins to emerge in outline of industry, agriculture, transport, etc., enjoying if not Dominion status, at any rate wide powers of local self-government, with the Cabinet, Parliament, and the local authorities liberated from duties to which they are not ideally suited and free to perform their essential functions on behalf of the community.

THE ANALOGY OF THE ELECTRICITY GRID SYSTEM

The analogy of the grid system of the central electricity board, not itself undertaking the production of power nor the final distribution of electricity services to the consumer but providing a coordinated system of carrying the electricity produced from the big generating stations to local distributing centers all over the country, can be suggestively applied to other services.

Imagine the dairy farmers of the country or of various regional divisions of the country as the milk-generating stations, and the retailers of milk as the local distributing centers, with a central milk board conducting the business of bulk marketing of milk as the providers of the milk grid of Britain Already under the agricultural marketing act there are signs of the coming of such a milk grid as a natural development to meet the needs of the day. An extension of the system with suitable adaptions to other agricultural products easily suggests itself, and even more directly as a method of dealing with the needs of modern transport by rail, road, water, and air.

ORGANIZED PRODUCTION

When we come to the organization of producers, agricultural, industrial, and extractive, the central electricity model becomes more difficult to follow. Generally speaking, organization on public-utility lines seems to be adapted rather to the rendering of services in the sphere of distribution than to the business of production. It may be significant that the central electricity board was excluded from the ownership of generating stations. For reasons which have their roots deep in our human nature, we seem to be much readier to admit the principles of controlled monopoly and the domination of the motive of public service over the motive of private profit in the sphere of distribution than in the two spheres of original production and final retailing between which distribution services are intermediate.

Methods of retailing cannot indeed be left entirely unchanged in the face of twentieth-century needs. The multiple shop and the chain store are already bringing about notable modifications. The waste involved in the 500,000 or more retailed shops—1 shop for every 20 households—cannot be allowed to continue to block the flow of goods from producer to consumer. And reorganization of retail methods is necessary to achieve adequate organization of production. In general, however, it will probably be found that there is a large place in the business of retailing for the continued play of individualism and personal enterprise. The individualist consumer and his free choice call for some corresponding individuality of outlook in the retailer who caters to him.

Not so in the sphere of production. The business of production must be planned if it is to possess adequate means of keeping the volume and quality of the goods produced in reasonable relation to demand.

The development of an organized grid system for the distribution of milk must, it is certain, lead to a profound modification of the traditional individualism of outlook of the dairy farmer. And so it will be in other producing industries, cooperative organization of the business of distribution cannot fail to bring about conditions in which both the need and the will to organize themselves on a cooperative basis will arise amongst the producers whether they be agriculturists, or producers of coal or iron from the mines, or manufacturers of steel or of cotton or of wool.

Whether we like it or not—and many will dislike it intensely—the individualist manufacturer and farmer will be forced by events to submit to far-reaching changes in outlook and methods. The danger is that in resisting them because he regards them as encroachments on what he calls his freedom, he will make things worse for himself and for the community. Resistance is likely to play into the hands of those who say that tinkering is useless and that fullblooded socialism and communism are the only cure. Or he may be tempted to flirt with Fascist ideas. In either case he loses his cherished freedom, and it is only too probable that fascism and communism alike would be but short stages on the road to barbarism.

THE CONDITIONS OF ECONOMIC FREEDOM

It is idle to deny that some, at least, of the changes required when conscious forward planning extends into the field of production are of a revolutionary character.

It is all important, therefore, that we should appraise them soberly and without prejudice and distinguish clearly between unavoidable alterations of methods of economic organization and fundamental attacks on our personal and political freedom.

Our economic freedom must be and always has been tempered by the conditions of our environment and by our relations with our fellows, without whose mutual aid we could not enjoy the advantages which material well-being brings. Spiritual freedom in a highly organized and complex society of civilized men and women is attainable only by ready cooperation in so arranging our economic life as to provide the best attainable material surroundings.

PLANNING AND THE PRODUCER

Without entering more deeply into details than space here allows, the position of the farmer and manufacturer under a system of planned production can only be sketched in broad outlines.

He may be conceived of as remaining in full control of all the operations of his farm or factory, but receiving from the duly constituted authority instructions as to the quantity and quality of his production, and as to the markets in which he will sell. He will himself have had a voice in setting up his constituted authority and will have regular means of communicating with it and of influencing its policy. He will be less exposed than at present to interference from above; that is, from Government departments and local bodies and their inspectors. He will be less free to make arbitrary decisions as to his own business outside the region of day-to-day operation of plant or farm.

It must be presumed that the constituted authority will be armed by enabling act of Parliament and by a majority decision of its own members, presumably elected by the votes of those with whose affairs they deal, to exercise powers of compulsion over minorities in clearly specified cases.

All this is not very different from that which already occurs in particular organized industries, but must be conceived of as applying generally to most if not all of the major fields of production and as part of a consciously and systematically planned agricultural and industrial organization.

A NATIONAL PLAN IN OUTLINE

An outline of the organization contemplated would be somewhat as follows:

A national planning commission, with advisory, not executive functions, subordinate to the cabinet and to Parliament, but with clearly defined powers of initiative and clearly defined responsibilities, its personnel representative of the nation's economic life.

A national council for agriculture, a national council for industry, a national council for coal mining, a national council for transport, and so on, all statutory bodies with considerable powers of self-government, including powers of compulsion within the province with which they are concerned.

A series of statutory or chartered corporations, e.g., a cotton-industry corporation, a steel-industry corporation, a milk-producers' corporation, organized on the lines of public-utility concerns, serving at least to federate, and in suitable cases to own, the plants, factories, etc., engaged in production.

A series of public-utility corporations dealing with distributive services, e.g., the central electricity board, the national transport board (or a number of regional transport boards), and the national milk-marketing board.

In the constitution of these bodies provision would naturally be made for suitable representation of interest, including organized labor, and for their due coordination by means, for example, of the election by the various corporations of some of their members to serve on the national councils. To all of them Parliament would delegate considerable powers to regulate the affairs of their particular industries.

COMPULSION AND PRIVATE OWNERSHIP OF LAND

From the standpoint of encroachments upon freedom, apart from the denial of the tenets of individualism, the most obvious targets for attack are perhaps the proposed grant of powers to compel minorities and (point not yet mentioned) the probable necessity for drastic changes in the ownership of land.

Powers of compulsion of minorities are not unknown even under present conditions and will probably not arouse very violent antagonism on grounds of high principle.

The question of private ownership of land is one which never fails to encounter deep-rooted passions. It is also one which arises immediately in almost every aspect of conscious-planned reconstruction.

The conclusion seems unescapable that whether in the field of town-and-country planning or in that of agriculture (or rural) planning or in the organization of industry, it is not possible to make reasonable progress without drastic powers to buy out individual owners of land.

This is not to say that land nationalization, in the ordinary sense of the term, is either necessary or desirable. Far from it. Nothing would be gained by substituting the State as landlord. What is required, if only a view to equitable treatment of individuals, is transfer of ownership of large blocks of land not necessarily of all the land in the country, but certainly of a large proportion of it, into the hands of the proposed statutory corporations and public-utility bodies, and of land trusts.

In many cases all that would be needed would be the conversion of rights of ownership of land into rights of participation as shareholders or stockholders in the new corporations or in land trusts. It would be possible further in a large number of cases to leave management undisturbed, together with the enjoyment of many of the amenities which at present go with ownership, subject to the transfer of title to the corporations or trusts.

Here again limits of space preclude fuller treatment of the subject. All that is here relevant is the inevitable conclusion that the planned economy which the Nation needs to meet the demands of the twentieth century must clearly involve drastic inroads upon the rights of individual ownership of land as at present understood.

FINANCE

Thus far in this essay finance has been purposely left aside.

The assumption is that consciously planned reconstruction of the economic life of the Nation will increase, and indeed is necessary to maintain, the present national dividend. There is no reason to believe that overhead charges for government and administration will be increased. On the contrary, they should be diminished by the elimination of the friction and waste arising from present unplanning and disorder.

It should be possible also with industry and production replanned and coordinated so as to rearrange taxation as to take from the national dividend that part of it which is required for collective expenditure by the community at an economic cost less burdensome to the Nation than is involved by our existing rates and taxes.

From the standpoint of the national and local budgets therefore there is no cause for anticipating financial difficulties.

The question remains what changes are required in the financial machinery of the country. It is in the sphere of distribution, and especially in that important part in the mechanism of distribution which belongs to finance, that the worst disorders of the present economic system have shown themselves.

In no sphere is the evidence of our loss of control of the machine of civilization more evident than in that of finance.

The catastrophic fall of prices has resulted in complete disequilibrium between the cost of production and the price which the consumer can pay, and in particular, between the relative prices of agricultural and manufactured products.

Mismanagement of the standard of value is apparent throughout the world.

It is by no means so clear how recovery is to be brought about. Cheap money is obviously essential, but it is only if and when it leads to a revival of activity, to increased demand for goods and services and an increase in the volume of trade, followed by a recovery of prices to a remunerative level, that it serves any useful purpose.

Mere manufacture of paper purchasing power is of little avail, more especially if with waning political confidence the basis of credit shrinks faster than the manufactured paper money increases.

This is not the place to examine the problem of escape from the immediate financial crisis.

The same assumption must be made as was made earlier in this essay that the inertia and momentum of the economic structure and of habit and custom will carry us somehow through for the moment and that we shall be given a respite.

STABLE MONEY

One basic need of the new economic organization is the stabilization of the purchasing power of money. Stable money and conscious forward planning are mutually dependent.

The elimination of violent fluctuations of the general price level will immensely facilitate improved organization of production and distribution.

No question arises of fixing the prices of individual commodities.

Once equilibrium between costs of production and prices to the consumer has been reestablished, our first efforts must be directed to securing stability of the purchasing power of our money.

This question is dealt with at length in a separate essay and the conclusion must perforce be taken for granted here.

Stable money cannot be secured without considerable extension of control on behalf of the community over the flow of investment and the uses which the individual makes of his capital.

While as consumer he can retain full freedom of choice as to which of his competing wants he will satisfy, there are real difficulties in leaving him entirely free to invest his savings in any way he chooses.

It is probable that many of these difficulties can be solved, on the one hand, by extension of the system of insurance, along lines to which recent developments of the motoring law again supply suggestive analogies, and, on the other hand, by means which, while leaving the small capitalist untrammeled, will so canalize the flow of both long-term and short-term investment of the large sums which are at the disposal of banks and financial institutions as well as funds in the hands of large insurance companies as to insure that adequate capital is available for the big industrial, agricultural, and distributive corporations already invisaged.

It is necessary to insist that finance shall take its proper place as the servant and not the master of industry and commerce. The stabilization of the purchasing power of money will by itself go far to secure this subordination.

THE BANKS AND PLANNING

The Bank of England has in the course of its history lost practically all of its original profit-making characteristics and become in fact, if not in form, a leading example of a public-utility corporation devoted to rendering public service. It has also many of the features of a self-governing institution, its relations to the Government delicately adjusted so as to combine both due subordination and administrative independence, so as to offer a significant parallel to the new institutions suggested earlier in the sphere of industry and distribution. It would appear to be sufficiently flexible to enable it to adapt itself to filling its place in the new order without requiring any radical changes in its constitution.

The logical completion of the process of amalgamation which has reduced the number of the major joint-stock banks to five would clearly be to merge them all in one and to give them some monopolistic privileges in return for converting themselve into a real public-utility corporation.

This is a delicate process and it may be unwise to force the pace, seeing that natural developments are tending to bring about much the same results without outside intervention.

Careful study is needed of the relations between planned industry and the stock exchange, the acceptance houses, the issuing houses, and other parts of our financial machinery. It may well be that with industry, agriculture, transport, etc., organized on the lines suggested, and with the adoption of the steps necessary to stabilize the purchasing power of money, the problems, which are in prospect somewhat terrifying, of bringing about a suitable reorganization of our financial institutions will be found largely to have solved themselves. For finance as the servant of industry can have no motive to do otherwise than adjust itself to the new needs.

LABOR

Little has been said hitherto on the subject of organized labor.

Clearly, labor must have effective representation and play an adequate part in the new statutory councils and public-utility corporations and in all the activities of the replanned nation.

The most difficult task will perhaps be to reconcile the trade unions to the remodeling of many of their existing regulations and to the change in outlook which conscious planning requires.

Stable money and the discarding of the doctrines of individualism and laissez faire will between them make obsolete many of the objectives and many of the issues which at present bulk largely in the minds of trade unionists. In planned industry the employee will take his true place more clearly than before as a partner in production.

The changes required in the organization of labor are obviously not such as can rightly be described as encroachment on freedom.

Difficult therefore as the right solution of the knotty problems which arise may prove, they need not detain us further in this examination of the relations of planning to freedom.

THE SOCIAL SERVICES

Nor need we pause here to examine what planning may mean in other parts of the structure of our economic life, education, health service, housing, provision for leisure.

Each of these subjects and others will need detailed investigation and the methods of organization adopted must be fitted into and form part of a complete whole with the new model for industry. It is high time that man should make effective use of biological knowledge to improve the human race and make himself more fit for his twentieth century responsibilities. In the health services and the province of medicine it is urgently necessary to shift the emphasis from cure to prevention, from negative to positive health, and this may well call for a big change in the organization of the medical profession, which has at present too often a vested interest in disease. But there is no reason for supposing that in order to deal with these various questions any new invasions of freedom will be called for which in degree or kind go further than what has already been contemplated in the industrial field.

IMPERIAL PLANNING

Many of the problems of national reconstruction extend into the imperial and international field. The United Kingdom by itself is far too small to provide an adequate economic unit for planning.

A planned economy for Britain implies as the next step a planned imperial economic family. Considerable interrelations imperial cooperation from the outset is essential, as a minimum, for success in certain directions.

The stabilization of the purchasing power of money calls for action not only in the Empire but also in such countries as Argentina and Scandinavia, which belongs to "sterlingaria", the area where British sterling is indisputably the international medium of exchange. Tariffs and agreements for industrial cooperation with other parts of the British Empire will have to be fitted into the framework of our national industrial system in order to make reasonably possible the successful functioning of such projected bodies as the steel industry council or the statutory cotton corporation. The subject matter with which these bodies will deal includes large questions of export trade, and is not, as in the case of the central electricity board, confined to the provision of services within our national boundaries.

INTERNATIONAL PLANNING

The interrelations of national planning and international problems are peculiarly difficult. An ideal national plan cannot be framed and brought into operation without complete international cooperation. Yet to wait till conditions are propitious for an intelligent international reorganization of our own and the world's economic life will not help us.

And with Russia and Italy embarked on plans which definitely override the claims of freedom, complete world-wide agreement is not within reach.

The better is the enemy of the good. Within the boundaries of the United Kingdom we have ample opportunities, if we set ourselves whole-heartedly to the task, to achieve that national reconstruction which is so sorely needed. Within the British Empire and even beyond it in countries whose economic ties with Britain are historically close and whose trade is complementary, we have reasonable prospects of securing fruitful results by political and economic cooperation.

We dissipate our strength and overstrain our resources if we attempt more before first putting our own house in order. It is not selfishness or aggressive nationalism or imperialism which puts a limit on our immediate sphere of action, but a sober estimate of our political and economic powers.

The goal of world-wide international cooperation must never be lost from sight, and advantage must be taken of every opportunity for bringing it nearer. The very fact that it extends planning across existing political boundaries is of special value. Nevertheless our first task is to replan Britain, with an economic organization that will fit harmoniously into the planned imperial economic family, and in so doing to give leadership and new hope to a distressed world.

Man's powers of large-scale organization and of harmonious cooperation will be further tested by the need for economic planning which transcends national boundaries and in due course demands world-wide cooperation. National and imperial and ultimately international political and economic practices and institutions will doubtless undergo profound modifications in adapting themselves to the twentieth century.

The constitutional development of the British Empire may indeed provide a model more suitable for adaptation to the needs of world cooperation than any at present in existence. The harmonious and free cooperation within a single system of a number of states enjoying sovereignty and independence as equal partners in a commonwealth of nations would appear to offer possibilities of extending itself indefinitely till it covers the whole world. Proof of the ability of the British commonwealth to provide its citizens with an economic organization that ministers effectually to their well-being will be the surest way of winning world-wide approval.

The only rival world political and economic system which puts forward a comparable claim is that of the Union of Soviet Republics.

If planning and freedom are to be reconciled, the solution must be found along the lines of the British approach.

PLANNING AND POLITICS

Effective planning on the economic side and even the introduction of desirable reforms in detail has become impossible without a drastic overhauling both of Parliament and the central government and of the machinery of local government. Political and economic planning are complementary and supplementary to each other and must be carefully interrelated. We need new economic and political institutions to match the new social adjustments which applied science has created and a new technique both in politics and in industry to enable us to find intelligent methods of surmounting new difficulties and complexities.

It has been suggested more than once in the course of this essay that devolution of powers to statutory bodies will be an important feature of the new order, and that in the result Parliament and the Cabinet will be relieved of some part of their present duties and set free to the great advantage of themselves and of the nation for their proper tasks of directing and guiding public policy.

Big consequent changes will follow in the machinery of government. The British constitution is, however, accustomed to changes of this sort. It is continually developing and adapting itself to new conditions. The further development now contemplated will be a natural evolution along lines consistent with British traditions.

Here, as elsewhere, vested interests will doubtless feel themselves challenged, and be inclined to resist. That is inevitable, but the essentials of constitutional freedom will remain unshaken. In some of its aspects the tariff advisory committee already suggests the nucleus of a national planning commission. In due course we shall perhaps be astonished not at the magnitude of the changes, but at their relative smallness.

PLANNING AND ECONOMIC FREEDOM

One further question remains to be touched upon before the summing up is reached.

Let it be granted, a well-disposed critic may say, that what you propose involves no fundamental attack on freedom; granted that your plan of reconstruction is not open to the charge of encroaching upon spiritual freedom, and, if successful, would provide a better material environment for the realization of humanity's higher aspirations; do you not run the risk of so trammeling and shackling man's economic freedom that the result will be less production not more, less enterprise and initiative, a drying up of the incentives to progress, and final loss not gain in material well-being?

One possible answer is, of course, to refer our critic to what was said at the outset as to the imminence of catastrophe if we continue to drift. We must regain control of the machinery of civilization if we and it are to survive.

Reluctance to embark on a doubtful adventure deserves a less negative treatment.

The dangers which our critic fears are real dangers. Red tape is not confined to Government departments. Our statutory corporations and public-utility boards may all too easily become unadventurous obstacles to progress, determined enemies to all new ideas.

It may be indeed that one of the lessons we have to learn from our present distresses is that scientific invention itself requires some planning in its application to the economic structure of the Nation.

The problem of progress is no longer the problem of getting enough change to prevent routine from deadening effort but the problem of preventing change from destroying both routine and all social stability.

This, however, is no justification of institutions which deaden effort.

Our proposals must rather be defended by the claim they will liberate the spirit of initiative and not deaden it, in that they will provide means by which the energetic man of business may escape from the disheartening frustrations and failures which are caused by the complexity of the machine, and will give him scope for serving his generation in a larger kingdom than the narrow field of competition with rivals in particular industrial or commercial pursuits.

Though organized on public-utility lines with monopolistic privileges, the great chartered industrial corporations will find ample room for energy and initiative in performing their primary task of combining maximum output with minimum costs of production. The executive heads of particular factories will not lack the spur of competition.

THE PROFIT-MAKING MOTIVE

It is no part of our plan to enshrine equalitarian doctrines or to eliminate from business life the desire to better oneself and the motive of personal reward. Subordination of the motive of profit to the motive of service does not imply that the motive of profit has no useful part to play even within a public-utility concern not working for profit. It is not absent in the B.B.C. nor in the central electricity board.

Nor is it suggested that public-utility concerns or bodies analogous in character should be set up to deal with any but the major "key" business activities of the nation.

For example, the specialized steel industries of Sheffield would not, unless by their special desire, find a place within the organization of the chartered steel corporation. They would be ancillary to it and would no doubt cooperate with it in suitable ways, but would remain independent.

In general, specialized production and skilled craftsmanship would continue to be the field of individualistic effort. So also would retail business.

Experience alone can prove the justice of our claim that economic freedom will not be fatally shackled by the effects of conscious forward planning. Experience, too, will be needed to make clear the boundaries of the province within which individualistic effort can best be relied upon to secure the highest national dividend.

But we do make the claim that national reconstruction along the lines indicated is not only urgent and essential to salvation, but is also rightly calculated to improve the economic environment of our national life.

A CONSERVATIVE EVOLUTION

Indeed, the Socialist or the Communist will condemn our planning as mere tinkering with the outworn machine of capitalism. To him it will appear as a hopelessly conservative and anemic attempt to stave off the red-blooded revolution which alone would satisfy him.

Our plan is, we claim, conservative in the truest and best sense. It is conservative, not destructive, and builds solidly upon the present and the past. It faces the issues boldly and is not afraid to challenge vested interests and deeply cherished habits of thought and action. It does not, however, propose to expropriate anyone, and, in requiring the application of compulsion in a limited sphere, it is not doing more than extend and make explicit and give systematic application to tendencies and practices already at work.

The purpose of this essay is not to put before the reader any complete or fully worked-out plan of national reconstruction. That can be done only in a series of separate essays, and even then much of the necessary details would have to be left out.

Such sketch in the broadest outline of the lines which reconstruction might take as has been given here must inevitably raise more questions in the mind of the attentive reader than it answers.

PLANNING FREEDOM

Our purpose has been to vindicate by reasoned presentation our faith that national reconstruction on the basis of conscious forward planning, besides being urgent and necessary, is compatible with the preservation of our freedom.

Vested interests, ingrained prejudices, traditions, customs, and points of view which have proved their value in the past are challenged by us to give way to the needs of the present. This generation is called upon to accept modifications in the structure of its economic life, which are profound enough to require an altogether new outlook on the content and meaning of economic freedom. The old spiritual values which belong to personal and political freedom are not challenged. They are accepted as absolute and in full. It is because they are accepted as absolute and because there is urgent need to safeguard them in the changed world of the twentieth century, that new methods of economic organization have to be devised.

Economic freedom must always be relative to its environment. Economic freedom demands that form of economic organization of civilized society which will provide men and women with the highest standards of material well-being attainable by the use of their powers of scientific production and cooperative endeavor, in order that the environment thus afforded may present the widest possible opportunities for the exercise of the human nature.

In the haphazard and disorganized economic structure of today men and women are balked alike of economic and spiritual freedom.

If by conscious forward planning they can escape present frustrations, they will rightly be judged to be more truly free.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this analysis is divided into two parts, and represents only a portion of the data I possess showing a well-organized plan for world control. It is given with a view of furnishing a synopsis or outline of a hellish conspiracy to enslave and dominate the free peoples of the earth. There are sufficient facts herein to give the key to the thoughtful student of our national affairs so that he may be on guard against the sinister and ambitious Cæsars in our midst.

I

FREEDOM AND PLANNING AS APPLIED TO THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT

This "political economic plan", as it is also called, was prepared under the direction of Israel Moses Sieff, an English Jew, the director of a chain-store enterprise in England called "Marks & Spencer." This enterprise declared a 40-percent dividend during 1933 and was enabled to do so by the fact that it had handled almost exclusively all imports from Soviet Russia, thus being able to undersell established British competitors.

The political economic plan group is a branch of the Fabian Society.

In this connection I wish to quote from a Paris publication, Revue Internationale des Sociétés Secrètes, under date of January 25, 1931:

On the 1st of November 1930, the Evening Standard, an English daily paper, contained the following lines:

"GOVERNMENT BY FABIANS

"Many Labor members are talking about the dominance in the Government of that very academic body, the Fabian Society. I find that many people believed that this organization, through which many intellectuals entered the Socialist movement, had ceased to exist. But it goes on with membership, small but influential—some 5,000.

"Yet practically every recent appointment, either to high or low office, in the Labor administration has been made from the membership of the society, the latest examples of which are the new Air Minister, Lord Amulree, and the new Solicitor General, Sir Stafford Cripps. I am told that at least 90 percent of the members of the Government are in the rolls of the society, and that, contrary to regulations, so are a good many highly placed civil servants.

"The civil servants would probably defend themselves by saying the society is more intellectual than political.

"This ascendancy is, of course, due to the all-powerful influence of Lord Passfield and his wife, Mrs. Sidney Webb, with whom the Fabian Society has been the passion of their lives."

What, therefore, is the Fabian Society, the members of which, according to the Evening Standard, govern England? The answer is given us by the society itself in the Basis of the Fabian Society, which is appended to every book and tract it issues, and it runs thus:

BASIS OF THE FABIAN SOCIETY

"The Fabian Society consists of Socialists.

"It therefore aims at the reorganization of society by the emancipation of land and industrial capital from individual ownership and the vesting of them in the community for the general benefit. In this way only can the natural and acquired advantages of the country be equitably shared by the whole people.

"The society accordingly works for the extinction of private property in land, with equitable consideration of established expectations, and due provision as to the tenure of the home and homestead; for the transfer to the community, by constitutional methods, of all such industries as can be conducted socially; and for the establishment, as the governing consideration in the regulation of production, distribution, and service of the common good instead of private profit.

"The society is a constituent of the Labor Party and of the International Socialist Congress, but it takes part freely in all constitutional movements, social, economic, and political, which can be guided toward its own objects. Its direct business is (a) the propaganda of socialism in its application to current problems; (b) investigation and discovery in social, industrial, political, and economic relations; (c) the working out of Socialist principles in legislation and administrative reconstruction; (d) the publication of the results of its investigations and their practical lessons.

"The society, believing in equal citizenship of men and women in the fullest sense, is open to persons irrespective of sex, race, or creed, who commit themselves to its aims and purposes as stated above and undertake to promote its work."

One cannot refrain from noticing the irony of the words: "By constitutional methods", contained in the above basis. Everyone knows that the Socialist-Bolshevists of Russia claim to have confiscated and expropriated "by constitutional means" which are in reality legalized theft.

The society took the name of Fabian from the policy of temporizing it adopted, claiming to imitate that of the Roman prodictator, Fabius Conctator, during his fight against Hannibal, whom he eventually defeated at Tarenta, 215 B.C.

Frank Podmore, well-known spiritualist and occultist, one of the founders of the Fabian Society, is quoted as saying to the earliest members: "For the right moment you must wait, as Fabius did most patiently, when warring against Hannibal, though many censured his delays; but when the time comes, you must strike hard, as Fabius did, or your waiting will be in vain and fruitless."

The Fabian Society waited 40 years, striking a continual series of covert blows at the political, economic, social, and religious structure of England, and in 1924 it came to power with the advent of the first Labor government, which can be called the offspring of the Fabian Society.

The period of waiting had been fruitful, if long.

There is no gainsaying that the Fabian Society has been first and foremost a gathering of intellectuals; it might be said of a rebellious intelligentsia, whose accomplishments seem the realization of Weishaupt's dream of Masonic illuminism, cleverly combined with Moses Mendelssohn's dream of Jewish illuminism (Haskalah).

Historically, it was founded in 1883 at the time when, in the realm of philosophy and metaphysics, the political economy of John Stuart Mill, in England, and the positivism of Auguste Comte in France had thrown perturbation in the minds of numerous thinkers and given abundant food to the free thinkers of the epoch. Henry George's book on socialism, Progress and Poverty, was in great vogue. The direct influence leading to the formation of the Fabian Society was, according to E. R. Pease, its historian, exercised by Thomas Davidson, the founder of the Fellowship of the New Life, which society culminated in the Ethical Society of Culture in New York. Considerable impulse was also given to the budding association by its assimilation of Robert Dale Owen's socialistic principles.

It may be of interest to the readers of the R.I.S.S. to remember the fact that among the earliest members of the Fabian Society who had participated in the Fellowship of New Life were freemasons and spiritualists, some becoming later affiliated with Madame Blavatsky's theosophy. The activities of Frank Podmore in both Masonry, occult and spiritual, and Fabian socialism are a study in themselves.

Among the intellectuals who joined the Fabian Society soon after its inception in 1884 was the Irishman, Bernard Shaw, who was elected a member that year.

At that time the Fabian Society had completely seceded from the Fellowship of the New Life and formulated its own socialistic program. The following year Sidney Webb, now Lord Passfield, Minister of the Colonies, and Sydney Olivier, now Lord Olivier, who has held several government appointments, were elected members of the Fabian Society. Soon afterward, Mrs. Annie Besant, the present head of the theosophical movement, also was elected a member.

Fabian socialism at the outset groped its way along all the beaten paths of the social revolutionists who had preceded them. It also made incursions into Babouvism, Marxism, Bakounist anarchism, and the then existing various social democratic groups. Being, however, mainly composed of intellectuals, bureaucrats, civil servants, journalists, etc., the Fabians, whose fundamental slogan was the righting of the wrongs of the working class, had no keen desire for riotous street manifestations, and confined their earliest activities to drawing-room meetings.

It does not enter within the limits of the present sketch to retrace the history of the Fabian Society, but the point which should be regarded as of great importance is that out of the drawing-room meetings alluded to above, there emerged the tactics, truly Fabian, of temporizing and the decision taken and followed of penetrating into or, as Bernard Shaw himself expressed it, "permeating" numerous existing societies with Fabian socialistic ideas and principles.

This method of penetrating into organizations, political and economic, and boring from within, gave in time remarkable results. Fabians, mainly civil servants, easily found their affinities in liberal circles, and, moreover, owing to their loudly proclaimed Socialistic profession of faith, obtained the confidence of the working classes. They were indeed sitting on both sides of the fence and recruiting the good will of both Liberal and Labor organizations.

The study of Fabianism is one of almost unparalleled opportunism. Fabians seemed to have formulated no original creed of their own, but were only animated by an unswerving resolve to get to the top and govern England. Consequently, they adjusted themselves to whatever was the creed or tenets of any camp they penetrated into, and by degrees converted its adherents to a turn of mind designed to procure the advancement of Fabian members in political, industrial, or educational lines, with the final result that they secured "key positions." To suit even anarchism, they formed a special Fabian branch which bore the name of Fabian Parliamentary League.

No field of exploitation seems to have been overlooked by these Socialist intellectual illuminati:

1. Politics: In politics, their range of activities has been well defined by one of its leaders, Bernard Shaw, in a paper he read at a conference in 1892, at Essex Hall. The policy of "permeation" of the Fabian Society was clearly outlined and much stress laid upon the enumeration of results already achieved. Within a year of this conference, in January 1893, the Independent Labor Party was formed by the grouping of the local Fabian societies then in existence. These groups under the leadership of Keir Hardie, Friedrich Engels (co-worker of Karl Marx) and Marx's daughter E. Aveling had accepted as their code Marxism thus summarized: "To establish a Socialist state where land and capital will be held by the community." On such principles was Russia transformed into Soviet Russia in 1917.

The author of the History of the Fabian Society does not fail to point it out as the parent society, emphasizing the fact that the Marxist Independent Labor Party was but its offspring. Thus, leading on the one hand Marxist Socialism, and having, on the other, so permeated the Liberal Party that they also practically ruled it, the Fabians were soon able to set about taking part in local elections, and proposing their own candidates for appointments on school boards, vestry, county councils, women's liberal federation, liberal and radical unions, etc. They spared no pains in pushing forward the autonomy of municipalities as well as the various schemes for national insurance, old-age pensions, tariff reform, employers' liabilities, workmen's compensation.

Politically also, through their offspring, the Independent Labor Party, they asserted their defeatist and antipatriotic tenets during the Boer War 1899–1902, when they expressed their wish "to see the Boers successful and the British Army driven into the sea."

By 1903 the Independent Labor Party, after 10 years of indefatigable efforts among the trade unionists, gave its parent, the Fabian Society, the opportunity and satisfaction of presenting England with a full fledged Labor Party. Up to that time, Fabian candidates had contested and won seats in Parliament as Liberals. The practice of the policy of interlocking directorates had never been better evidenced than by the tactics of Fabianism.

The outbreak of the war in 1914 furnished the illuminati of socialism with the opportunity of manifesting their antipatriotic feelings much more openly than they had done during the Boer War. It was then that their policy of interlocking directorates bore abundant fruit. What one might call the "melting" property of the Fabian Society became more evident, for as such it did not create a record of antipatriotism. That particular task was intrusted to its members of the Labor Party and the Independent Labor Party, who took a prominent part in the formation of the Union of Democratic Control, which counted the Zionist Jew, Israel Zangwill, among its leading bandmasters.

The shameful defeatist, pro-German activities of the present Prime Minister of England, Ramsay MacDonald, Fabian and Laborite during the World War, and the open support given to bolshevism by his Labor Party, have forever sullied the political honor of England and are a matter of history.

Yet another aspect of Fabianism is the great part it took in the formation and, later, direction of the League of Nations, which Bernard Shaw calls "an incipient international government." Fabians have even been known to revendicate it as one of their creations, but there, at any rate, they are guilty of overrating their powers, for to all readers of the protocols of the Wise Men of Zion it is known beyond the shadow of a doubt that the superstate is a Jewish creation. So far as we know, the Fabians have not laid any claims to the authorship of the famous protocols written even before the Fabian Society came into existence. Still it is comparatively easy to conjecture that, owing to their close connections with such a Sage of Zion as Israel Zangwill, they may have been led to adopt this deep-rooted idea of his coreligionists. In other words the permeating Fabian Society became in its turn permeated by Jews. However, so far it has consciously or unconsciously failed to acknowledge that it is nothing more nor less than a tool in the hands of Judeo-Masonry.

2. Economics: In the realm of the economic, industrial, and financial life of England the Fabian Society played no lesser a part than in politics. With its slogan of "progressive policy" it invaded agriculture, preaching the nationalization of land; in other words, the confiscation of landed property. (Note: At a lecture given before the Comité d'Études Nationales in Paris by a Fabian, Mr. Noel Buxton, in May 1928, a member of the audience put it clearly to the orator that the agrarian program of the Labor Party spelled nothing other than expropriation.) It took on, though subsequently dropped guild socialism, but carried much weight with trade-unionism and a kind of syndicalism.

The first blow to industry was struck in Lancashire in 1890, the stronghold of English industry, with the help of Mrs. A. Besant as chief spokesman and agitator. Later the cooperative movement was captured and Fabianized and subsequently delivered over to the Independent Labor Party and Labor Party. It is due to the Socialists having been so successful in conquering industry that during the World War sabotage assumed such appalling proportions in the munition factories in England.

As to the financial ideals of the Fabians, whose basic principle is the ruin of capitalism, they became realities when taxation of the people took undue proportions in the shape of income tax, supertax, death duties, which are to be capped by capital levy. The promised benefits to the working class to be derived from such schemes as the national health insurance and workmen's compensation and dole, old-age and widows' pensions, have proved a myth. Yet they have gone a long way toward furthering the plans exposed in the protocols which aim at reducing to bondage the "Goyim" rich and poor alike.

3. Education: In the matter of education the Fabian illuminati have followed a theory which is none other than that suggested by one of the souls of Bavarian illuminism, Nicolai, in the eighteenth century. Having secured posts in the school boards of the country, it became very easy for Fabian Socialists to instill their educational de-Christianized principles in the school curriculum. Their attack on religious teaching was subtle but deadly, as seen in the education bill of 1902. They boast openly of having in their ranks several Anglican bishops and divines, the list being headed by Bishop Headlam, one of the earliest Fabians. Eventually they won, having, as has always been their wont, resorted to intensive propaganda, generously distributing their tracts and leaflets.

Under Fabian educational schemes come the formation of the educational groups and of the nursery, the latter designed as a kind of training school for very young prospective Socialists. Women's groups were also formed, the members of which participated in all movements tending to a fuller feminist emancipation. But by far one of the most important steps taken by the Fabians along educational lines has been their inauguration in existing universities of University Socialist Societies, which in 1912 were finally grouped by Clifford Allen into the Universities Socialist Federation. Fertile seeds of Fabian socialism are also sown at the summer school organized annually by the society, which E. R. Pease rightly terms a "propagandist society." The culminating triumph of the Fabians in the realm of education was the creation of the London School of Economics and Political Science at the London University, where today one of the chief lectures is the Jew Socialist, Harold Laski, member of the executive committee of the Fabian Society and chairman of its publishing committee.

As was suggested already, and as can be seen from the succinct exposé here given, Fabianism left no field unexplored and unexploited. For 50 years it has treated England to doses of both pure and diluted Marxism, mostly diluted, as the English, by the very nature of their steady and conservative characteristics are not easily aroused to excesses as those perpetrated by the Paris Communards of 1871. But, on the other hand, they have been thoroughly permeated and their poisoning has been one of long process. It is true also to add that the war paved an easy way for the onward progress of socialism.

The young generations who had still been nurtured in the spirit of Christian tradition and family conservatism perished on the battlefields of France. Their virility would no doubt have constituted the barrier of opposition to this pernicious Fabianism. * * * As to the older generation that preceded that of the young martyrs falling in the name of patriotism and honor, they knew little and wanted to know still less, keen on believing that nothing could ever shake the security of England. How few among them wanted to understand the Protocols of the Wise Men of Zion, published in 1920, and fight the Christian fight to prevent the full accomplishment of the fateful Judeo-Masonic program therein contained. A limited effort was made by a group of Britons which in no time was permeated by emissaries of the powerful enemy and became sick unto death. * * * A noble and steadier effort made by a group publishing the Patriot, and spasmodic outbursts of righteousness made by the Morning Post, are all the resistance that England has been able to oppose to the devastating forces of Judeo-Masonic illuminism, that is, Fabian socialism.

The results are, to the naked eye, the history of England since the war, politically and economically.

Lloyd George's coalition government had been kind to socialism, but the real harvest time came when the Labor Party won the election in 1924 and its members governed or rather misgoverned England. It needed nothing short of the Bolshevist alliance which MacDonald wished to force upon the country to provoke the remaining sound reaction of the English people and prompt them to overthrow the Labor government. But this show of resistance was ephemeral.

How pitiful it is to know that the return of the Labor Party to power in May 1929 is entirely due to the incompetence of a conservative government, in which the people trusted for the sane administration of the affairs of state. Yet the Prime Minister, leader of the Conservative Party, Mr. Baldwin, could not claim ignorance of the Judeo-Masonic plans contained in the protocols of the Wise Men of Zion. He found it easier to deliberately disregard them. Be it as it may, England is once more in the hands of the Labor Party, with the inevitable and ubiquitous Ramsay MacDonald, and according to the latest report issued by the society, "8 Fabians are members of the Cabinet and 14 others hold offices in the Government without seats in the Cabinet."

Outside of England the Fabians are affiliated with strong Socialist groups professing the same ideas—in Copenhagen, in Canada and Australia, Japan, the United States of America, Spain, and Germany. It is our opinion that the Fabian Society is in close connection with the French Comité d'Études Nationales, which has already been mentioned to the readers of the R.I.S.S. and also with the Club du Faubourg, as well as with the Socialist Party headed by the Jew Leon Blum.

Less than 50 years of combined efforts, made by some intellectual and determined Jews and Masons, have cast over the world a dragnet in which all the nations of the world have been ensnared, and they are to be the prey of triumphant Jew.

Surely neither the fanatic illuminatus Nicolai nor his friend and master, the Jew Mendelssohn, ever conceived a better accomplishment of their ideals.

Yet, judging by the financial and economic situation of England at the close of 1930, the practical experiments of the Fabian-Socialist-Marxist theories of the illuminati governing the country have doomed it to irreparable ruin.

According to the Clarion, a Fabian weekly organ, still more disturbances are in store for the unhappy English nation. Its Parliament is to be "democratized" and one, or possibly two, "national assembles"—one for England, another for Scotland—will be created.

But, and here comes the anomaly which is nothing short of ludicrous, for Mrs. Sidney Webb, the author of the proposed Fabian plan, announces that the sovereign power will remain vested in the King, Lords, and Commons! * * *

Propaganda will once again come into play to sow disorder in the already much troubled minds and empty stomachs of a large number of English people. England as a whole refuses to believe that she is in the grip of bolshevism because she still sees the image of a throne, not realizing that this symbol of fallen royal power is kept by the Socialist for commercial purposes. It cannot be denied that without a court which panders to the futile snobism of American women, American dollars would not annually pour into England. Thus does the English throne which alone is left undisturbed and unshaken serve several purposes.

It hypnotizes the people into a false feeling of security, it is also an excellent commercial proposition, and, last but not least, let us remember that it is at the hands of a sovereign that titles are bestowed, and Jews and Fabians alike are eagerly seeking such dignities. Lord Melchett, Marquess of Reading, Lord Passfield, Lord Olivier * * * such is the ruling aristocracy of England. Without a king they would have remained Mond, Isaacs, Webb, Olivier, which emphasizes the need of at least one Socialist kingdom to serve the various ends of Judeo-Masonry which, outside of the lodges where titles are granted, wants to have its own aristocracy with sonorous titles.

As a last consideration, one fails to see why English economists and financiers express a too naive astonishment at France's policy of recalling from England all her gold resources. It needs no violent stretch of imagination to foresee that at any time such men as MacDonald, Snowden, Henderson, Webb-Passfield, and so forth, all of them Fabians, might decree the nationalization, confiscation, and expropriation by bolshevist constitutional methods of all public and private property.

Let us not forget that in conjunction with this eventuality, the insurance companies have already insured themselves against meeting any claims arising from the loss of insured property in cases of "confiscation by the State."

During 1931 this group of Fabians—among them Gerald Barry, I. Nicholson, and Kenneth Lindsay—used a newspaper at that time owned by Lord Beaverbrook and called "The Week End Review" as a vehicle for their ideas. It is understood that Beaverbrook, upon becoming familiar with their plans, disapproved; whereupon they left his paper and continued to publish their ideas in another on means furnished, according to my informant, by Mrs. Leonard Elmhirst, formerly Dorothy Willard Straight, nee Whitney, Sir Basil P. Blackett, governor of the Bank of England, became chairman of the group in 1931. From this time the organization was called the "political economic plan." Among other members were Israel Moses Sieff, Sir Henry Bunbury, Graeme Haldane, I. Hodges, Lady Reading, Daniel Neal, and H. V. Hodson. Monthly meetings were held, at which Mrs. Elmhirst was present. Finally the group split on international policy, and Sir Basil P. Blackett resigned and Israel Moses Sieff became chairman in July 1932. It is said that since becoming head of the group Sieff has spent £60,000 on the movement. In the fall of 1932 the following people joined the political economic plan: Sir Arthur Salter; Sir Oswald Moseley, the head of the new British Union of Fascists; Lord Eustace Percy; Lord Melchett, the son of the late Alfred Mond; and Sir Christopher Turnor.

The political economic plan organization is divided into many separate, well-organized, and well financed departments. For instance, town and country planning; industry; international relations; transport, controlled by Lord Ashfield; banking; social services, civic division, chairman, Ronald Davison; and an agricultural department, the head of which is Leonard Elmhirst, husband of the former Dorothy Willard Straight. Mrs. Elmhirst manages a school for agriculture on political economic plan lines at Dartington Hall, Totnes, Devonshire.

The document Freedom and Planning, heretofore inserted in the RECORD, is entirely secret and, to the best of my belief, has never before been published. However, the political economic plan has published broadsheets which in a rather veiled manner treat of some of the subjects dealt with in the secret document. These broadsheets are intended only for members and are almost impossible to procure. In a broadsheet dated April 25, 1933, they define their organization as follows:

A group of people who are actively engaged in production and distribution, in the social services, in town and country planning, in finance, in education, in research, in persuasion, and in various other key functions within the United Kingdom.

Emphasizing the secrecy of the organization on the last page of this broadsheet occurs the following paragraph:

You may use without acknowledgment anything which appears in this broadsheet on the understanding that the broadsheet and the group are not publicly mentioned, either in writing or otherwise. This strict condition of anonimity, upon which the broad-sheet goes to you, is essential in order that the group may prove effective as a nonpartisan organization making its contributions outside the field of personal or party polemics.

Perhaps the first and only publicity the organization has had was in the Daily Herald April 28, 1933, which published an article referring to a private dinner given at the Savoy by the political economic plan on March 29 at which the chairman, Israel Moses Sieff, and the secretary, Kenneth Lindsay, made speeches. The caption in the Daily Herald was "Mystery Group Out to Re-Plan British Industry; P.E.P. at Work on New 'Control.'"

The political economic plan group members hold the meetings in a private room of the House of Commons. One of the first meetings was held on October 31, 1932, with the cognizance of Prime Minister MacDonald. Among those present were Malcolm MacDonald, son of the Prime Minister, J. H. Thomas, Sir Ernest Bennet, Lord Delawarr, Israel Moses Sieff, and Kenneth Lindsay, the secretary of the political economic plan.

The plan is already in operation in the British Government by means of the tariff advisory board, which in many of its powers is somewhat comparable to the National Recovery Administration in the United States.

This group organization has gathered all data and statistics obtained by governmental and private organization in administrative, industrial, social, educational, agricultural, and other circles; and Army, Navy, and airport statistics are in their hands as well as those of the law and medical professions. This has been made possible from the fact that the Prime Minister, Ramsay MacDonald, being a Fabian, the political economic plan Fabian group has had all archives at its disposal.

Through the tariff advisory board, created in February 1933, and headed by Sir George May, the control over industry and trade is being firmly established. This board works in direct connection with the treasury and with it devises the tariff policy. It has also been granted the powers of a law court and can exact under oath that all information concerning industry and trade be given it.

Iron and steel, as also cotton industrials in England, have been ordered by the tariff advisory board to prepare and submit plans for the reorganization of their industries and warned that should they fail to do so a plan for complete reconstruction would be imposed upon them. The tariff advisory board has been granted default powers and can, therefore, impose its plan.

The committee of the tariff advisory board is composed of Sir George May, Sydney Chapman, professor of economics and a statistician, and Sir George Allan Powell, of the food board and food council.

An interesting bit of information has come to me in this connection to the effect that this Fabian group has close connections with the foreign-policy association in New York City. This foreign policy association was largely sponsored by the late Paul M. Warburg and has received the close attention and support of Bernard M. Baruch and Felix M. Frankfurter.

Many serious people in England feel that this Fabian organization practically controls the British Government and that this Government will soon be known as "His Majesty's Soviet Government." It is asserted that both Prime Minister MacDonald and his son belong to the organization and that the movement is well organized and well financed and intends to practically sovietize the English-speaking race.

About 3 months after the passage of the National Recovery Act of the United States, when Israel Moses Sieff was urged by members of his committee to show more activity, he said:

Let us go slowly for a while and wait until we see how our plan carries out in America.

II

THE PLAN IN THE UNITED STATES

During the past several months Bernard M. Baruch, Felix Frankfurter, and the New York Jewish lawyer, Samuel T. Untermyer, have made several visits to Europe and spent considerable time there. There is justification for the belief that they have contacted with members of the British Fabian group and are familiar with their plans. The same system, in a somewhat adapted form, has been placed upon the statute books in the United States, and the iron hand of world control is fast being closed upon American agriculture, labor, and industry. The people in the United States have been propagandized into the belief that the National Industrial Recovery Act is a product of the political genius of Franklin Delano Roosevelt. There is no greater popular fallacy. The National Industrial Recovery Act was formulated before Franklin Delano Roosevelt had any well-defined ideas as to its existence, and it is doubtful that even now he appreciates its significance. It required 15 years of hard effort on the part of Mr. Baruch and his associates to foist this act upon the American people, and it was only through the sufferings over a period of great stress that he was enabled to do it. Baruch himself stated before the War Policies Commission in reference to the genesis of this act, "For 13 years I have been coming down and working with my associates in the War Department * * *." It might be stated that practically every year since the war Baruch has been going to the Army War College and giving our future generals lectures along these lines. However, these addresses are clothed in secrecy and we do not know just what he says. During the spring of 1931, in appearing before the War Policies Commission, Mr. Baruch stated, in part:

* * * Our industry must, at last analysis, mobilize itself. What is required is leadership of a type that will persuade cooperation in every branch. This leadership must be backed by sanctions of far greater force than can or ought to be used in peace. It is a spontaneous sort of function, utterly inappropriate to any imaginable form of bureaucratic organization.

As I have said, I do not favor an involved statute attempting to anticipate the requirements of another war.

I think plans should be made and revised yearly. I think some steps should be taken to keep selected industrial leaders informed of these plans so that when the principal actors in the 1918 mobilization pass from the scene there will be a nucleus of personnel to take their places. I do not believe that we can go further.

But, for a very special reason, I do believe that there should be one statute on the books the very existence of which would be a constant warning to everybody that never again in America will any man make as much profit in war as he can make in peace. There need be nothing complex nor involved about it. Purely for purposes of discussion I have prepared a rough draft, eliminating enacting clauses and formalities. It follows:

"That whenever Congress shall declare war or the existence of an emergency due to the imminence of war, then from and after a date prior to such declaration, which date the President is hereby authorized and directed to determine and announce, it shall be unlawful for any person to buy, sell, or otherwise contract for any service, right, or thing at a higher rate, rent, price, wage, commission, or reward than was in effect at the date so determined.

"Whenever, in the sole discretion of the President, he shall determine that any maximum price, wage, rent, rate, commission, or reward should be adjusted either upward or downward, he is hereby authorized to make and proclaim such adjustment; and such adjustment shall have the full force and effect under this statute of such price, wage, rent, rate, commission, or reward before such adjustment.

"During the period of any war or emergency declared by Congress thereunder the President is authorized to determine, and by proclamation announce, what classes of public service, or of dealers or manufactures of any article or commodity shall be required to operate under licenses, to fix a condition of such licenses, and to grant licenses under such conditions. After such determination by the President it shall be unlawful for any public service, dealer, or manufacturer in such determined classes to engage in business without such license.

"During the period of any war or emergency declared by Congress hereunder, the President is authorized to determine the order of priority in which any manufacturer, dealer, or public service in the United States shall fill customers' or other orders and after such determination it shall be unlawful for any such manufacturer, dealer, or public service to fill such order in any other order of priority."

So much for the bill he proposed, but bear in mind he was emphatic that it should be used only in the event of war or an emergency caused by the imminence of war. He further stated:

Nobody with any familiarity with industry could seriously urge a wholesale assumption by any Federal bureau of the responsibility for management of any or all of the vast conjuries of manufacturing establishments upon which we must rely for extraordinary effort in event of war. Even if such bureau management could prove adequate to the task (which it could never do), the mere process of change would destroy efficiency at the outset.

The industrial pattern of the United States is a delicate mesh of interrelated strands. It has been evolved in response to the needs of the Nation and under natural economic law but dimly understood. It is a sensitive living organism, and the injection of arbitrary and artificial interference could be attempted only at the risk of starting a sequence of upheavals, the ends of which no man can see. * * *

Baruch also presented to the War Policies Commission a draft of a proposed act regarding price fixing, and stated:

General Johnson, who was instrumental in drawing up the selective-service legislation, as it was submitted to Congress during the war, and who wrote the selective-service regulations, assisted in preparing this draft. * * *

Johnson, as well as Herbert Bayard Swope, was present with Baruch during these hearings, and they appeared to be his lieutenants, Johnson especially acting in the capacity of an assistant.

General Johnson in the last few months has become well known to the American public, and there can be little doubt that his first allegiance is to Bernard M. Baruch, with whom he has been associated so long.

We find in the activities of General Johnson, in the promulgation of codes upon the industry of the United States and in the activities of that other "brain truster", Prof. Rexford Tugwell, in promoting agriculture codes and controlled agricultural industry of the Nation, the very same machinery in operation as was proposed in Freedom and Planning.

However, Baruch, Johnson, Tugwell, Frankfurter, et al. seem to be more brazen in their efforts in this country. Frankfurter has been furnishing most of the legal brains for the outfit, and it is said that no legal position of any consequence can be secured by any lawyer in the present administration without it has first had the approval of Frankfurter. And it is a startling fact, in connection with this, that most of the legal advisers, especially in key positions, are Jews. Felix Frankfurter's adept student and protégé, Jerome N. Frank, general counsel of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, delivered an address before the Association of American Law Schools, thirty-first annual meeting, at Chicago, December 30, 1933, on Experimental Jurisprudence and the New Deal. A reading of this address shows the contempt of the Frankfurter lawyers for the Constitution of the land and an expressed determination to obviate and avoid constitutional barriers in their administration of the Nation's affairs. Those in charge of the plan and its administration in the United States have for years considered methods for accomplishing their ends without regard to the Constitution of the United States. They recognize the fact that the National Industrial Recovery Act did not give them all of the power they desired in order to break down the barriers enacted in our Constitution preserving certain rights to the various States of the Union, as well as other features. Therefore, in the promulgation of the various codes affecting industry and agriculture throughout the country they have sought to compel, browbeat, and bulldoze the business interests of this country to engage in private contract so that they would have the power to require the business interests of the Nation to do their wishes regardless of the Constitution. The new-deal lawyers now have no hesitancy in appearing in court and asserting that private citizens can contract away their constitutional rights. It has been through this method that they have broken down State lines and invaded the most private affairs of our citizens. It will be through this method, for instance, that the little retailer of the country will be driven out of business and chain-store-system control by them put into operation, just as they are attempting in England.

There is no better illustration of this group of international would-be Caesars to control the industry and agricultural interests of this Nation than that demonstrated in the methods they have employed to try to coerce and compel the Ford Motor Co. to sign the automobile manufacturers' code. It should be borne in mind that even General Johnson himself has had to admit to the Comptroller General of the United States that he has no evidence of code or law violation on the part of the Ford Motor Co. It should also be borne in mind that the little Jewish Assistant Attorney General, Cahffetz, who appeared in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for the Government in recent cases brought therein by a Ford dealer, admitted to the court that he had no evidence of law violation. Therefore a question of whether or not the Ford Motor Co. has violated the law or the codes is not raised. It is admitted by the Government that they have not. Then why all this stir to prevent the purchase by the Government of Ford products? There are two outstanding reasons: One is that the Ford Motor Co. represents the last stronghold of independent industry in this Nation, hence it must be destroyed. It interferes with their plans. Next, so long as the Ford Motor Co. refuses to sign any code and thus engage in private contract which would give the administration power over and beyond the law it is still free at any time it chooses to attack the constitutionality of these extraordinary measures. Frankfurter lawyers contend that one who has signed the code has waived his rights to make any such attack. Therefore the power of Government will be used to bludgeon and compel, if it can, this last stronghold of independent industry to come within the fold so that it will be safe from attack in this quarter.

The American people may feel exceedingly grateful that someone has shown some degree of patriotic sanity in this respect, and the Ford Motor Co. has a great many of the smaller business enterprises of the Nation with them in their stand.

We not only see the hurried and frenzied regimentation of industry and agriculture in this Nation by means of codes, but we are also witnessing a most spectacular engagement by Government in the private loan field. Billions of dollars are being used to take over debts and pledge the property of industry, farmers, and home owners. This paves the way for the day near at hand when Government corporations will begin to take over and operate industrial enterprises and land and home organizations. We are on the threshold of a modern and Machiavellian feudal system devised and controlled by a group of international usurpers.

It might be well to observe that those who for 15 years have planned this specific legislation which is now operating to take over and control the most intimate affairs of our national life must have foreseen the conditions under which they could make such a plan possible. Therefore, it is reasonable to assume that they had some direct part in bringing about the conditions which make it possible to place the "plan" in operation. There has not been an administration since our advent into the great World War in which Bernard M. Baruch has not been a chief political, economic, and financial adviser, and every administration that has listened to him has carried us deeper and deeper into financial chaos, and today we are operating on his greatest experiment—a planned economy and industrial and agricultural control. The juggernaut has been built and it is being moved on its cumbersome wheels. It is only a matter of time until it will give its lurch and roll upon and crush those who have built it.

Immediately following the World War, Bernard M. Baruch appeared before a select congressional committee and there testified to the fact that he virtually had complete control of the resources of the American Nation during the war. The colloquy with Congressman Jeffries is in part as follows:

Mr. JEFFRIES. In other words you determined what anybody could have?

Mr. BARUCH. Exactly; there is no question about that. I assumed that responsibility, sir, and that final determination rested with me.

Mr. JEFFRIES. What?

Mr. BARUCH. That final determination, as the President said, rested within me; the determination of whether the Army or Navy should have it rested with me; the determination of whether the Railroad Administration could have it, or the Allies, or whether General Allenby should have locomotives, or whether they should be used in Russia, or used in France.

Mr. JEFFRIES. You had considerable power?

Mr. BARUCH. Indeed I did, sir.

Mr. JEFFRIES. And all those different lines, really, ultimately centered in you, so far as power was concerned?

Mr. BARUCH. Yes, sir; it did. I probably had more power than perhaps any other man did in the war; doubtless that is true.

It is quite safe to assume today that now in coalition with Frankfurter, Brandeis, Moley, Tugwell, Johnson, Berle, and others of the American group, Mr. Baruch exercises more power than any man in the United States, if not in the world. It is a nice little camouflage for him to talk about getting out of Wall Street and writing the story of his struggling youth. We might as well look for the stream to run up the mountain.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

GEORGE A. CARDEN AND ANDERSON T. HERD

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago on the Private Calendar, in consideration of Calendar No. 583, H.R. 8482, a bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on certain claims of George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd, I offered a committee amendment. I was not advised at that time that the Senate bill included the committee amendment.

I ask unanimous consent to vacate the committee amendment because it was already included in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LLOYD]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of business on the Speaker's table, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the majority leader what is the program for tomorrow. Will this interfere with his program?

Mr. BYRNS. I intended, when the House meets tomorrow, to renew my request for unanimous consent to consider the Private Calendar. I would do so now, but I believe we will all be in better humor tomorrow, and perhaps the request may be granted. If that is denied, then it would be proposed to go ahead with suspensions and rules, and possibly conference reports. A conference report has just been filed, and there has also been a conference report filed on the communications bill. Those conference reports may come up at any time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If the gentleman's request is granted, we will only consider bills on the Private Calendar and whatever conference reports may come in?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. My request would go to this extent—of course, that could be refused, but if it were granted, we will take up the Private Calendar. I really believe the time has come when we ought to consider some Senate bills and pass those Senate bills on the Private Calendar. If the Members will look at the RECORD, they will find that the Senate passed a great many of the House bills on yesterday. I think we ought to pass Senate bills first and then consider House bills.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman make his request now?

Mr. BYRNS. There is a request pending.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have no objection to the pending request.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Is the gentleman going to ask unanimous consent to consider the Private Calendar on tomorrow?

Mr. BYRNS. I am going to ask that tomorrow.

Mr. TRUAX. You will ask it for tomorrow?

Mr. BYRNS. I will ask it tomorrow. I am simply serving notice now that I will make that request as soon as the House meets tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Perhaps the gentleman could do it now.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Did the gentleman say it was the intention to give preference to Senate bills that have been passed?

Mr. BYRNS. I am going to make that request. I think that is what we ought to do. I think we ought to take up the Senate bills first, and then if we get through with those, we can take up the House bills; but, in any event, I am going to ask that the Private Calendar be called tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER] that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of business on the Speaker's table, he may address the House for 10 minutes?

There was no objection.

FARMING THE FOUNDATION OF CIVILIZATION

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD concerning the decentralization of industrial population by subsistence homestead projects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, it is trite to say that the farm is the foundation of all civilization. This truth nearly everybody will admit, but few are willing to admit its economic significance. Out of the ground all things of value must proceed. Not only things to eat and wear, but mineral products of all sorts, clay products, timber, and in fact all animal life is but one step up from the ground, and but a step back into the ground.

Mr. Speaker, it was a great conception of President Roosevelt to lay emphasis upon this fundamental thought by insisting upon wise experimentation in the matter of subsistence homesteads. These small farms are intended merely to decentralize the industrial population and to enable the families to produce fruits and vegetables, milk, and some meat for family use only, and not for the market so as to become competitors of commercial farmers. Those living upon these subsistence homesteads will labor in various factories at least a part of the time so as to raise the cash to pay for clothing and a part of their food, and for such pleasures and cultural agencies and instrumentalities as musical instruments, radios, books, and similar comforts, conveniences, and uplifting diversions.

The frontier of America has reached the Pacific and the backing-up process is beginning to show itself on the Atlantic coast. It is upon this eastern side of the continent that the worn, barren, marginal lands are to be found. The Democratic administration is showing the way to the recovery of these worn-out lands, just as it showed the way a generation ago to the conservation and reclamation of the barren desert lands of the West. Consequently we have programs of reforestation, of soil-erosion control, of drainage, of conservation of water power for rural electrification, to enable those living on the farms to lighten the toil and to enjoy more of the improvements of modern civilization.

Mr. Speaker, the program of the Democratic Party includes a great conception for the blessing and benefit of humanity. Its basis is the Bible, its exemplification is the philosophy and teaching and example of Jesus Christ, its partial fruition is the Declaration of Independence and even popular government itself. This program of the Democratic Party rises above partisan considerations; it is not a mere matter of office holding and pork-barrel politics, but it smacks of the spirit of the missionary. It exists to serve and bless mankind, it takes little children into its arms, it preaches the gospel of service to the poor, it holds out hope for the lowly and humble, it gives promise that America will still lead the world, as it has ever done, in pointing the way to a freer, purer, more just, and more ethical economic system.

Mr. Speaker, I have always believed in these things that I have been mentioning, but that belief was hazy and more of a hope than a creed. It is true that upon my own farm I have long been experimenting in soil building, erosion control, and diversification. It is true that I have preached from one end of our State to the other the necessity that farmers should first of all produce upon their farms the things that their families and tenants and their stock must eat. It is true that I have sought to show the benefits of establishing farm marketing centers for canning fruits and vegetables, for converting milk into butter, cream, and cheese, for preserving and curing meats, and for assembling and shipping all forms of poultry, including eggs. It is true that I have pointed to the advantages of small farms near our centers of population. I have personally helped and encouraged many families to acquire such homes. But to find now that the force of the Federal Government is to be thrown back of a Nation-wide movement to make farm life more desirable and more profitable is one of the most joyful realizations of this whole Roosevelt regime.

Mr. Speaker, as an illustration of the interest I have long felt in such matters, I have been offering prizes in good country high schols in different parts of my district, the prizes being always books, for farmers who made the greatest progress in soil building, and for high-school pupils that wrote the best essays on various phases of farm life. Therefore, I am offering some extracts from the prize-winning essay by Miss Martha Roberts in the Mountain View High School of O'Neal Township in Greenville County. I wish that my colleagues could see this school in action. It is the center of community life. It is more than a mere place for children to learn the three R's; it is a place where grown men and women often assemble, and by exchange of experiences and ideals, all under the leadership of wonderful teachers, the whole community is advancing in every way. I am proud to report that there are many such country high schools in the Fourth Congressional District, and I do not intend to reflect upon any by calling special attention to the wonderful progress made in the Mountain View School and among the people living in that neighborhood. I hope that at another session I may have the great pleasure of calling attention to some of these other schools and of complimenting some of the winners of the contests which I have encouraged and stimulated.

Here follow brief extracts from the wonderful essay of Miss Martha Roberts.

THE ADVANTAGES OF FARM LIFE

Surely no place offers such great opportunities for life at its best as the farm. In this day of rural electrification, good roads, wide-awake churches and schools, the farm is an excellent place for good moral, physical, and mental development, and these are the most important forces of life. * * *

Farm life presents a natural environment of God's handiwork. No one who lives on the farm can fail to feel a closer communion with God, or fail to recognize a Supreme Being as one deals with plants day after day. Wild plant life, as well as the cultivated plant life, causes us to agree with the poet, who when asked why a certain beautiful wild flower grew in such a secluded spot, answered by saying:

"Why thou wert there, oh rival of the rose!
I never thought to ask, I never knew;
But, in my simple ignorance, suppose
The self-same power that brought me here brought you."

The close contact with outdoor life plays an important part in our moral growth, but church life is necessary too. Improved highways, automobiles, and centrally located churches make it possible for any one of us on the farm to enjoy and take an active part in religious activities. * * *

When we compare the physical ability of farmers with that of men who do indoor work, we can easily see that the farm offers unusual advantages for physical development. Work on the farm calls for a great deal of outdoor exercise. * * *

Good strong, healthy bodies are impossible without a sufficient amount of fresh, nutritious foods. On the farm fresh meats, vegetables, milk, eggs, butter, etc., can be had throughout the entire year. And with canning materials we can easily preserve our surplus foods so as to have a well-balanced diet throughout the year without much extra expense. Few cases of pellagra and other diseases, due to a faulty diet, are found among farmers, because they can have a supply of fresh foods at all times.

The mental side of life need not be neglected on the farm. Each of us can receive a high-school education without added expense, and with the foundation we thus receive, we can continue to improve and inform our minds. * * *

Thanks to the R.F.D.'s, we on the farms can receive daily papers and our magazines just about as quickly as people in cities and towns. Therefore, we can be familiar with and well informed on the topics of the day. Many rural sections have also the advantage of a Sunday paper. By means of the radio we in the country have the advantages of theaters, noted speakers and preachers, and musical concerts. Also the radio makes it possible for us to keep up with current events, market quotations, weather forecasts, and all other important things. * * *

In many rural sections we have the advantages of a public library. * * *

In view of the many advantages of the farm we understand how farm life has played an important part in producing many of the great characters of the past and also of the present.

(Miss) MARTHA ROBERTS.

Mr. Speaker, the message from President Roosevelt received by the Congress yesterday inspires us all with a vision of better and brighter days for the American people. This should certainly be true of the Piedmont section of South Carolina. We already have many interests which do interlock in bringing about better conditions for our people. But we need a more diversified industry and a more diversified agriculture. The more people there are engaged in manufacturing, not only cotton but various other products and especially in the manufacture of many kinds of commodities and utilities from cotton and from cotton cloth, the better the markets for all forms of farm products. In like manner the farmers will be induced to diversify their products and not only to produce cotton but to produce all the things on the farm that the people on the farm need to eat, and also the food for stock and cattle, with a surplus of fruits and vegetables, milk and cream, and meat for sale to the nearby industrial populations, and also for shipping to the distant markets of the North.

In order to help bring about these promising features of development, we need cheaper power. There are still parts of our streams on which power can be developed, and if we organize a power-distributing company in South Carolina for the Piedmont section, it will be possible to bring power over the mountains from the cheap sources of the Tennessee Valley Authority. That corporation can, and if we desired would, develop power nearer to Greenville than the Cove Creek Dam near Knoxville. There is abundant power in the French Broad River. The Tennessee Valley Authority has been cooperating splendidly with the power companies in the Tennessee River Basin by either buying out the existing transmission lines or by staying out of the territory already served by private power companies. That can easily be worked out in Piedmont, S.C. While the Duke Power Co. and its various subsidiaries offer power to every industry or enterprise that we may develop; yet, in my humble judgment, compared with power rates in other parts of the country and power rates prevailing in Canada, Norway, Sweden, and Italy the rates of the Duke Power Co. are too high. I believe in being fair to every person, firm, and corporation, and I certainly would be fair to the innocent stockholders, but the first consideration is the people who must have power in order to operate industries, and if the rates are so high as to either discourage industries or prevent their being expanded, then it is time to look about for a cheaper source of power.

If the Piedmont section of South Carolina will organize and cooperate for the development of all of our wonderful resources, we can within a generation be the richest part of the world. We have a climate unmatched anywhere. With the purest water and a naturally fertile soil, with all facilities of transportation, with local markets and every prospect of finding markets in the great cities of the North for all of our fruits and vegetables, milk products, and meats, I can see the mortgages being lifted from our farms, I can see better farm homes and farm outbuildings rising all over that section, I can see new industries of many kinds springing up in every neighborhood, and soon our whole section from side to side will reflect in a prosperous people the benevolent policies conceived in the heart of President Roosevelt.

These words from the message of President Roosevelt on June 8, 1934, seem especially appropriate to our situation:

Among our objectives I place the security of the men, women, and children of the Nation first.

This security for the individual and for the family concerns itself primarily with three factors. People want decent homes to live in; they want to locate them where they can engage in productive work; and they want some safeguard against misfortunes which cannot be wholly eliminated in this man-made world of ours.

In a simple and primitive civilization homes were to be had for the building. The bounties of nature in a new land provided crude but adequate food and shelter. When land failed our ancestors moved on to better land. It was always possible to push back the frontier, but the frontier has now disappeared. Our task involves the making of a better living out of the lands that we have.

So also security was attained in the earlier days through the interdependence of members of families upon each other and of the families within a small community upon each other. The complexities of great communities and of organized industry make less real these simple means of security. Therefore, we are compelled to employ the active interest of the Nation as a whole through government in order to encourage a greater security for each individual who composes it.

With the full cooperation of the Congress we have already made a serious attack upon the problem of housing in our great cities. Millions of dollars have been appropriated for housing projects by Federal and local authorities, often with the generous assistance of private owners. The task thus begun must be pursued for many years to come. There is ample private money for sound housing projects; and the Congress, in a measure now before you, can stimulate the lending of money for the modernization of existing homes and the building of new homes. In pursuing this policy we are working toward the ultimate objective of making it possible for American families to live as Americans should.

In regard to the second factor, economic circumstances and the forces of nature themselves dictate the need of constant thought as to the means by which a wise government may help the necessary readjustment of the population. We cannot fail to act when hundreds of thousands of families live where there is no reasonable prospect of a living in the years to come. This is especially a national problem. Unlike most of the leading nations of the world, we have so far failed to create a national policy for the development of our land and water resources and for their better use by those people who cannot make a living in their present positions. Only thus can we permanently eliminate many millions of people from the relief rolls on which their names are now found.

The extent of the usefulness of our great natural inheritance of land and water depends on our mastery of it. We are now so organized that science and invention have given us the means of more extensive and effective attacks upon the problems of nature than ever before. We have learned to utilize water power, to reclaim deserts, to re-create forests, and to redirect the flow of population. Until recently we have proceeded almost at random, making many mistakes.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES—RECIPROCAL TAXATION OF GOVERNMENTAL SECURITIES PROHIBITED BY CONSTITUTION

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, it is well settled that the Federal Government is without power to levy a tax upon bonds or other obligations of States and municipalities, and conversely that such States and municipalities may not tax the obligations of the United States. In the case of Collector v. Day (11 Wall. 127), the Supreme Court of the United States, in referring to this inhibition, said:

> It is admitted that there is not express provision in the Constitution that prohibits the general Government from taxing the means and instrumentalities of the States, nor is there any prohibiting the States from taxing the means and instrumentalities of that Government. In both cases the exemption rests upon necessary implication, and is upheld by the great law of self-preservation; as any government, whose means employed in conducting its operations, if subject to the control of another and distinct government, can exist only at the mercy of that government.

When the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution was adopted, there was some question whether under its provisions giving Congress the power to "lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration", the Federal Government had thereby been given the power to tax income from State and municipal bonds. Governor Charles Evans Hughes, of New York, in submitting the amendment to the legislature of his State, opposed its ratification because he considered that the phrase "from whatever source derived" gave Congress this power.

However, the sponsors of the amendment in Congress contended that the language was intended only to give to Congress the power to levy a tax upon incomes without the necessity of apportioning the tax according to population, and that it did not extend the objects of taxation. It was pointed out that Congress already had the power to tax incomes, but that as a tax on incomes had been held to be a direct tax, it must, under the terms of the Constitution, be apportioned among the States. This requirement of apportionment, it was said, was the difficulty sought to be avoided by the amendment.

The first income tax law enacted subsequent to the ratification of the sixteenth amendment was under the Tariff Act of 1913. By the terms of the law, income from State and municipal securities was specifically exempted. During the consideration of the bill in the House of Representatives, Representative Cordell Hull, who has often been called the "father of the Federal income tax", explained that the reason the Ways and Means Committee had recommended the exemption of such income was that the friends of the sixteenth amendment did not desire to raise any constitutional question, nor to arouse the antagonism of any State.

All Federal income-tax laws since 1913 have consistently exempted from the tax all income from the obligations of States, Territories, possessions, and their respective subdivisions. Whether such income would be exempt under general constitutional considerations, without such specific exemption, is still a moot question. So far as the Congress itself is concerned, the weight of opinion seems to be that a further constitutional amendment would be necessary to permit the taxation of such income. Since Congress has always exempted the income from State and municipal securities from taxation, the power of Congress to tax such income under the sixteenth amendment has never been directly presented to the Supreme Court for judicial determination. However, in numerous dicta, the Court has taken the position that the amendment did not extend the taxing power to new or excepted objects (Brushaber v. Union Pacific R.R., 241 U.S. 1; Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245).

THE HOLMES VIEW OF THE EFFECT OF THE SIXTEENTH AMENDMENT

It is interesting to note that while the Supreme Court has intimated that it would hold unconstitutional the taxation by the Federal Government of income from State and municipal securities notwithstanding the sixteenth amendment, this view has by no means been concurred in by all of the justices. Thus, in Evans v. Gore (supra), Mr. Justice Holmes (Mr. Justice Brandeis concurring), stated his understanding of the sixteenth amendment as follows:

By that amendment Congress is given the power to "collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived." It is true that it goes on "without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration", and this shows the particular difficulty that led to it. But the only cause of that difficulty was an attempt to trace income to its source, and it seems to me that the amendment was intended to put an end to the cause and not merely to obviate a single result.

Under this view, Congress would have the power, without further amendment of the Constitution, to levy a tax upon income from State and municipal securities. Whether, on the direct question being presented to it, the Supreme Court would adopt the view of Mr. Justice Holmes, it is, of course, impossible to say.

As the possibility of the Court overruling its previous dicta is purely conjectural, it may be well to consider the only other means of giving to Congress the power to tax obligations issued by the States and municipalities. This, of course, is by further amendment of the Constitution.

VOLUNTARY EXEMPTION OF OWN SECURITIES BY FEDERAL, STATE, AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

It should perhaps be stated that while the Federal Government does not appear to have the power to tax the income from State and municipal obligations, it does have the power to tax income from its own obligations. However, in order that the securities issued by the Federal Government will not have to compete with tax-free State and municipal securities on the market, Congress usually provides either whole or partial tax exemption for its own issues. For a like reason, the States and municipalities exempt their own issues from their respective taxes.

ARGUMENTS PRO AND CON

There has been much popular controversy over whether all governmental securities should be tax free. The chief arguments in favor of the proposition are as follows:

First. Governments can thus borrow funds for public purposes at lower rates of interest than if the securities were taxable.

Second. The holders of tax-free securities do not in effect escape taxation, but pay it in the form of accepting a lower interest rate.

Third. The exemption of interest from obligations of the State and municipal governments from Federal taxation, and the exemption of the interest from Federal obligations from State and municipal taxation, is necessary in order to preserve and safeguard the dual sovereignty system established by the Constitution.

On the other hand, those opposing tax-free securities contend that—

First. The exemption from taxes is not adequately reflected in the price for which the securities are usually sold.

Second. High taxes divert savings from ordinary productive industry to tax-exempt securities.

Third. Private enterprises are not able to borrow money on their own obligations except at high rates of interest, due to the necessary competition with tax-free Government issues.

Fourth. The ease with which governments can borrow money through tax-free securities encourages extravagance.

AMOUNT OF TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES OUTSTANDING

According to the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1932, it is estimated that there were outstanding, on December 31, 1931, some twenty-two and a half billion dollars worth of Federal, State, and municipal securities the interest from which was wholly exempt from Federal income tax, and in addition some twelve billions of Federal securities the interest from which was exempt from the normal tax but not the surtax. This makes a total of thirty-four and a half billions of dollars in Government securities, Federal, State, and local, which on December 31, 1931, were either wholly or partially exempt from Federal income tax. Of the issues which were wholly exempt, those of the States and municipalities amounted to some $15,583,000,000; those of the Territories and possessions to $153,000,000; those of the Federal Government to some $5,000,000,000; and those of the Federal farm-loan system to nearly $1,800,000,000. Of course, the amount of tax-exempt securities outstanding at the present time is considerably more than it was at the date above mentioned. It has been estimated by some that these securities now aggregate in the neighborhood of $42,000,000,000.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY GLASS URGED REFORM IN 1919

In his annual report for the fiscal year 1919, the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. CARTER GLASS, called attention to the fact that high surtaxes tend to draw private capital from industry into investment in tax-free State and municipal securities, upon terms so easy to the States and municipalities "as to stimulate wasteful and nonproductive expenditure." He suggested that Congress amend the revenue law so as to require that, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of surtax payable by a taxpayer, his income from State and municipal bonds be reported and included in his total income, and the portion of his income which is subject to taxation be taxed at the rates specified in respect to a total income of such amount. In support of his proposal he said:

It is intolerable that taxpayers should be allowed by purchase of tax-exempt securities not only to obtain exemption with respect to the income derived therefrom but to reduce the supertaxes upon their other income, and to have the supertaxes upon their other income determined upon the assumption, contrary to fact, that they are not in possession of income derived from State and municipal bonds.

While admitting that a question had been raised concerning the right of the Federal Government, under the Constitution, to tax the income from State and municipal bonds, he nevertheless stated that there could be no doubt of the constitutionality of such an administrative provision. In this connection, however, reference should be made to a recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in which this question was directly presented (National Life Ins. Co. v. U.S., 277 U.S. 508). In the National Life Insurance Co. case, the collector of internal revenue, acting pursuant to the statute, required the company to subtract from the deduction allowed on account of reserves the amount of tax-free interest allowed as a separate deduction. On this point the Supreme Court said:

Thus he—the collector—required the petitioner to pay more upon his taxable income than could have been demanded had this been derived solely from taxable securities. If permitted, this would destroy the guaranteed exemption. One may not be subjected to greater burdens upon his taxable property solely because he owns some that is free.

Thus, it would appear that the proposal submitted by the Secretary, while an ingenious one, would not be upheld by the Supreme Court.

In 1920 the United States Chamber of Commerce took an interest in the matter of tax-free securities, and after a referendum vote of its members recommended against any further issues. The National Tax Association, just prior to that time, had condemned further exemptions by reason of the source of incomes.

VIEWS OF SECRETARY OF TREASURY MELLON

Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, shortly after assuming office in 1921, wrote to the Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee under date of April 30, stating that "the continued issue of tax-exempt securities encourages the growth of public indebtedness and tends to divert capital from productive enterprise." In the same letter he further stated that "the existence of this mass of tax-exempt securities constitutes an economic evil of the first magnitude." Three days later a joint resolution was introduced in the House proposing a constitutional amendment making governmental security issues reciprocally taxable.

Speaking of the effect of tax-exempt securities upon the Federal income tax, Secretary Mellon, in a letter to the author of the joint resolution, dated September 23, 1921, said:

> The issue of tax-exempt securities has a direct tendency to make the graduated Federal surtaxes ineffective and nonproductive, because it enables taxpayers subject to surtaxes to reduce the amount of their taxable income by investing it in such securities; and at the same time the result is that a very large class of capital investments escape their just share of taxation.

In the same letter the Secretary justified the exemption by the Federal Government of its own securities from Federal income tax in the following language:

> Of course, the voluntary withdrawal of the tax exemptions from securities to be issued by or under the authority of the Federal Government would require no constitutional amendment, but to do this as to Federal securities alone would unjustly discriminate against the National Government and leave a clear field for the State and local governments.

HEARINGS ON PROPOSED AMENDMENT

In January 1922 public hearings were begun by the Ways and Means Committee on a number of resolutions pending before it which proposed to amend the Constitution so as to permit reciprocal taxation of governmental securities. Practically every witness appearing before the committee opposed any further tax-exempt issues. Among the national organizations represented at the hearing as favoring the proposed amendment were the following: The National Tax Association, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the Farm Mortgage Bankers Association, the National Association of Real Estate Boards, the American Mining Congress, the Peoples' Reconstruction League.

Speaking in behalf of the joint committee on taxation of the New York Legislature, Prof. E. R. A. Seligman, a recognized authority on taxation, gave an extended and carefully prepared argument in support of the proposal. He pointed out that it had often been contended that the issuance of tax-free securities could be defended because the public secured the advantage in the transaction, and went on to say that this was not the case; that it was the lender and not the borrower who secured the chief benefit. Professor Seligman warned that the issuance of tax-exempt securities was increasing so fast that it was rapidly narrowing the tax base, and argued that the continuance of this system might seriously endanger the Federal revenues.

In addition to other witnesses, Secretary of the Treasury Mellon personally appeared before the committee in support of the proposed amendment. President Harding had previously advocated the measure in a message to Congress on December 6, 1921.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT REPORTED TO HOUSE

On May 3, 1922, the Committee on Ways and Means reported to the House a joint resolution proposing the amendment of the Constitution to permit reciprocal taxation of future issues of Federal, State, and municipal securities. Outstanding issues were not to be affected, since good faith and the obligation of contract would prevent any attempt to reach them.

In its report accompanying the presentation of the proposed amendment to the House the committee gave the following reasons for abolishing the system of tax-free securities.

First. A large portion of property escapes taxation thereby, causing a great loss of revenue.

Second. It violates the ability principle of taxation and unfairly discriminates between taxpayers.

Third. It impedes private financing.

Fourth. It discourages investment in new enterprises.

Fifth. It encourages extravagance in governmental agencies.

Sixth. It grants a private subsidy to certain interests.

Seventh. By withdrawing money from private enterprises it increases the rate of interest required for all enterprises not carried on by the Government, and thereby adds to the cost of living.

Eighth. It creates social unrest; and the only practical remedy is by constitutional amendment.

HOUSE PASSES RESOLUTION—SENATE FAILS TO ACT

The House passed the joint resolution on January 23, 1923. In the Senate the bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee and hearings were begun a short time later. Other than to hold hearings, however, no action was taken on the measure.

Although the Senate did not act upon the resolution, it did adopt a resolution of its own directing the Federal Trade Commission, among other things, to investigate the facts relative to tax-exempt income from governmental securities. The Commission's report on the subject was transmitted to the Senate on June 6, 1924, and was ordered printed as a public document (S.Doc. No. 148, 68th Cong.).

RESOLUTION FAILS TO PASS HOUSE IN SUCCEEDING CONGRESS

In the Sixty-eighth Congress, the proposed amendment was again introduced, and on January 11, 1924, it was reported to the House, after being debated on February 7 and 8, it failed of passage by reason of lacking the necessary two-thirds majority, the vote being ayes 247, nays 133. In the debate, those Members who were especially interested in the success of the Federal farm-loan system and in municipal enterprises dependent upon bond issues emphasized the importance of these enterprises and made much of their dependence on tax-exempt issues. Opponents of the measure also attacked the motives of farm-mortgage bankers and public-service corporations in advocating the amendment.

LATER DEVELOPMENTS

Although in each succeeding Congress joint resolutions have been introduced by individual Members proposing an amendment to the Constitution in respect of tax-exempt securities, none of them have been reported out of committee. However, the Treasury Department has continued to recommend that such an amendment be adopted. In addressing the Ways and Means Committee in connection with the drafting of the Revenue Act of 1926, Secretary Mellon, on October 19, 1925, said:

> Looking at the proposition logically, there is no reason for the existence of tax-exempt securities. There ought to be no refuge to which the wealthy man can go and avoid income taxes at times when the Federal Government needs the money. A constitutional amendment to make these securities taxable should be passed. The Treasury has consistently been the advocate of such reform.

The following statement is contained in the annual report of the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1927:

> Taking the long-time view of the situation, I believe that the enactment of such a constitutional amendment is desirable, for I consider it inconsistent with our principles of democratic government that our laws be so framed as to permit any class of our citizens to escape their just obligations.

Again, in his annual report for 1930, the Secretary of the Treasury called the attention of Congress to the fact that the Department had previously "earnestly recommended the adoption of a constitutional amendment permitting the Federal and State Governments, respectively, to tax securities to be issued in the future."

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Saturday, June 9, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H.R. 7340) to authorize the Post Office Department to hold contractors or carriers transporting the mails by air or water on routes extending beyond the borders of the United States responsible in damages for the loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery, depredations upon, or other mistreatment of mail matter due to fault or negligence of the contractor or carrier, or an agent or employee thereof.

The message also announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills and joint resolutions of the Senate:

S. 1173. An act for the relief of Gladding, McBean & Co.;

S. 2130. An act to authorize an appropriation for the purchase of land in Wyoming for use as rifle ranges for the Army of the United States;

S. 2674. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes", approved May 12, 1933;

S. 2898. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on certain claims of George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd against the United States;

S. 3040. An act to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to make and publish rules in actions at law;

S. 3237. An act to repeal certain provisions of the act of March 4, 1933, and to reenact sections 4 and 5 of the act of March 2, 1929;

S. 3521. An act to facilitate purchases of forest lands under the act approved March 1, 1911;

S.J.Res. 93. Joint resolution authorizing the creation of a Federal Memorial Commission to consider and formulate plans for the construction, on the western bank of the Mississippi River, at or near the site of old St. Louis, Mo., of a permanent memorial to the men who made possible the territorial expansion of the United States, particularly President Thomas Jefferson and his aids, Livingston and Monroe, who negotiated the Louisiana Purchase, and to the great explorers, Lewis and Clark, and the hardy hunters, trappers, frontiersmen, and pioneers and others who contributed to the territorial expansion and development of the United States of America; and

S.J.Res. 100. Joint resolution authorizing suitable memorials in honor of James Wilson and Seaman A. Knapp.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 3230. An act creating the Florence Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Florence, Nebr.; and

S. 3443. An act to provide for the creation of the Pioneer National Monument in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 870. An act for the relief of L. R. Smith; and

S. 2138. An act for the relief of Charles J. Webb Sons Co., Inc.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 9476. An act to empower certain members of the Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice to make arrests in certain cases, and for other purposes;

H.R. 9721. An act authorizing the Spencer County Bridge Commission, of Spencer County, Ind., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River between Rockport, Ind., and Owensboro, Ky.;

H.J.Res. 342. Joint resolution authorizing an appropriation to defray the expense of erecting the completed Navy and Marine Memorial Monument; and

H.J.Res. 349. Joint resolution designating or naming a certain mountain in the State of Tennessee "Mount Roosevelt", and for other purposes.

PAYMENTS OF JUDGMENTS AND CLAIMS AND SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate six communications from the President of the United States, together with accompanying letters and related papers from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, transmitting, pursuant to law, the following matters, which, with the accompanying papers, were severally referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

An estimate of appropriation submitted by the Treasury Department to pay a claim for damages to privately owned property in the sum of $102.26, which was considered and adjusted under the provisions of law, and requiring an appropriation for its payment (S.Doc. No. 203);

Record of claim allowed by the General Accounting Office as shown by certificate of settlement forwarded to the Treasury Department, covering a judgment rendered by the District Court against the former collector of customs, port of New York, where certificates of probable cause has been issued, as provided by law, amounting to $360.55 (S.Doc. No. 207);

Schedules of claims amounting to $15,231.88 allowed by the General Accounting Office, as covered by certificates of settlement which have been submitted to the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of law (S.Doc. No. 205);

List of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, which have been submitted by the Attorney General through the Secretary of the Treasury and requiring an appropriation for their payment under the War Department, $24,535.14 (S.Doc. No. 206);

Supplemental estimates of appropriations under the Department of Commerce, for the fiscal year 1935, amounting to $47,210 (S.Doc. No. 208); and Supplemental estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1934, in the sum of $6,406.53, and for the fiscal year 1935, in the sum of $325,720, amounting in all to $332,126.53, and draft of a proposed provision pertaining to an existing appropriation for the Department of State (S.Doc. No. 204).

REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the operations of the Corporation for the first quarter of 1934, and for the period from its organization on February 2, 1932, to March 31, 1934, inclusive, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting copy of a resolution adopted by the Provincial Board of Cagayan, Philippine Islands, expressing its thanks and gratitude for the enactment of Public Law No. 127, Seventy-third Congress, an act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from Daniel Ford, chairman, Membership Meeting of the Workers ex-Service Men's League, Post No. 165, New York City, N.Y., praying for the prompt passage of House bill no. 1, the so-called "veterans' bonus bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the board of directors of the San Antonio (Tex.) Manufacturers' Association, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 2926) to equalize the bargaining power of employers and employees, to encourage the amicable settlement of disputes between employers and employees, to create a National Labor Board, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from W. E. Phipps, commissioner of education; J. W. Kuykendall, executive secretary of the Arkansas Education Association; and H. F. Dial, president of Education Association, dated at Little Rock, Ark., praying for the making of an appropriation of $75,000,000 for school purposes in the pending first deficiency and emergency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3660) to grant to the city of Monterey, Calif., an easement for street purposes over certain portions of the military reservation at Monterey, Calif., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1347) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 8728) authorizing the Secretary of War to lease or to sell certain lands and buildings, known as "Camp Eagle Pass, Tex.", to the city of Eagle Pass, Tex., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1366) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3742. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Board of Public Works of the State of Vermont to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Lake Champlain at or near West Swanton, Vt. (Rept. No. 1368); and

H.R. 9571. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Essex County, in the State of Massachusetts, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Merrimack River, in the city of Lawrence, Mass. (Rept. No. 1369).

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 124) authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation with respect to agricultural income and the financial and economic condition of agricultural producers generally, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1348) thereon.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 5122) for the relief of William S. Steward, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1349) thereon.

Mr. COOLIDGE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 3705) for the relief of Julia E. Smith, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1350) thereon.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3482. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claim of Squaw Island Freight Terminal Co., Inc., of Buffalo, N.Y., against the United States, in respect of loss of property occasioned by the breaking of a Government dike on Squaw Island (Rept. No. 1370);

H.R. 3793. An act for the relief of Anthony Hogue (Rept. No. 1351);

H.R. 4387. An act for the relief of Mary A. Rockwell (Rept. No. 1352);

H.R. 6284. An act for the relief of John R. Novak (Rept. No. 1353);

H.R. 6366. An act making appropriation to restore water of high mineral content on land owned and controlled by the Federal Government (Rept. No. 1354);

H.R. 6625. An act for the relief of Charles Farr (Rept. No. 1355); and

H.R. 7163. An act for the relief of the D. F. Tyler Corporation and the Norfolk Dredging Co. (Rept. No. 1356).

Mr. BAILEY also, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H.R. 3636. An act for the relief of Thelma Lucy Rounds (Rept. No. 1357); and

H.R. 8035. An act for the relief of James M. Pace (Rept. No. 1358).

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H.R. 740. An act for the relief of Wade Dean (Rept. No. 1359);

H.R. 1133. An act for the relief of Silas B. Lawrence (Rept. No. 1360);

H.R. 3176. An act for the relief of Ernest Elmore Hall (Rept. No. 1361);

H.R. 4659. An act for the relief of Carleton-Mace Engineering Corporation (Rept. No. 1364).

Mr. LOGAN also, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 987) for the relief of Sard S. Reed, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1365) thereon.

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 8108) for the relief of Jeannette Weir, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1371) thereon.

HEIGHT OF HUDSON RIVER BRIDGE, NEW YORK CITY

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, to which was recommitted the bill (S. 3553) to provide for the creation of a commission to examine into and report the clear height above the water of the bridge authorized to be constructed over the Hudson River from Fifty-seventh Street, New York City, to New Jersey, I report it back favorably with amendments and submit a report (No. 1367) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments of the Committee on Commerce were, on page 1, line 6, after the word "five", to strike out "disinterested expert engineers" and insert "members"; on the same page, line 9, after the word "Commission", to strike out "and 2 from civil life" and insert "1 from the Bureau of Navigation, Department of Commerce, and 1 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation"; on page 2, line 18, after the word "operation", to insert a comma and "and also taking into consideration modern methods of lowering and telescoping masts on ships passing under bridges", and in line 24, after the word "commission", to strike out:

The time for commencing actual work on the bridge shall be extended 5 years from date of such approval.

The compensation and expenses of said commission shall be fixed by the Secretary of War and paid by the said bridge company, which shall deposit with the Secretary of War a sum not exceeding $5,000 for such purpose.

And insert:

Necessary travel, subsistence, and clerical expense, not exceeding $1,000, shall be allowed the members of the commission, and the sum of $1,000 is hereby appropriated for such purpose, to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury on vouchers signed by the member of the commission appointed from the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established a commission to be known as the "Hudson River Bridge Commission" (hereinafter in this act referred to as the "commission") and to be composed of 5 members, to be appointed by the President, 1 from the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, 1 from the United States Navy, 1 from the Interstate Commerce Commission, 1 from the Bureau of Navigation, Department of Commerce, and 1 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Said commission hereby established shall meet from time to time after appointment and examine the subject of clear height above the water of the superstructure of the bridge which the North River Bridge Co. is authorized to build over the Hudson River under act of Congress (ch. 669, 1889–90, 51st Cong., and Public Act No. 350, 67th Cong.) with a view to determine scientifically from information in the files of the War Department and from any additional information and facts which the commission may obtain, such height as it shall deem necessary for security of navigation of the largest ocean ships under the bridge, located at Fifty-seventh Street, New York, and at the same time permit the low grade necessary for the most economical operation of railroad trains over the bridge and approaches thereto for the purpose of facilitating interstate commerce thereover, taking into consideration modern progress in ship and railroad construction and operation, and also taking into consideration modern methods of lowering and telescoping masts on ships passing under bridges.

This commission shall report its finding within 60 days, after appointment of the members thereof, with reasons therefor, to the Secretary of War, who is thereupon authorized and directed to approve within 10 days after receipt of such report the clear height of the bridge above the water recommended by the commission.

Necessary travel, subsistence, and clerical expense, not exceeding $1,000, shall be allowed the members of the commission, and the sum of $1,000 is hereby appropriated for such purpose, to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury on vouchers signed by the member of the commission appointed from the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3773) authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to pay certain war-risk insurance policies to the beneficiaries thereunder; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. DAVIS (for Mr. REED):

A bill (S. 3774) for the relief of Thomas Regis Cushing (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. HAYDEN:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 138) to amend an act entitled "An act to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 169, 73d Cong.), approved April 21, 1934; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H.R. 9476. An act to empower certain members of the Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice to make arrests in certain cases, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H.R. 9721. An act authorizing the Spencer County Bridge Commission, of Spencer County, Ind., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River between Rockport, Ind., and Owensboro, Ky.; to the Committee on Commerce.

H.J.Res. 342. Joint resolution authorizing an appropriation to defray the expense of erecting the completed Navy and Marine Memorial Monument; to the Committee on the Library.

H.J.Res. 349. Joint resolution designating or naming a certain mountain in the State of Tennessee "Mount Roosevelt", and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

AMENDMENTS TO EMERGENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 9830, the first deficiency and emergency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 73, line 2 (in the item for public buildings, under the heading "Procurement Division, Public Works Branch"), before the word "rental" to insert "all necessary improvements to make such land and buildings available for the purposes intended;".

Mr. LOGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 9830, the first deciency and emergency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 63, after line 24, to insert the following proviso: Provided, however, That no funds appropriated by this title shall be loaned, granted, or donated, either directly or indirectly, to any commission, board, or instrumentality created by Congress or other public authority, for the sole purpose of bringing into being or carrying into execution, any self-liquidating project, unless the obligations of such commission, board, or other instrumentality shall be guaranteed as to payment of interest and principal by a State, county, municipality, or a political subdivision of a State, county, or municipality, or unless such obligations are otherwise adequately secured; and the income from such self-liquidating projects shall not be accepted as adequate; and this proviso shall apply to any appropriation heretofore made and unexpended for like purposes as those mentioned in title II of this act.

CENTENNIAL OF INDEPENDENCE OF THE REPUBLIC OF TEXAS

Mr. CONNALLY submitted the following concurrent resolution (S.Con.Res. 21), which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be composed of 3 Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and 3 Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to inquire into and report to Congress to what extent, if any, the Federal Government should participate in the Centennial of the Independence of the Republic of Texas, to be held in the State of Texas in the year 1936.

The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid, one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

REGULATION OF COMMUNICATIONS BY WIRE OR RADIO—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (S. 3285) to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communications by wire or radio, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3285) to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communications by wire or radio, and for other purposes.

(For conference report, see RECORD of House proceedings, p. 10969.)

Mr. DILL. I move that the report be agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Washington, whether in the agreement which has been reached there is any provision which will restrict the authority and power of the District of Columbia in handling and exercising jurisdiction over public utilities.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I think nothing in this bill would seriously restrict in any way, unless it might be in connection with the exchanges of the city which run out into the States. We have attempted in the bill to avoid even that restriction. I think the occasion for the suggestion being made to the Senator is that in the House amendment there was a provision, in the form of a definition, which would have given the commission control of the telephone and telegraph rates in the District of Columbia, but the House receded on that provision; so that, so far as we can know, we believe the power of the District of Columbia will not be interfered with.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to be assured of that fact, because I could not support the conference report if I believed that within the pages of the bill and within the report there were provisions which would restrict the District of Columbia, through its government, through Congress, in exercising full and proper authority over the public utilities within the District. That is a matter belonging exclusively to the District of Columbia, and I would not be willing to impinge upon that authority, and if the bill should do so, I should oppose the report.

Mr. DILL. I think I can assure the Senator that it does not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

JOHN P. LEONARD; WILLIAM G. BURRESS, DECEASED; PAUL JELNA—CONFERENCE REPORTS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair may lay before the Senate several conference reports submitted by me on yesterday, which are now on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following conference reports, which were read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 541) for the relief of John P. Leonard having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

MORRIS SHEPPARD,
M. M. LOGAN,
ROBERT D. CAREY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

LISTER HILL,
E. W. GOSS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2439) for the relief of William G. Burress, deceased, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

MORRIS SHEPPARD,
M. M. LOGAN,
ROBERT D. CAREY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

LISTER HILL,
E. W. GOSS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3032) for the relief of Paul Jelna having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

MORRIS SHEPPARD,
M. M. LOGAN,
ROBERT D. CAREY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

LISTER HILL,
E. W. GOSS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the Senate consider severally and agree to the reports.

The reports were severally agreed to.

NOMINATION OF REXFORD G. TUGWELL

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in the course of my remarks yesterday I referred to a letter which I had written to Dr. Tugwell with respect to an interview with him, published in a Washington newspaper, in which I asked him as to the accuracy of that interview. So that the record may be complete, I will state that the question I propounded to him was whether he was correctly quoted when he said that certain amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act now pending in the Senate—

> Will permit us to continue what we have already been doing. If we should get a set-back in court we would have to stop doing certain things under present circumstances.

At the conclusion of my remarks the distinguished Democratic leader of the Senate made the announcement that a reply had been made by Dr. Tugwell to my letter, and that the reply was in the mails. I received the reply this morning, and I desire to have it incorporated in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D.C., June 8, 1934.

Hon. HARRY F. BYRD,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BYRD: In reply to your letter of June 1, I would like to state what I said at the press conference on May 31 in somewhat more precise manner than it was reported by the Washington Herald on the following day in the quotation to which you refer.

Under the general marketing agreement and licensing powers already in the Agricultural Adjustment Act we have worked out marketing agreements which are benefiting producers of fluid milk, rice, peanuts, tree fruits, oranges, tobacco, and many other products. The progress of these operations is always subject to attack in the courts, and there have been several occasions when they were delayed for considerable periods pending the outcome of the court decisions. The orange-control work was the one to date which has been most seriously held up. The decisions of the courts, when finally obtained, have been generally favorable in all cases so far, so that it appears that what we are doing is in conformity with the policy laid down by Congress as set forth by the law and is so generally understood by the courts. If, however, Congress were to definitely spell out the powers under the act, as suggested in the amendments already proposed, that would give farmers still greater confidence in the successful carrying through of the operations which we have already undertaken, and of securing marketing agreements which might be placed into effect in the future at the request of the producers concerned.

It was with that idea in mind that I stated at the press conference that we regarded the amendments not as widening our powers, but rather as clarifying what the act already authorized us to do. It was also in that connection that I stated that certain of the amendments simply permitted us to do what we are already doing.

Obviously, our power to control the distribution and marketing to prevent overproduction, such as is now being undertaken with respect to citrus crops, canned peaches, and many other products, would be limited if we were prevented by court action from carrying them through. Inasmuch as these marketing agreements have materially increased the income of the farmers concerned, it would seem that such a result would certainly be contrary to the general policy which the administration is following for farm relief, and which was so clearly set forth in the general statement of principles of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Sincerely yours,

R. G. TUGWELL, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. BYRD. I shall make no reference at this time to the reply of Dr. Tugwell, except to say that in this letter he confirms, in substance, the accuracy of the interview. I call particular attention to one sentence in the letter, as follows:

> It was also in that connection that I stated that certain of the amendments simply permitted us to do what we are already doing.

Mr. President, this issue is now clearly presented to the Senate of the United States. We have before us the question of the confirmation of the nomination of Dr. Tugwell. We have his written statement that he has already exceeded the authority given him by law and is asking from Congress additional legislation to validate illegal acts already performed by his Department.

I repeat now what I said in my remarks yesterday: That I shall never join in a vote of confidence by confirming the nomination of any official of this Government who has so little regard for the Constitution of the United States as to usurp authority which belongs to Congress and to substitute himself for the Congress.

RENEWAL TERM INSURANCE—SUPREME COURT DECISION

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, when the Economy Act of 1933 was under consideration in the Senate and when it was under consideration in the Finance Committee prior to its report of that measure to the Senate, I took occasion to call attention to the fact that the clause in the Economy Act which undertook to deprive the holders of renewal term insurance, was in my judgment, unconstitutional and would be so held by the courts.

Monday of this week the Supreme Court of the United States, in two cases, passed squarely upon the question. Inasmuch as some thirty-odd thousand cases which were then pending in the courts and which, of course, as a result of that legislation, were dismissed—at least the greater number of them—and some twenty-odd thousand claims which had not gone into the courts may be affected by the decision, I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD at this point the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Brandeis in the cases named therein.

There being no objection, the opinion was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

(Nos. 855 and 861—October term, 1933)

MARGARET SHEA LYNCH, PETITIONER, v. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. ON CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

SAM WILNER, PETITIONER, v. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. ON CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT

(June 4, 1934)

Mr. Justice Brandeis delivered the opinion of the Court.

These cases, which are here on certiorari, present for decision the same question. In each, the plaintiff is the beneficiary under a policy for yearly renewable term insurance issued during the World War pursuant to the War Risk Insurance Act of October 6, 1917, chapter 105, article IV, sections 400–405. The actions were brought in April 1933 in Federal district courts to recover amounts alleged to be due. In each case it is alleged that the insured had, before September 1, 1919, and while the policy was in force, been totally and permanently disabled; that he was entitled to compensation sufficient to pay the premiums on the policy until it matured by death; that no compensation had ever been paid; that the claim for payment was presented by the beneficiary after the death of the insured; that payment was refused; and that thereby the disagreement arose which the law makes a condition precedent to the right to bring suit. In no. 855, which comes here from the fifth circuit, the insured died November 27, 1924. In no. 861, which comes here from the seventh circuit, the insured died May 15, 1929.

In each case the United States demurred to the petition on the ground that the court was without jurisdiction to entertain the suit, because the consent of the United States to be sued had been withdrawn by the act of March 20, 1933 (ch. 3, 48 Stat. 9), commonly called the "Economy Act."

The plaintiffs duly claimed that the act deprived them of property without due process of law in violation of the fifth amendment. The district courts overruled the objection, sustained the demurrers, and dismissed the complaints. Their judgments were affirmed by the circuit courts of appeals (67 F. (2d) 490; 68 F. (2d) 442). The only question requiring serious consideration relates to the construction and effect to be given to the clause of section 17 of the Economy Act upon which the Government relies; for the character and incidents of war-risk insurance and the applicable rules of constitutional law have been settled by decisions of this Court. The clause in question is:

"* * * all laws granting or pertaining to yearly renewable term insurance are hereby repealed * * *."

First: War-risk insurance policies are contracts of the United States. As consideration for the Government's obligation, the insured paid prescribed monthly premiums (White v. United States, 270 U.S. 175, 180). True, these contracts, unlike others, were not entered into by the United States for a business purpose. The policies granted insurance against death or total disability without medical examination, at net premium rates based on the American Experience Table of Mortality and 3½-percent interest, the United States bearing both the whole expense of administration and the excess mortality and disability cost resulting from the hazards of war. In order to effect a benevolent purpose heavy burdens were assumed by the Government. But the policies, although not entered into for gain, are legal obligations of the same dignity as other contracts of the United States and possess the same legal incidents.

War-risk insurance, while resembling in benevolent purpose pensions, compensation allowances, hospital and other privileges accorded to former members of the Army and Navy or their dependents, differs from them fundamentally in legal incidents. Pensions, compensation allowances, and privileges are gratuities. They involve no agreement of parties; and the grant of them creates no vested right. The benefits conferred by gratuities may be redistributed or withdrawn at any time in the discretion of Congress (United States v. Teller, 107 U.S. 64, 68; Frisbie v. United States, 157 U.S. 160, 166; United States v. Cook, 257 U.S. 523, 527). On the other hand, war-risk policies, being contracts, are property and create vested rights. The terms of these contracts are to be found in part in the policy, in part in the statutes under which they are issued and the regulations promulgated thereunder.

In order to promote efficiency in administration and justice in the distribution of war-risk insurance benefits, the administration was given power to prescribe the form of policies and to make regulations. The form prescribed provided that the policy should be subject to all amendments to the original act, to all regulations then in force or thereafter adopted. Within certain limits of application this form was deemed authorized by the act (United States v. White, 270 U.S. 175, 180), and, as held in that case, one whose vested rights were not thereby disturbed could not complain of subsequent legislation affecting the terms of the policy. Such legislation has been frequent. Moreover, from time to time, privileges granted were voluntarily enlarged and new ones were given by the Government. But no power to curtail the amount of the benefits which Congress contracted to pay was reserved to Congress; and none could be given by any regulation promulgated by the administrator. Prior to the Economy Act, no attempt was made to lessen the obligation of the Government. Then, Congress, by a clause of 13 words included in a very long section dealing with gratuities, repealed "all laws granting or pertaining to yearly renewable term insurance." The repeal, if valid, abrogated outstanding contracts and relieved the United States from all liability on the contracts without making compensation to the beneficiaries.

Second. The fifth amendment commands that property be not taken without making just compensation. Valid contracts are property, whether the obligor be a private individual, a municipality, a State, or the United States. Rights against the United States arising out of a contract with it are protected by the fifth amendment (United States v. Central Pacific R. Co., 118 U.S. 235, 238; United States v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., 256 U.S. 51, 64, 67.) When the United States enters into contract relations its rights and duties therein are governed generally by the law applicable to contracts between private individuals. That the contracts of war-risk insurance were valid when made is not questioned. As Congress had the power to authorize the Bureau of War Risks Insurance to issue them, the due-process clause prohibits the United States from annulling them, unless, indeed, the action taken falls within the Federal police power or some other paramount power.

The Solicitor General does not suggest, either in brief or argument, that there were supervening conditions which authorized Congress to abrogate these contracts in the exercise of the police or any other power. The title of the act of March 20, 1933, repels any such suggestion. Although popularly known as the "Economy Act", it is entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States." Punctilious fulfillment of contractual obligations is essential to the maintenance of the credit of public as well as private debtors. No doubt there was in March 1933 great need of economy. In the administration of all Government business economy had become urgent because of lessened revenues and the heavy obligations to be issued in the hope of relieving wide-spread distress. Congress was free to reduce gratuities deemed excessive. But Congress was without power to reduce expenditures by abrogating contractual obligations of the United States. To abrogate contracts, in the attempt to lessen Government expenditure, would be not the practice of economy, but an act of repudiation. "The United States are as much bound by their contracts as are individuals. If they repudiate their obligations, it is as much repudiation, with all the wrong and reproach that term implies, as it would be if the repudiator had been a State or a municipality or a citizen." The Sinking Fund Cases (99 U.S. 700, 719).

Third. Contracts between individuals or corporations are impaired within the meaning of the Constitution whenever the right to enforce them by legal process is taken away or materially lessened. A different rule prevails in respect to contracts of sovereigns. Compare Principality of Monaco v. Mississippi, decided May 21, 1934. "The contracts between a nation and an individual are only binding on the conscience of the sovereign and have no pretensions to compulsive force. They confer no right of action independent of the sovereign will." The rule that the United States may not be sued without its consent is all-embracing.

In establishing the system of war-risk insurance, Congress vested in its administrative agency broad power in making determinations of essential facts—power similar to that exercised in respect to pensions, compensation, allowances and other gratuitous privileges provided for veterans and their dependents. But while the statutes granting gratuities contain no specific provision for suits against the United States, Congress, as if to emphasize the contractual obligation assumed by the United States when issuing war-risk policies, conferred upon beneficiaries substantially the same legal remedy which beneficiaries enjoy under policies issued by private corporations. The original act provided in section 405:

"That in the event of disagreement as to a claim under the contract of insurance between the bureau and any beneficiary or beneficiaries thereunder, an action on the claim may be brought against the United States in the district court of the United States in and for the district in which such beneficiaries or any one of them resides."

Although consent to sue was thus given when the policy issued, Congress retained power to withdraw the consent at any time. For consent to sue the United States is a privilege accorded; not the grant of a property right protected by the Fifth Amendment. The consent may be withdrawn, although given after much deliberation and for a pecuniary consideration. DeGroot v. United States (5 Wall. 419, 432). Compare Darrington v. State Bank (13 How. 12, 17); Beers v. Arkansas (20 How. 527–529); Gordon v. United States (7 Wall. 188, 195); Railroad Company v. Tennessee (101 U.S. 337); Railroad Commission v. Alabama (101 U.S. 832); In re Ayers (123 U.S. 443, 505); Hans v. Louisiana (134 U.S. 1, 17); Baltzer v. North Carolina (161 U.S. 240); Baltzer & Taaks v. North Carolina (161 U.S. 246). The sovereign's immunity from suit exists whatever the character of the proceeding or the source of the right sought to be enforced. It applies alike to causes of action arising under acts of Congress, DeGroot v. United States (5 Wall. 419, 431); United States v. Babcock (250 U.S. 328, 331); and to those arising from some violation of rights conferred upon the citizen by the Constitution, Schillinger v. United States (155 U.S. 163, 166, 168). The character of the cause of action—the fact that it is in contract as distinguished from tort—may be important in determining (as under the Tucker Act) whether consent to sue was given. Otherwise, it is of no significance. For immunity from suit is an attribute of sovereignty which may not be bartered away.

Mere withdrawal of consent to sue on policies for yearly renewable term insurance would not imply repudiation. When the United States creates rights in individuals against itself, it is under no obligation to provide a remedy through the courts. (United States v. Babcock, 250 U.S. 328, 331.) It may limit the individual to administrative remedies. (Tutun v. United States, 270 U.S. 568, 576.) And withdrawal of all remedy, administrative as well as legal, would not necessarily imply repudiation. So long as the contractual obligation is recognized, Congress may direct its fulfillment without the interposition of either a court or an administrative tribunal.

Fourth. The question requiring decision is, therefore, whether in repealing "all laws granting or pertaining to yearly renewable term insurance" Congress aimed at the right or merely at the remedy. It seems clear that it intended to take away the right; and that Congress did not intend to preserve the right and merely withdraw consent to sue the United States. As Congress took away the contractual right it had no occasion to provide for withdrawal of the remedy. Moreover, it appears both from the language of the repealing clause and from the context of section 17 that Congress did not aim at the remedy. The clause makes no mention of consent to sue. The consent to sue had been given originally by section 405 of the act of 1917, which, like the later substituted sections, applied to all kinds of insurance, making no specific reference to yearly renewable term policies. Obviously, Congress did not intend to repeal generally the section providing for suits. For in March 1933, most of the policies then outstanding were "converted" policies, in no way affected by the Economy Act.

That Congress sought to take away the right of beneficiaries of yearly renewable term policies and not to withdraw their privilege to sue the United States appears also from an examination of the other provisions of section 17. The section reads:

"All public laws granting medical or hospital treatment, domiciliary care, compensation and other allowances, pensions, disability allowance, or retirement pay to veterans and the dependents of veterans of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection, and the World War, or to former members of the military and naval service for injury or disease incurred or aggravated in the line of duty in the military or naval service (except so far as they relate to persons who served prior to the Spanish-American War and to the dependents of such persons, and the retirement of officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard) are hereby repealed, and all laws granting or pertaining to yearly renewable term insurance are hereby repealed, but payments in accordance with such laws shall continue to the last day of the third calendar month following the month during which this act is enacted."

That section deals principally with the many grants of gratuities to veterans and dependents of veterans. Congress apparently assumed that there was no difference between the legal status of these gratuities and the outstanding contracts for yearly renewable term insurance. It used in respect to both classes of benevolences the substantially same phrase. It repealed "all public laws" relating to the several categories of gratuities; and it repealed "all laws granting or pertaining to" such insurance. No right to sue the United States on any of these gratuities had been granted in the several statutes conferring them; and the right to the gratuity might be withdrawn at any time. The dominant intention was obviously to abolish rights, not remedies.

That Congress intended to take away the right under outstanding yearly renewable term policies, and was not concerned with the consent to sue the United States thereon, appears also from the saving clauses in section 17. These provide that "all allowed claims under the above-referred-to laws" are to be reviewed and the benefits are to be paid "where a person is found entitled under this act"; and that "nothing contained in this section shall interfere with payments to be made under contracts of yearly renewable term insurance under which payments have commenced, or on any judgment heretofore rendered in a court of competent jurisdiction in any suit on a contract of yearly renewable term insurance, or which may hereafter be rendered in any such suit now pending." That is, the rights under certain yearly renewable term policies are excepted from the general repealing clause.

Fifth. There is a suggestion that although, in repealing all laws "granting or pertaining to yearly renewable term insurance", Congress intended to take away the contractual right, it also intended to take away the remedy; that since it had power to take away the remedy, the statute should be given effect to that extent, even if void insofar as it purported to take away the contractual right. The suggestion is at war with settled rules of construction. It is true that a statute bad in part is not necessarily void in its entirety. A provision within the legislative power may be allowed to stand if it is separable from the bad. But no provision, however unobjectionable in itself, can stand unless it appears both that, standing alone, the provisions can be given legal effect and that the legislature intended the unobjectionable provision to stand in case other provisions held bad should fall (Dorchy v. Kansas, 264 U.S. 286, 288, 290). Here both those essentials are absent. There is no separate provision in section 17 dealing with the remedy; and it does not appear that Congress wished to deny the remedy if the repeal of the contractual right was held void under the fifth amendment.

War-risk insurance and the war gratuities were enjoyed, in the main, by the same classes of persons; and were administered by the same governmental agency. In respect of both, Congress had theretofore expressed its benevolent purpose perhaps more generously than would have been warranted in 1933 by the financial condition of the Nation. When it became advisable to reduce the Nation's existing expenditures, the two classes of benevolences were associated in the minds of the legislators, and it was natural that they should have wished to subject both to the same treatment. But it is not to be assumed that Congress would have resorted to the device of withdrawing the legal remedy from beneficiaries of outstanding yearly renewable term policies if it had realized that these had contractual rights. It is, at least, as probable that Congress overlooked the fundamental difference in legal incidents between the two classes of benevolences dealt with in section 17 as that it wished to evade payment of the Nation's legal obligations.

Sixth. The judgments below appear to have been based, in the main, not on section 17 of the Economy Act, but on section 5, which provides:

"All decisions rendered by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs under the provisions of this title or the regulations issued pursuant thereto shall be final and conclusive on all questions of law and fact, and no other official or court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review by mandamus or otherwise any such decision."

This section, as the Solicitor General concedes, does not relate to war-risk insurance. It concerns only grants to veterans and their dependents—to pensions, compensation allowances and special privileges, all of which are gratuities. The purpose of the section appears to have been to remove the possibility of judicial relief in that class of cases even under the special circumstances suggested in Crouch v. United States (266 U.S. 180); Silberschein v. United States (266 U.S. 221); United States v. Williams (278 U.S. 255); Smith v. United States (57 (2d) 998). Compare United States v. Meadows (281 U.S. 271).

Seventh. The Solicitor General concedes that in no. 861 no question is presented except that of jurisdiction dependent upon the construction of the clause in section 17 of the Economy Act discussed above. He contends in no. 855 that, if jurisdiction is entertained, the demurrer should be sustained on the ground that the complaint fails to set forth a good cause of action, since it fails to show that the suit was brought within the period allowed by law. This alleged defect was not pleaded or brought to the attention of either of the courts below. Nor was it brought by the Solicitor General to the attention of this Court when opposing the petition for a writ of certiorari. We do not pass upon that question, which, like others relating to the merits, will be open for consideration by the lower courts upon the remand.

Eighth. Mention should be made of legislation by Congress enacted since the commencement of these suits.

1. Act of June 16, 1933 (c. 101, sec. 20, 48 Stat. 309) provides:

"Notwithstanding the provisions of section 17, title I, Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, any claim for yearly renewable term insurance on which premiums were paid to the date of the death of the insured * * * under the provisions of law repealed by said section 17, wherein claim was duly filed prior to March 20, 1933, may be adjudicated by the Veterans' Administration on the proofs and evidence received by Veterans' Administration prior to March 20, 1933, and any person found entitled to the benefits claimed shall be paid such benefits in accordance with and in the amounts provided by such prior laws. * * *"

2. Section 35 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act of 1935, passed on March 27–28, 1934, over the President's veto, provides:

"That notwithstanding the provisions of section 17 of title I, of an act entitled 'An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government' approved March 20, 1933, and section 20 of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Executive offices, etc. * * *' approved June 16, 1933; any claim for renewable term insurance under the provisions of laws repealed by section 17, wherein claim was duly filed prior to March 20, 1933, and on which maturity of the insurance contract had been determined by the Veterans' Administration prior to March 20, 1933, and where payments could not be made because of the provisions of the act of March 20, 1933, or under the provisions of the act of June 16, 1933, may be adjudicated by the Veterans' Administration and any person found entitled to yearly renewable term insurance benefits claimed shall be paid such benefits in accordance with and in the amounts provided by such prior laws."

The provision in the act of June 16, 1933, which was enacted before the entry of judgments by the district courts, does not appear to have been considered by the lower courts. The provision in the act of March 27–28, 1934, was enacted after the filing in this Court of the petitions for certiorari but before the writs were granted. As neither of these acts was referred to by the Solicitor General or by counsel for the petitioners, we assume that there is nothing in them, or in any action taken thereunder, which should affect the disposition of the cases now before us. Any such matter also will be open for consideration by the lower courts upon the remand.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I shall interrupt the silver debate for only a short time.

Federal deposit insurance and its administration are again under fire from those who, in my judgment, are either unfortunately misled respecting their facts or are deliberately willing to encourage the destruction of the Federal deposit-insurance system. Neither reason is tenable, and neither objective is justifiable. The net result in either event is calculated to shatter all over again public confidence in American banking.

I assert without reservation that there is no excuse or justification for any such loss of confidence or for any such calamity as would flow therefrom. Therefore, it seems to me fundamentally necessary in the public welfare to make a definite statement in respect to these current criticisms.

I specifically refer to an editorial in the New York Herald Tribune, of Thursday, June 7, dealing as a text with an address previously delivered by Mr. Leo T. Crowley, the very able Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. I speak of the Herald Tribune with great respect. It is a great and useful newspaper. Its editors are my friends. So far as the Herald Tribune is concerned, I believe it is misled in this matter. I do not remotely impugn its motives. I speak only of the facts.

It appears that Mr. Crowley a short time ago made an address to the country in which he undertook to disclose the effectiveness of the instrumentality over which he presides in respect to its contribution to our economic restabilization. In the course of his address, Mr. Crowley made certain statements which resulted in the editorial from which I am about to read.

After referring to various other stages of the economic recovery program to which the editor takes exception, the following language appears:

Now comes Leo T. Crowley, Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, with a panegyric on the guaranty of bank deposits that properly belongs with the rest of this humbuggery.

I do not undertake to analyze "the rest of the humbuggery", but I do undertake subsequently to prove that Mr. Crowley's observations are the exact opposite of "humbuggery." They spell unadulterated truth.

I continue reading:

In a general press interview Mr. Crowley called attention a day or two ago to the fact that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation "was entering its sixth month of operation without a single bank failure." However, a further reading of the interview discloses that while there have been no "failures", "two small State banks have encountered difficulties."

The American Banker—

That being the name of a trade publication which is now quoted in the editorial of the New York Herald Tribune—

The American Banker rightly calls Mr. Crowley to task for this juggling of definitions.

I shall make it perfectly plain that there has been no "juggling of definitions." The "juggling" is by Mr. Crowley's critics.

It invites attention to the fact that the doors of these banks are closed. The depositors cannot get their money, even in the case of insured accounts.

That particular sentence I shall subsequently challenge, because I think it carries a sinister implication which could well invite the undermining of all the banking confidence that has been so painfully restored in the course of the past 15 months after the needless debacle of 1 year ago.

Continuing the editorial:

The banks' officials are no longer at their desks. The State is in charge of the banks for liquidation, by reopening or otherwise. These banks, it concludes, are failed banks in the commonly accepted use of that term. It goes on to say—

Now we are quoting from the American Banker—

But the illusion that the F.D.I.C. has ended bank failures must not be impaired. Hence, all that the Federal authorities will admit is that "two small State banks have encountered difficulties." We can understand the temerity of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation about facing the facts. We can understand it because we know that in their most sanguine moments the officials of the F.D.I.C. know that they have attempted to do an impossible thing—to insure the demand solvency of even part of the deposits of every bank of this country.

Now continuing the Herald Tribune editorial:

This is a sharp rebuke, but it is a deserved one.

I intend to demonstrate, Mr. President, that it is an utterly untenable rebuke, without a shadow of justification in it; and I think the times are still sufficiently tender so that we should be a little careful before we invite untoward inferences respecting banking stability.

Continuing to quote from the editorial:

In this country today we have a stabilization fund of $2,000,000,000 set up to buy and sell foreign exchange * * *

I am not interested in that phase.

Our central bank figures * * * are so badly snarled that no one any longer can extricate their real meaning.

Then this sentence:

The guaranty of bank deposits properly belongs in this category, since it is in effect nothing more nor less than a mechanism for "sweeping the dirt under the bed."

Mr. President, I desire briefly to analyze the charges in this editorial and dismiss them on the basis of the facts involved.

In the first place, I submit that it is nothing short of ridiculous to base any criticism of the effectiveness of Federal deposit insurance upon the assumption that two banks have closed in 6 months. Suppose they have! What of it? I should like to know when there has ever been another 6 months' period in the history of the whole American Republic when only two banks closed. If any emphasis is to be put upon the fact that two banks have closed between New Year's and the present hour, the emphasis belongs upon the fact that it is an amazing record in a restoration of public confidence and in a renewal of dependable banking operations. I submit that it is not only unfair but it is seriously dangerous in its implications to invite the American people to suspect that on the basis of this record there is a renewed failure of the banking function in respect to its dependability, and of the deposit insurance formula upon which our banking confidence leans.

So at the very outset I cannot but condemn without limitation the implication that because two banks have closed in some 6 months, in some way Federal deposit insurance has failed to achieve the result to which it was addressed. The truth of the matter is that Federal deposit insurance has become the main steel beam that has been builded into the reconstruction program of this Nation. The fact is that it has practically ended money hoarding by the people. The fact is that it has instilled a feeling of confidence in the great mass, rank, and file of bank depositors in the United States which is a positive benediction upon all other recovery programs and enterprises and objectives. We have insured the deposits of 97 percent of our depositors. It is a triumph in social progress and in banking stability.

So at the very outset of the contemplation I submit that the facts upon which the comment is based lead directly to a contrary conclusion to that which is reached—reached first by the American Banker; reached second by this editorial in the New York Herald Tribune.

I realize that some of the big bankers of America still object to Federal deposit insurance. I realize that many sections of the metropolitan press still condemn Federal deposit insurance; but, Mr. President, I am heartened by the fact and the belief that as a result of the experience of the past 6 months a vast majority of the banking spokesmanship of this country has come to realize the inherent benefit and advantage of Federal deposit insurance; and I am perfectly confident that the American people as a whole have come to that realization to such an extent that it is here to stay, and cannot be ripped out of the structure of recovery. Bankers can take their choice; we shall either have permanent deposit insurance or we shall have unlimited banking in the post offices of the Nation.

Mr. President, that is not the worst of this contemplation which I bring to the floor of the Senate, and against which I protest. I protest particularly against the implication carried in a single dark sentence of this editorial, reading as follows:

The depositors cannot get their money, even in the case of insured accounts.

Wittingly or otherwise, that sentence is calculated to impress the average bank depositor in the United States with the feeling that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has broken down, that it is not serving the function to which it is dedicated by law, and that it no longer can be relied upon to pay the obligations which it has assumed as a result of this insurance process.

I desire to state without equivocation or reservation, and based upon the record, that any such conclusion is utterly without foundation, completely and absolutely without justification.

Now let us see what the situation is in respect to these two closed banks which are used as the excuse for this entire attack.

One of these banks is the Bank of America Trust Co. at Pittsburgh, Pa. This is a report from Mr. Crowley respecting the status of that particular institution in respect to the deposit-insurance proposition. I read from a letter from Mr. Crowley addressed to me at my request under date of June 7, 1934:

On April 19, 1934, Dr. William D. Gordon, secretary of banking, State of Pennsylvania, advised this office that the subject bank was in difficulty and asked that representatives of this Corporation meet with him in Pittsburgh. Mr. Milford, assistant to director, and Mr. Brown, of the legal department of this Corporation, had a conference that evening in Pittsburgh with Dr. Gordon and his representatives. On the morning of April 20 Dr. Gordon attended a meeting of the board of directors of the bank and decided to place the bank on a restricted basis under the Sardoni Act, pending a more detailed investigation of the affairs of the institution. The Sardoni Act became applicable at 9 a.m., April 20.

This Corporation—

To wit, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation—

This Corporation at once made arrangements to have its representatives be at the bank and work in conjunction with the State bank examiners in the investigation of the affairs of the bank, and to determine the Corporation's liability to depositors.

To wit, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Also, this Corporation proceeeded at once—

I repeat the phrase "at once"— to develop its plans in detail so that there would be no delay in the pay off the moment a receiver was appointed by the secretary of banking of the State of Pennsylvania.

Since that time we have kept in touch with the secretary of banking of Pennsylvania as to the status of the case, but apparently delays have occurred due to the fact that no decision has been reached as to a plan of reorganization.

We appreciate that the delay would result in inquiries and criticism as to why this Corporation did not pay off the depositors of the subject bank—

Well, they may have appreciated and anticipated criticism, Mr. President, because there are still those who, for purely selfish, self-centered reasons, would like to tear down this system, which permits the depositors of the United States to sleep nights. In this latter comment I am not referring to the Herald Tribune—and hence we urged the secretary of banking to reach a decision at the earliest possible date as to the developments in acceptance of a reorganization plan or the placing of the bank in liquidation. Attached hereto is a copy of the letter written to Dr. Gordon on May 5, which indicated our position in the matter.

We now understand that a decision will be reached very shortly by Dr. Gordon as to the placing of this bank in liquidation. Awaiting this early decision, representatives of this Corporation are in Pittsburgh so that the pay off may take place practically simultaneously with the appointment of a receiver.

Mr. President, the representatives of the F.D.I.C. are in Pittsburgh at this hour potentially armed with the pay-off checks, ready to meet every obligation imposed upon the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation by the law, ready to liquidate every depositor's claim up to $2,500, as required by the warrant of statute, awaiting only the completion of the legal period and formulas in the State of Pennsylvania which must precede the designation of a receiver. The response of the F.D.I.C. has been prompt, adequate, and conclusive. The law works.

I submit that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation could not possibly have more completely met its obligations. It has even anticipated its obligations. It could have waited in Washington until the receiver was named. It had no obligation until the receiver was named. It did not wait. It anticipated the event. I venture the assertion that the checks are drawn and in existence at this moment for the pay off. Yet, because of a local technicality embedded in the statutes of Pennsylvania, the critics of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation leap upon this distorted technicality and invite the country to the implication that there is something undependable about the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the system which it administers, and that, quoting from the editorial—

After all, depositors cannot get their money even in the case of insured accounts.

Mr. President, I think I have a right to protest against that exhibit, not only personally and because of the part I have played in the initiation of the insurance system but on behalf of the Congress of the United States, which wrote the law, and on behalf of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which has ably administered it, and particularly in behalf of some 30,000,000 depositors of the country who have a right to believe in the continuing dependability of the plan upon which they lean.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. DILL. I did not hear the beginning of the Senator's remarks. How much time has elapsed since the bank closed?

Mr. VANDENBERG. April 19 it was put upon a restricted basis under the Pennsylvania law.

Mr. DILL. About 7 weeks then?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. DILL. This is the only case we have had since the Corporation came into existence?

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is one other to which I am now coming. The other case which is used in this distorted assault upon Federal deposit insurance is that of the Fondulac State Bank at East Peoria, Ill. Again I quote from Mr. Crowley's letter of June 7 reporting to me upon the actual facts—actual facts as distinguished from the critical and hostile interpretation of alleged facts upon which these critical editorial comments have been based. I read:

On Monday morning, May 28—

That is scarcely more than a week ago—

On Monday morning, May 28, this Corporation was notified by the auditor of public accounts of the State of Illinois that the above bank was placed in the hands of the representatives of his department for audit and examination. On the same evening, H. N. Stronck, assistant to director of this Corporation, held a conference in Peoria, Ill., with the representatives of the State department of Illinois as to plans and procedures. Arrangements were made that representatives of this organization would make a joint audit and examination of this bank, which work was commenced the following morning.

I emphasize the phrase "the following morning."

This work is now in process, and it is expected same will be completed by the end of this week. According to the procedure of the auditor of public accounts of the State of Illinois, as soon as this audit and examination is completed a meeting will be called of the directors of the bank, advising them of the condition and asking them to submit a reorganization plan. In the event a suitable reorganization plan is not submitted then a receiver will be appointed.

As in the case of the Pittsburgh situation, this organization at once proceeded in the completion of the necessary details and procedures for the pay-off of the depositors of the above bank.

They did not wait for the conclusion of the process under the State law which should bring this bank into a receivership and thus initiate the obligation of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation under the statute. They did not wait. They anticipated it the morning following the first suggestion respecting the institution, and at this hour they are in position to proceed with the pay-off at the first moment the legal situation under the State statutes will permit.

Continuing Mr. Crowley's letter:

In the event a receiver is appointed assurance can be given you that such a pay-off will be made shortly after the same may be done under the receivership laws of the State of Illinois. Under these laws no action may be taken for a period of 10 days after a receiver is appointed.

Mr. President, those are the official facts respecting the two instances, the only two instances in nearly 6 months in which any insured banking institution of the country has been in the slightest trouble. These are the facts respecting the ability, the purpose, and the intention of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation promptly, summarily, to meet every obligation imposed upon it under the terms of the Federal deposit insurance law. These are the facts which invite the American people to continue to rely upon this boon.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. DILL. These were both State institutions?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator know the amount of deposits in each case?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not.

Mr. DILL. They were not large, I take it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. They are very small, relatively speaking.

Mr. President, I am concerned about what seems to be a continuing willingness in some quarters to use, if possible, prejudicial excuses for the purpose of trying to tear down the Federal deposit insurance system in the country. Since it is my profound conception that when we tear down that system we tear down the steel beam upon which most of the recovery structure rests in this country, because that is my conviction I consider it to be desperately important that no improper inferences aimed against the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the dependability and the solvency of the system, should pass without challenge.

This editorial is headed "Obscurantism at Washington." The dictionary says that "obscurantism" is "striving to prevent enlightenment or to hinder the progress of knowledge and wisdom."

I submit upon the basis of the facts that it is not Mr. Crowley or the officers of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation who are guilty of obscurantism. I submit that if there is any obscurantism in this contemplation, it is the obscurantism of those who, either unwittingly because they are uninformed respecting the facts or wittingly because they have an ax to grind, are engaged in this continuing conspiracy to tear down the Federal deposit insurance in the United States.

In conclusion, let me say just this, and I linger on the subject only because of my belief that there is nothing more essential than the maintenance of banking confidence in the United States and that we cannot maintain banking confidence except as we maintain the integrity of the deserved reputation of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the integrity of the system under which it operates.

The editorial undertakes to confuse in terms and definitions the existing deposit insurance system with the old guaranty of bank deposits, as it was known in the early days, when it failed in every State jurisdiction where it was undertaken. Mr. President, there is no consanguinity whatsoever between the old State guaranty system and the national insurance system under which we are now so successfully operating—operating so successfully that there have been only two bank closings in 6 months compared with literally thousands in a kindred period in recent memory.

This is not related in any way, shape, or form to the system which failed before, and that point has been demonstrated so often and so irrefutably that any effort to give renaissance to that sort of attack is entitled to be challenged as a sinister trend.

I invite the attention of the gentlemen who persist in criticising the Federal deposit insurance theory to one of the ablest discussions of the subject yet contributed to the country's literature and experience upon the subject. It is an address by William P. Chapman, Jr., of the New York City bar, delivered before the savings division of the American Bankers' Association on January 26, 1934. Let me read one paragraph from Mr. Chapman's amazing address:

> The conclusion is that the probabilities are that an annual contribution of one-fourth of 1 percent of the deposits of the solvent banks—

He is speaking of the 68 years of American experience—> would have accumulated a fund which would have been sufficient to meet even the overwhelming disaster that has occurred since 1929, without even an extra assessment.

Mr. President, I should like to know whether there is any bargain in government equal in its fruits for the common throng to the bargain that would have been purchased for a premium of one-fourth of 1 percent if it could have prevented the banking tragedies and the banking debacles and the resultant social tragedies of the last three-quarters of a century.

Listen to the completed final compilation of figures, and I use the figures because I do not want to be accused of obscurantism in respect to any presentation of the present issue: During the 68 years from 1864 to June 30, 1932, the grand total of deposits in all the banks of the United States would have been $1,136,042,630,000.

The grand total of all deposits in suspended banks during those 68 years would have been $5,861,061,000.

The average experience in respect to closed banks is that the net loss upon liquidation is 36 percent. Therefore, the net loss to the insurance fund during those 68 years would have been $2,109,981,960.

Against that a collection of an annual payment of one-fourth of 1 percent would have reached the grand total in the course of these 68 years of $2,840,106,575.

In other words, the net balance to the credit of the fund at the end of 68 years—because these computations are based upon complete coverage—in which every depositor in a closed bank would have had all his money, would have been $730,124,615. That is without taking a single penny's credit for earnings upon the fund itself.

Mr. President, if an actuarial justification is wanted for the Federal insurance process upon which we are embarked, and which already has so ably demonstrated its utility, I submit that this collection of figures is unanswerable.

I suppose the question then is: Can the banks afford to pay one-quarter of 1 percent? Again quoting Mr. Chapman:

> Under the Federal banking legislation of 1933, member banks are forbidden to pay interest upon demand deposits and are restricted to a 3-percent rate upon time deposits. A rather careful estimate indicates that the saving in interest payments on deposits under the new laws—

Mr. President, just the savings in interest-rate payments—> would be sufficient to pay a one-fourth of 1 percent annual premium more than twice over.

I desire to refer to just one further exhibit, and I intrude upon the patience of the Senate only because of my belief that this is the most fundamentally important thing in the whole recovery program, namely, to continue the maintenance of dependable confidence in the banking structure of this country. The favorite challenge, which continues to be used in academic discussions against the Federal deposit insurance idea is the question: Why should solvent banks contribute to insurance that they think they do not need?

Mr. President, although many an answer will occur to every Senator in the Chamber, no better answer can be summarized than in reading further from the address of Mr. Chapman, which I do:

> Finally, the objection most often advanced to bank-deposit guaranty is that sound banks should not be compelled to pay for the losses incurred by insolvent banks. There is one answer to this which does not admit of statistical support other than a sighting of the whole economic field. This answer is that in times of widespread depression the sound banks will have to pay for such losses—

And I submit that Mr. Chapman's deduction is irresistible, that in such times the sound banks will have to pay for such losses, whether they like it or not.

> There is no escape from it. Serious collapses in the field of banking affect the whole community, and the sound banks cannot escape injury. The indirect losses that are caused to banks that remain solvent by the failure of other banks in times of general dismay and apprehension cannot be measured, but the experience of the last 4 years should teach us that such losses may be enormous even though two-thirds of the banks are not compelled to go into receivership. Let me simply allude again to the shrinkage in loans and discounts in the solvent banks between June 30, 1929, and June 30, 1933, which amounted to $19,218,126,000. The deposits in banks which were forced to suspend in the period between June 30, 1928, and June 30, 1932, amounted to $3,355,000,000. If we add to that sum the deposits still tied up on December 27 last, in unlicensed and unrestricted banks, which amount to $1,223,195,000, the total of deposits frozen in those 5 years amounts to $4,578,195,000.
> If the procession that started in to convert into legal tender currency or gold their $3,355,000,000 of deposits in the banks that could not meet the emergency had been stopped in its early stages, the forcing upon the market of many billions of earning assets by the other banks for the purpose of maintaining their liquidity probably would not have happened. If the London fire had been stopped in the house where it originated the other 1,300 houses might have remained in existence to undergo in due course a less disastrous and more constructive renovation.

Who can deny the fact or the analogy?

Mr. President, 6 months ago, yea, and throughout the period preceding, the failure of two banks in the United States would have sent tremors of concern and anxiety, yea, almost hysteria, through the banking fraternity, and depositors in other banks throughout the areas involved would have begun to whisper among themselves as to whether they had not better proceed quietly to extract their savings from the bank.

Here today we have two institutions closed. Not a tremor anywhere in the balance of the system, not an hour's uncertainty in the heart of any other banking institution, not a thought of a run upon another banking institution, not a moment's loss of sleep by any depositor in another institution.

Why not? Because of Federal deposit insurance, and nothing else.

Is it possible in the face of that contemplation to say that the strong bank, the big bank, does not have a tremendous stake in the maintenance of this system and that it does not have an inevitable partnership in the vicissitudes of the smaller one?

Mr. President, I submit in all earnestness that this latest attack upon the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in general, upon Mr. Crowley in particular, and upon the system and theory underlying this great enterprise which has been set up is utterly without warrant, utterly without justification.

I submit that the facts and circumstances of the hour demonstrate not only that Federal deposit insurance is absolutely reliable, without equivocation or reservation, but also that it is utterly indispensable to whatever hope we have for a restabilized United States.

DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS—AMENDMENT OF JUDICIAL CODE

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to advert to Senate bill 588, which was passed a few days ago, and which was held on the desk at my request, because I learned subsequent to its passage that House bill 4337, which previously had been passed by the House, dealt with the same subject and is textually substantially the same. I now report from the Judiciary Committee favorably without amendment House bill 4337, to amend the Judicial Code by adding a new section, to be numbered 274D, and I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby Senate bill 588 was passed be reconsidered and that the House bill be now considered and passed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, what is the bill?

Mr. FESS. I should like an explanation of it.

Mr. KING. Judge MONTAGUE, of the House, was interested in the passage of a declaratory-judgment bill, which passed the House three or four times. The Senate Judiciary Committee had before it a Senate bill of the same character, and inadvertently reported out the Senate bill instead of the House bill. I ask now that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill, and that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. FESS. I have no objection.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate bill 588 was passed be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the Senate bill was passed is reconsidered.

Mr. KING. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider the bill, which I have just reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 4337) to amend the Judicial Code by adding a new section to be numbered 274D, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. I ask that Senate bill 588 be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On June 7, 1934:

S. 2696. An act to amend an act entitled "An act granting a charter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs"; and

S. 3524. An act to amend an act of Congress approved February 9, 1893, entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

On June 8, 1934:

S. 177. An act for the relief of Woodhouse Chain Works;

S. 254. An act for the relief of Fred H. Cotter;

S. 785. An act for the relief of Elizabeth Bolger;

S. 1078. An act for the relief of Mrs. Asa Caswell Hawkins;

S. 1191. An act for the relief of Sultzbach Clothing Co.;

S. 1401. An act to pay a gratuity to Emma Ferguson Starrett;

S. 2002. An act for the relief of R. S. Howard Co., Inc.;

S. 2692. An act relating to the record of registry of certain aliens;

S. 2969. An act for the relief of the Mary Black Memorial Hospital;

S. 3026. An act for the relief of Lucy Cobb Stewart; and

S. 3641. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Ogdensburg, N.Y.

PIONEER NATIONAL MONUMENT, KY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3443) to provide for the creation of the Pioneer National Monument in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That when title to the sites of Fort Boonesborough, Boones Station, Bryans Station, and Blue Licks Battlefield, in the State of Kentucky, comprising noncontiguous tracts to be united by a memorial highway, together with such historical structures and remains thereon, as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior as necessary or desirable for national monument purposes and for the proper commemoration of the valor and sacrifices of the pioneers of "the West", shall have been vested in the United States, said areas and improvements shall be designated and set apart by proclamation of the President for preservation as a national monument for the benefit and inspiration of the people, and shall be called the "Pioneer National Monument."

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept donations of land, interests in land and/or buildings, structures, and other property within the boundaries of said national monument as determined and fixed hereunder, and donations of funds for the purchase and/or maintenance thereof, the title and evidence of title to lands acquired to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That he may acquire on behalf of the United States out of any donated funds, by purchase at prices deemed by him reasonable, or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, such tracts of land within the said national monument as may be necessary for the completion thereof.

SEC. 3. That the administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid national monument shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

L. R. SMITH

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 870) for the relief of L. R. Smith, which were, on page 1, line 7, after "settlement", to insert "of all claims against the Government of the United States"; and, on page 1, line 13, after "Forest", to insert:

: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. ERICKSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PRESENT CRITICAL SITUATION

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the Right Reverend John A. Ryan, D.D., on May 29, 1934, on "The Present Critical Situation."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PRESENT CRITICAL SITUATION

By Rt. Rev. John A. Ryan, D.D.

The most disturbing element in the situation is the question whether the industrial improvement which was steady and fairly rapid from last November until the beginning of May will continue during the next 6 months. Here is my own answer: For the last four Sundays the chart of business trends published by the New York Times has shown a decrease in the average of industrial activities. In all probability this downward trend, with possibly some interruptions, will continue until next September. When Congress reassembles next January the number of the unemployed will in all probability not have been reduced by one million below the present figure. In other words, the beginning of the year 1935 will find some seven to nine million unemployed. I am assuming that the National Recovery Administration will do nothing effective in the meantime toward reducing the hours of labor per week or increasing hourly rates of wages.

This is not prophecy. It is simple deduction from the facts and the nature of our industrial system. Business cannot improve rapidly unless it rapidly increases its sale of goods. It cannot greatly increase its sales unless those who would like to buy the added goods obtain the money to do so. These are the wage earners and the farmers. The middle class, the well-to-do, and the rich will not greatly increase their spending for consumption goods during the next 6 or 7 months.

The depression came because purchasing power had been badly distributed between those who wanted to spend and those who wanted to invest. The latter got too large a share of the national product. Although the economic philosophy of the "new deal" requires that this bad distribution should be corrected, the process of correction has not yet gone far enough to bring about that wider distribution of purchasing power which is essential to sustained and considerable business recovery.

The majority of business men have not yet realized this bad distribution of purchasing power and its evil effects. The majority are still under the delusion that if the production of capital goods could be resumed at the old rate, all products could be sold and there would be a return of prosperity. Hence, their denunciation of the Securities Act and their demand that Government facilitate recovery in the durable-goods industries. They seem to be blind to the fact that at present there is no large demand for the product of the durable-goods industries. The country does not need more factories, more railroads, more hotels, nor more apartment houses. To be sure, there is always need for replacement of worn-out and obsolete capital instruments, but this need would not at the present time justify more than a 25 or 30 percent increase in the operation of these industries. The only field offering any exception to this statement is that of low-cost housing, but this is not a field that private capital cares to cultivate. The profits are too meager. The enormous demand for durable goods and materials which is potential in an adequate low-cost housing program will not become actual until the task is directly undertaken and financed by the Federal Government.

The dark outlook for the capital goods industries is intensified by our very slow increase in population. Between the end of 1921 and the beginning of 1934 the birthrate in the United States fell 30 percent and some authorities expect the population to become stationary as early as the year 1940. This alarming development has not yet been observed by more than a small number of persons of any class and it seems to have escaped the attention of all except the business men. Those persons who have observed and given some study to the phenomenon realize that it will have profound effect upon our whole industrial life and arrangements. Only a few of our cities will experience any increase in population. The declining birthrate will be bad for the farmers, the real-estate men, and all those who are interested in the building industries.

Another complication which has, however, received somewhat more attention, is the extension of labor displacing machinery and methods which has taken place since the beginning of the depression. If our products were to reach the figures of 1929 before the end of this year, there would still be at least 5,000,000 workers unable to find employment. In the busiest months of the year 1929 there were between two and three million unemployed. Between 1929 and the present date at least 2,000,000, and possibly 3,000,000, jobs have been abolished by technological improvements; that is, by the substitution of mechanical and automatic process for human labor.

What could and what ought to be done? The principal requirements are two legislative measures which will not be enacted at this session of Congress. The first is the bill introduced by Senator LA FOLLETTE, calling for a $10,000,000,000 appropriation for Public Works; the second is the Connery bill, reducing the hours of labor to 30 per week. It seems to be generally agreed that the greater part of the business improvement which has occurred since last fall is due to the employment provided by the expenditure of Federal money for public works, civil works, and the activities of the Civilian Conservation Corps. Practically all of this money was immediately spent for goods, for the products of industry. Indeed, there are many indications which point to the conclusion that if all of those now unemployed were somehow put in possession of jobs, a great amount of public expenditure for public works would still be necessary in order to make the general employment continuous. A considerable section of the workers would not be needed, even on the basis of a 30-hour week, to produce the material goods required by our population. Of course, this estimate leaves out of account the production of low-cost housing, but that, as I have already noted, is a matter for Federal, not private, expenditures.

To those who raise the question concerning the financing of a $10,000,000,000 public-works project, the answer is very simple. Fundamentally, the problem is one of producing goods, that is, the raw materials and the finished products required to construct the public works, and the necessaries, comforts, and luxuries required to support the whole population. No one who knows anything about our productive capacity will deny that all these goods would be forthcoming. In a fundamental sense the public works would be paid for simultaneously with their construction. The financial and fiscal aspects of the problem are equally simple. The surplus money of the country would be diverted from unnecessary and wasteful investments into the Treasury of the United States, whence it would be drawn for expenditures on the public works. Let us not permit the money aspect of the process prevent us from seeing the fundamental problem, which is simply that of producing sufficient goods.

The 30-hour week would increase employment, total pay rolls, and purchases of goods. It would not, as some fear, prove disastrous to industry. Suppose that it would drive the weakest 10 percent of employers into bankruptcy. Far more than that number of persons now unemployed would then find work and a livelihood, with great advantage to the common good. Let us assume that most of the employers who survived would have to get along with less profits under the 30-hour week arrangement.

Far from being something to be deplored, this outcome should be welcomed. For our industrial system cannot continue to function without a redistribution of incomes and purchasing power which will give more to those who would like to spend money for consumption goods and less to those who would invest it in an already overexpanded industrial plant.

The other very critical question which now confronts the "new deal" is that of peace between capital and labor and the right of labor to organize. That right was fondly assumed to have been effectively guaranteed by section 7a of the National Industrial Recovery Act. We now know that it has been disregarded and evaded by some of our most powerful industries. The Wagner-Lewis bill was drawn to prevent these violations and evasions. For several weeks it was bitterly attacked by despotic industrialists at the hearings before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. No unprejudiced person can read the three published volumes of these hearings without astonishment and discouragement over the intellectual dishonesty and enormous arrogance displayed by one big business man after the other in their attacks upon the bill. Congress should have passed the bill immediately after the hearings were ended. As a matter of fact, Congress intended to let it die in committee. Congress departed from this intention only when its fears were aroused by bloody labor strife in Minneapolis, Toledo, and elsewhere. Within the last few days the bill has been reported out of committee, but in a considerably diluted form.

This bit of recent legislative history, which, unfortunately is not exceptional, obviously strengthens the contention of Communists that labor gets nothing from our lawmakers except through methods of force and fear. While this is an exaggeration, it contains a considerable measure of truth. Throughout history, labor has got nothing worth while until it showed itself willing and able to use some kind of force, at least economic force.

Congress will not enact into law at this session either the La Follette $10,000,000,000 public works bill or the Connery 30-hour week bill. It can, however, give elementary justice to labor by enacting the Wagner labor disputes bill. When that becomes law, labor will be in a position to obtain some increase in wages and purchasing power and thereby to improve the outlook for business and for industrial recovery.

We are witnessing the nemesis of the capitalistic philosophy. Ever since the industrial revolution business men believed that they could pay the lowest wages and make the highest profits without interfering with the welfare of business. They believed that the process would go on automatically, that they could produce indefinite amounts of goods, and that these quantities of goods would automatically find markets. They did not believe that it was necessary to give to the masses enough money to buy the goods. They flouted the moral teaching of Pope Leo XIII on labor's right to a living wage. If they had accepted and put into practice that teaching, they would be better off today. A few of them have, indeed, come to realize that good ethics is also good business. The most critical question confronting the capitalistic system is whether the opinions of these few enlightened business men will prevail, or whether they will be ignored by the bourbons of industry, the men whose prototypes brought about the French Revolution and every other destructive revolution, including that which ushered in the monstrous system of Soviet Russia.

MONETARY USE OF PURCHASE OF SILVER

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9745) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes.

TRAVELERS WHO HAVE LOST THE ROADS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I had hoped the present silver bill would be of such nature as to inspire a great deal more opposition than it has aroused from those who have styled themselves the "sound money" element of the Senate. The fact that the bill is receiving so little opposition from the so-called "conservative money" crowd may be explained when its terms are understood insofar as failing to remonetize silver is concerned.

This bill does not remonetize silver, nor does it do more than we have already done by the act passed last year. On the contrary, Mr. President, unless this bill is amended, it might be better that it were not passed at all, because the terms of section 8 are such that it destroys such a thing as a silver market in the United States.

This bill is supposed to create a lively market for silver. The purpose is to raise the current value of silver from 45 cents an ounce, which it now brings on the world market, to $1.29 an ounce. When that shall have been done silver by that process will have been remonetized, that is, when silver shall reach the point where it brings on the world market $1.29 an ounce it will have the value of the regular 16 to 1 money ratio prior to the act of 1873.

There is a little history about the silver question, Mr. President, that has never been explained. It has been frequently stated on this floor that we repealed the silver law in 1873; that is, that the Congress repealed the silver law so far as silver being money is concerned.

As a matter of fact, Congress did no such thing, and if the Supreme Court of the United States could be depended upon to decide as regards silver as some of our best courts have decided on other matters of law, silver would still be money. There is not a thing in the act of 1873, signed by President Grant, which provides that silver is demonetized. The form of money which had been money ever since the Constitution was written—and it is still in the Constitution—never was mentioned as being demonetized in the act of 1873 or in any other act. All that was done was, as President Grant himself later said, to pass an act providing for the coinage of money, providing for the issuance of certain money, but as to silver the act left out that part providing for the coinage of silver. It was done, as the debates of Congress will show, with Congress in the dark. It was so mysteriously done that it was as impossible to see as though it had been hid under a skillet in the midnight, that they were undertaking to demonetize silver in 1873.

The Constitution of the United States—and I will not undertake to read or quote its exact terms—denominates gold and silver as the standard money of this country. That is our constitutional money. An act of Congress which prevails merely carries into effect the articles of the Constitution of the United States by prescribing the quantities and the valuations of gold and silver for uses as medium of exchange in America.

There is a decision, Mr. President, by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, rendered a number of years ago, which holds where an act is passed by a legislative body carrying out a constitutional provision that that enabling act stands as the law even though subsequently repealed unless some other enabling act is passed carrying out the duty imposed by the Constitution upon the legislative body. I will not undertake to quote the decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, nor is there any necessity that I read from it, for it has been frequently published in the law journals, but in that decision the Supreme Court of Wisconsin held that the legislature is bound to put into effect enabling laws to carry out a fundamental law, and when an enabling act is passed it is not within the power of Congress or of a legislature to repeal an enabling act carrying out a fundamental law unless there is another one substituted in its stead. That subject came up when we were discussing and considering repealing the Volstead law carrying out the eighteenth amendment.

Some of the best scholars we have in the Senate and in the other House looked into the question as to whether or not Congress could not "take the bull by the horns" and simply say that "the Volstead law be and the same is hereby repealed." Those of us who looked into the question, as I remember, were unanimously of the opinion that it was not within the power of Congress to repeal the enabling act carrying out the eighteenth amendment without at the same time putting some other enabling act into the law. The same proposition of law, properly carried out, would hold as regards silver; and there is a well-grounded, sound view to that effect in this country today—that, legally, silver never has been demonetized.

After the passage of the Money Act of 1873 silver continued to be money to a certain extent. It never had been entirely swept out of the various decrees providing for the payment of Government obligations, such as bonds and the like; that is, that there was enough left in the administration of the laws so that the demonetization of silver did not come as a sudden act. Cleveland took the final step which entirely demonetized silver.

It is well that we trace here, Mr. President, from where this school of thought comes. We have in this country a financial incubator for the United States. We have almost the British system in some particulars, only it is carried on outside the Government. We have in this country a celebrated law firm that has furnished guiding lights to the United States Treasury for so long that "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." We have another celebrated law firm that has been kindly supplying the State Department with most of the high lights that have guided the destinies of that Department; but I will now advert to the firm furnishing those lights to the Treasury Department.

I have here The Life of Grover Cleveland. He was a Democrat, but he was not my kind of a Democrat. If I had been alive and there had been somebody running against him representing views which I entertained, I would have never voted for Grover Cleveland for President of the United States the last time he ran.

However, when Grover Cleveland had served as President of the United States for the first 4 years he was defeated for a second term, and after being out of office for 4 years he was elected for 4 more years as President of the United States. What did he do during the 4 years when he was out of office? According to the book which I have here, he served as an attorney, a member of the law firm of Bangs, Stetson, Tracy & MacVeagh, located first at 15 Broad Street and later at 45 Williams Street.

That law firm, Mr. President, is a very celebrated one. I understand—without calling names, which it is not necessary to do in this case—that some of the Secretaries of the Treasury have been members of that law firm. It is today the law firm of which a former nominee of the Democratic Party for President, Mr. John W. Davis, is a member. There are innumerable men to be found today in the Treasury Department who came from this law firm, which has existed for many, many years, performing distinguished service. It has always been the law firm representing the House of Morgan.

I think I have here the present name of that firm. I believe it is Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardiner & Reed, the name having been changed in 1924. I am informed that on its letterhead it carries the notation that it is the successor of Stetson, Jennings & Russell, they being the successors of the original firm, the name of which I have just given.

Mr. Cleveland was given 4 years' incubation in the money question, the same as the others who have come from that firm. I understand a previous Secretary of the Treasury under the Republican Party was a member of this law firm. They have filled the Treasury Department of the United States with man after man, whether in Democratic administrations or Republican administrations. They have furnished the two leading parties nominees for President of the United States, for Governors of pivotal States, and they have furnished the successful candidates who have been elected the key men to dictate the financial policies of the United States.

It made no difference who won or who lost, in the background was the House of Morgan, with the Treasury Department chained down, with every crevice filled with henchmen trained either in their law office or in one of their counting houses or trained in the Treasury Department under the tutelage of one of their henchmen coming out of their law office or a counting house representing the House of Morgan. They have kept that system alive so long that it would be necessary, in order to clean it out, to fumigate the present Department from top to bottom. It would take tear bombs and gas bombs to clean out of the Treasury Department the old wool-gathering, web-worn, alleged conservative and sound money system that was saddled upon the country beginning in 1873.

The money system was not all they were carrying out. That was not all the trouble. That is not all the trouble today. That is only one part of the trouble. My friend from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], with whom I agree on the present matter, is none the less mistaken in thinking that the great money question is the moving cause that has brought us to our depression. That is only a means through which the greater fault has been accomplished. The money manipulation through the Treasury Department and the laws of the United States have been used to help along a greater work by which the main purpose has been wrought. The money question has been one of the numerous vehicles to concentrate wealth into the hands of a few people. They needed to control the money in order to prevail upon the various agencies of industry, commerce, and government to bring about a concentration of wealth into the hands of a few people.

They set about deliberately. They set about taking over the Government of the United States, not directly, but they set about to take over every root, branch, and purpose that a government serves through the economic control which they purported to exercise in the country.

So it was necessary, in order that their purpose might be speedily accomplished, that they have as little money as possible to control. Why was it they wanted to demonetize silver? It was because it gave the country less money. There was a particular reason why they should favor gold over silver. It was for the reason that there had been such exchanges and understandings established between the financial masters of Great Britain and other foreign countries that there was a coordination of interest, a consolidation of understanding, as the result of which and through which they proposed to control domestic, national, and international commerce, as well as the properties of the several countries.

The campaign of 1896 came on at a time following a great depression. It was alleged to have been due to the small supply of money in the United States. The nominee of the Democratic Party, William Jennings Bryan, was nominated as a rebuff to the then Democratic President of the United States. Bryan's nomination by the Democratic convention at Chicago was for the purpose of putting the party on record in part as being against the administration of Grover Cleveland, the Democratic President. As a matter of fact, Cleveland supported the Republican candidate for President of the United States against the nominee of his party. It was a fact openly published and well known that when William Jennings Bryan was made the nominee of the Democratic Party in 1896, the most effective opposition he had was Grover Cleveland, then serving the country as Democratic President. Some may not know that, but that is the fact. Grover Cleveland never supported the nominee of the Democratic Party during three campaigns after he was President of the United States. That is something which is not generally known, that Mr. Cleveland was so much at variance with the Democratic policy adopted by the party led by Bryan that he was the most effective means of defeating the nominees of that party in those campaigns. He did not do it in an open way particularly, but none the less in an effective manner.

The defeat of Bryan, accomplished through a lavish expenditure of money and the power of the Government against him, although it was supposed to be of his own party, none the less could not have been effected but for the sudden discovery of gold in large quantities sufficient to allay a large part of the depression and to start commerce and trade, preventing a paralysis of business, which would have continued unless silver had been remonetized. The supply of gold which was suddenly discovered loosened up conditions in the country sufficiently that barely was Bryan's defeat accomplished in 1896.

Tracing that history a little further, after Bryan had been defeated twice the Democratic Party apparently went back to the sane and conservative view and nominated Alton B. Parker, who was scandalously defeated. Following that it nominated Bryan again and the silver issue ceased to be mentioned for the time being, and the country went along. But as the country went along the bloody hands of masterful finance steadily aggressed all the time, and the concentration of wealth, almost nonexistent, continued until 50 percent of the people owned an overwhelming part of the wealth, and then it came to be that a smaller percentage owned a greater percentage of the wealth, and so on, until the year 1916 came, when a blind man could have seen with his cane the concussion brought about as a result of the clash over an insufficient supply of money on the one hand and the concentration of wealth on the other hand, one of which accentuated the other.

Prior to 1916 the money supply having brought the country along with its concentration of wealth to a position of peril, the Democratic Party again picked up the cudgel. The only time the cudgel has ever been picked up has been when the Democratic Party or the insurgent Republicans saw fit to pick it up. It remained for the Democratic Party to take up the cudgel in 1914, 1915, and 1916, following the election of Woodrow Wilson in 1912. What did they do?

The Democratic Congress and the Democratic Senate enacted a law which was signed by the President of the United States, providing for the appointment of a commission to study the conditions prevailing in the country and to make a report with reference to what had to be done to correct the industrial unrest, the depression, and other maladjustments existing at the time. There was appointed a commission, headed by Mr. Frank P. Walsh, of Kansas City, Mo., composed of several brilliant gentlemen of the country. They delved into the question. They did not touch the money question because the money question was secondary. I say now the money question is secondary. They did not touch the money question, but they went to the root of the tree to see what was the cause of the depression existing and continuing to grow worse in the years 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916.

In the year 1916 the members of that commission completed their labors. They published a report. They submitted it to Congress. In that report they went over the conditions of agriculture. They went over the condition of industry. They discussed the hours of labor. They discussed farming conditions, particularly as to the share-croppers of the South and of the West. After an elaborate set of hearings, and a report as a result of them, that Industrial Relations Commission's report said to the Congress of the United States, "We find this trouble to be due, first, to the unjust distribution of wealth and income and the overwhelming part in the hands of a few people"; and in that connection they detailed exactly who owned the wealth, who controlled the industries, particularly the steel industry. They showed that the steel industry, the gigantic enterprise of this country, was in the hands of one banking house; that wherever we found a melting pot for steel, wherever we found an iron bar being pressed, the entire enterprise, from the time the ore was dug from the ground until the time the bar was finished and sold in its final shape, was in the control and under the domination of a single banking house in the United States of America.

Said that report:

> There is no way by which this country can expect to revive its agriculture and its industry, and spread and make general the blessings of what is produced in this country, other than through a decentralization of the wealth of the United States.

The money question was not discussed. Most assuredly, one of the means of accomplishing that decentralization, one of the means by which it could have been done speedily and easily, would have been by the increase of the money supply.

We went along with this report of 1916. The war came on. The continent of Europe burst into flames on the east and on the west. In the whole world nations were at each others' throats; and therefore what had been proposed by the Democratic Congress, we may say backed by Bryan, was arrested, due to the war which later involved America.

All right. We stopped. We remained static. What then? In came the Republicans, and for 12 years the wheel was turned along the lines of conservative, so-called "sound, stable, true, and tried rule" of the mighty. There were no bones made about it. It was alleged to be necessary that we return to what they called, in a newly invented word, "normalcy." "Normalcy" meant that the so-called "conservative element" those believing in the doctrine of laissez faire, should be allowed to run the country. So there were placed in these departments men even of more conservative leaning and training than those who had been allowed to remain there in the few years the Democrats had charge of the country.

So we went along with Harding for 2 years, and with Coolidge for 6 years, and with Hoover for 4 years, until the year 1929, with the sound and so-called "conservative" crowd in the saddle, with the wheel turned back on sound money and "leaving business alone", until that concentration of wealth and small supply of money wound the country around to a point where a few people sat in absolute control of the country. Not only were they in control of the country, but they were the only ones allowed to share in what the country produced. Whenever the country ground out an enormous crop, it was instantly owned by fewer mouths than could consume it. Whenever a manufacturing plant turned out products they were immediately owned by a small clique that could not consume them. They were apparently, however, garnered into a few hands to be sold to the many hands; but the many hands could not buy for long unless they had the purchasing power wherewith to purchase.

So when they had completed their program, when they had reached the absolute zenith of a program where they felt they would find the end of the rainbow, they found the end of the rainbow, Mr. President. They were seated on the pot of gold with nothing left in the hands of the masses by which the blessings of the country could be shared, and therein became the beginning of their own doom.

What was that result following the breakdown in 1929? I became a Member of the Senate in 1932, after serving as Governor for nearly 4 years down in the South. What did we do to meet the depression in 1929? Why, we undertook to perpetuate the same system. We sent for the same men who had brought on the destruction. We introduced a bill here creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We sent to Wall Street to bring down its celebrated masters of finance to tell the Government how to get out of its troubles. We might as well have sent for Dillinger to tell us how to capture Dillinger; we might as well have cried for a burglar to rescue us at night when we were molested on the highway; we might as well have set up a council in the penitentiary to pass on the pardon of the convicts there, as to have sent for the flower of Wall Street in 1929 to tell us how to correct a condition that Wall Street had brought on in this country.

When I came here in 1932 we had just passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation law. I thought from what I heard here, though I was not here to study the vote on the measure, that it was intended to do some good things. I now believe we perhaps made a mistake in passing it. It failed to accomplish its purpose. It could not have done it. That law undertook to finance some of the banks in distress; but when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loaned a dollar to a bank it had to give what they called "adequate and sound collateral", and there was no adequate and sound collateral for that day and time. They required collateral of from two to three dollars for every dollar they loaned, on the ground that they recognized that the country had begun to fade and to fail. If a bank had loaned a farmer a thousand dollars on a home, they would not take the collateral and lend a thousand dollars to the bank. They would require collateral of perhaps $3,000 in order to lend the bank $1,000. So the bank eventually had to deplete its resources in order to accommodate a small percentage of the people who were crying at the door to get their money out of the bank.

Then came the crash. I remember one night having a conference in a room in a hotel in this city, and I was asked by a distinguished member of the Hoover administration what could be done to save, even temporarily, the situation at that time existing.

As I remember it now, my answer was about as follows: All that he can do is to speedily provide funds to be spent by the States and municipalities under the supervision of the Federal Government. He will have to provide those funds today from the sale of bonds. Those bonds should be retired by a tax levied upon the big fortunes of this country, ultimately with a view of decentralizing the wealth of the United States.

Mr. President, that was one thing. Second, I said that he must ultimately look to shortening the hours of work, and I prescribed a third proposition, namely, that he should immediately have the Congress pass a law legalizing 2¾-percent beer.

I felt that if that were done the agitation over the liquor question would subside, that public work could be begun, there could be a start toward bringing fortunes down from the top, until they would reach such proportions that they would no longer be a menace to the independent, thriving business element of the country, and the United States could be on a solid, firm foundation, steadily improving, instead of steadily proceeding toward a goal where there would be paralysis of industry, commerce, and banking. My suggestions went amiss.

Mr. President, that having failed, we went along the old lines again—laissez faire—until the Chicago convention met. In the Chicago convention the fight was between the sound-money and sound-business element and the so-called "liberal element." There was just as much of a fight in the Chicago convention as there was in the Congress. I digress here to say that by the year 1929 this had ceased to be a party matter. There was a liberal element on this side of the Chamber and a liberal element on the other side of the Chamber, but when the depression of 1929 came on there was no longer any such thing as a party issue on the question I have mentioned.

There were not so many liberals on this side. I was more than a liberal; it was said sometimes that I was a radical liberal. But now I am a conservative liberal, when we consider some of the things which have been done. I, at least, was standing only for things within the Constitution; but those of us on this side were joined by an element on the Republican side. We were in the minority, considerably so, but we were the ones who were striking for the reform that the big, powerful influence of swollen business should be broken down.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I wonder whether the Senator from Louisiana believes that any of his conservative brethren here would think that his remedy was a constitutional one, when it proposes to limit the size of private fortunes. I am wondering whether he honestly believes or thinks that any of his conservative brethren here would ever agree with him that that is within the Constitution. He understands that I heartily sympathize with his viewpoint and his purpose in this respect, but I think he merely trifles with himself when he thinks that he will ever bring his conservative brethren to believe that he is within the Constitution in suggesting that sort of remedy.

Mr. LONG. I think the Senator from Washington is in error. I do not think that what I propose is ever disputed on the ground of its constitutionality. It is disputed on other grounds. No one disputes the right of Congress to fix such inheritance taxes as it may desire to fix.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Louisiana entirely overlooks the point I made, namely, that his brethren here will never agree with him, or that many of them will never agree with him, that he is advocating a constitutional remedy, or a remedy within what we are pleased to call the Government of our fathers, when he proposes to limit and curb large fortunes in the United States.

Mr. LONG. I realize that that is true. My friend the Senator from Washington states the fact, that some of my brethren will never admit it to be constitutional, or at least within the policy of the Government of our fathers.

There are in the Congress well-meaning brethren who think it an absurd proposition to agitate limiting the size of fortunes. With all regard for them, they and their fellow believers on the outside form the crowd which sent this country to the "demnition bowwows of hell," and they are the ones who are keeping it there today, and until we get an element in control in this country which will limit the fortunes of the big men, we will never have a restored prosperity in the United States.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I would not presume even to think that I could make a contribution to what the Senator from Louisiana is saying, but if he will permit me to interrupt for just a moment, I should like to bring to his attention, and to the attention of the other Members of this body, a statement from one of the leading conservative Republican editors of the United States, who presumes to tell us just what to do in meeting the depression in which we now find ourselves immersed. This is a very conservative gentleman speaking, and presuming to give us advice:

> Leaders everywhere maintain that we are in the midst of an economic war that is much worse than real war.
>
> And yet we are trying to remedy this revolutionary situation with the rigid, immovable restrictions of civil and constitutional law.
> It cannot be done; war should be declared just as it is when we are attacked by an outside enemy. The enemy on this occasion is within.

Parenthetically let me say that this is taken from one of the largest conservative magazines in the country, and this is a very conservative editor giving the American people political advice. The editor goes on with his advice:

> What we need now is martial law; this is no time for civil law. The President should have dictatorial powers. The edicts of the Constitution do not interfere with a general when he is fighting a battle; and the Constitution should not interfere with the remedies which are essential to get us out of this appalling depression.

The great Republican editor says to throw the Constitution in the ash can. And conservatives here do not challenge such blunt statements from their own journalistic mouthpieces.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, that is the view of the old, conservative, laissez faire crowd now. They have had their way in this country. They have carried it to hell. Now they prescribe a remedy and the thing will not work. It cannot work, because, unless they limit the size of fortunes in this country, there is no way of getting the money and the wealth out among the people.

The people out in the country who are trying to get hold of bed sheets enough to put on the beds cannot buy them because they have nothing with which to buy them. Yet the people are crying for those bed sheets, while we are forcing people to plow up cotton to keep from making any more sheets, because there is no place where they can be sold.

The people who were crying for meat to eat last year—and plenty of them were crying for meat; let us not fool ourselves about that a bit—could not get any meat because they did not have anything with which to buy meat. Yet we were having people kill pigs and hogs in order to keep from having too much meat on the market.

The old clique led us into that kind of nostrums. The same old gang came here to advise us that came to advise Hoover. There was no difference in the cliques that were around here. It was tweedledee and tweedledum.

The minute I saw my old friend Barney Baruch come here I recalled that I had seen him before. He hung around here during Hoover's administration, good man that he is. I suppose he is; I do not know a thing on God's earth about him, but I do know about what he advocates and what he does, so far as government is concerned. He hung around here when Hoover was President, trying to get us to adopt a sales tax. He came here to the Capitol and talked to his friends in the offices and in this building, urging us to adopt Hoover's policy. He went so far as to write an article in the American Magazine, which I read on the floor of the Senate, in which he lauded what was being done by Hoover and in which he said that Hoover was going to pull the country through, that everyone ought to follow Hoover, that Hoover had the thing down to the queen's taste, and that nobody need doubt that he was going to pull the country in just the direction it ought to go.

He was sitting at Hoover's feet, or Hoover was sitting at his feet; I do not know whether the hen came before the egg or the egg came before the hen, but one or the other was sitting at other's feet, and they carried the country slap-damn to hell. When the Democrats came in, the first man I saw around here was Mr. Baruch. I do not blame Mr. Baruch for being around here, but he was here.

What did we do? We have not varied very much from what Hoover was advocating. The only thing we have done has been to put into effect the things Hoover could not get the Congress to do. Hoover was not strong enough to get us to pass a law providing for the plowing under of cotton, but the Democrats were. Hoover tried it. Bless your soul, the Democrats could not claim this thing of plowing up cotton as their own child, because they would be claiming something that did not belong to them. Hoover was the man who proposed that, and if anything is ever done about it, all we have to say is that if Mr. Baruch was the man who proposed it to Hoover, and could not get it over with Hoover in the saddle, he also proposed it to Roosevelt, and we swallowed it, with Roosevelt in the saddle. That is all there is to that.

We came into power, and now, as the Senator from Washington reads, we have merely quieted the tumult by doling out money.

We are spending around $2.50 for every dollar the Government is getting. This year, according to one estimate, we are to spend $7,000,000,000 more than the Treasury takes in. We have to do it. If we were to stop doing it today, times would be worse than they ever were at any time since 1929. We cannot stop it on the present basis. We do not dare stop it, because the few people we are feeding—I say few in proportion to the number of people who need to be fed—cannot be neglected, for there is not a place on earth they could go to get something to eat and something to wear except for the little dole that is handed out to keep hair and hide together until prosperity can come back.

Do we hear any rattle of prosperity? All on God's earth we have, Mr. President, is the Government disgorging its funds, going farther and farther into the recesses of insolvency and bankruptcy, undertaking to transfuse blood to the suffering people who must have it.

Mr. President, we were in the Chicago convention, as I said to my friend from Washington. In 1932 we were not fighting with depression along a Democratic or a Republican line of thought. There were two lines of thought in America, there were two lines of thought in the Congress, and two lines of thought in the Chicago convention, and one line of thought in the other convention, the Republican convention.

The Republicans met in Chicago a few weeks before the Democrats met, and they took the position that we should have to go along the lines of rugged individualism until finally we should work our way out somehow, some way—God knows how. That was their line of thought.

We went into the Chicago convention with one set of men—such men as I might name, but I will not—feeling that we had to do as Hoover was saying we had to do, that is, to take the hard and rugged road, and somewhere, somehow, we would grind ourselves up into small particles, and some would die, some would starve and some would commit suicide, some would fall on the way, but eventually a few of us would live, and work the thing out, and start again. That is one line of thought.

The liberals then, however, had a different view, just as we had in Congress. We knew that the country had enough for every man to eat; that it had everything he wanted to eat. We knew that the country had enough for every man to wear, everything he wanted to wear. We knew that the country had enough houses for every man to be comfortably sheltered, with his wife and his children. We knew that the productive capacity of the country was so high that enough could be made that none need be denied anything like a convenience of life, and that few need to be denied any of the actual luxuries of life.

So we went into the Chicago convention; and as against the laissez faire doctrine of the Republican Party which had just met in Chicago, against the policy as it had been practiced here by Republicans and by Democrats of the conservative leaning, we advocated the liberal line of thought of Congress, of the insurgents on the Republican side and the liberal Democrats on this side.

What we should have done that day was practically to dissolve the two parties, and that is really what we did. There was not any race between Republicans and Democrats. There was a race between liberals and reactionaries. The race was not between democracy as represented by the old line of some Democrats, and the Republicans as represented by their faith brought up from 1860.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I wonder if the Senator from Louisiana at this time will define for me—and it is a definition I have long wanted to hear from the lips of the able Senator—the difference between the standpatter or reactionary on either side of this Chamber and the progressive or liberal. I think it is time that we write into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD some sort of definition—perhaps I do not see the distinction quite as plainly as I should, but there does not seem to me to be any great distinction—between the standpatter on this side of the Chamber and the standpatter on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. LONG. There is not.

Mr. BONE. Of course, I may not have been here sufficiently long to know the distinction.

Mr. LONG. There is no distinction.

Mr. BONE. I should like to have the Senator make the distinction plain.

Mr. LONG. I can state that there is no difference whatever between a standpat Democrat and a standpat Republican except as to who gets the job. The only difference between a standpat Democrat and a standpat Republican is in "who is in and who is out." A standpat Democrat is one who will do just what the standpat Republican does when he gets in. Of course, they cuss one another and raise a whole lot of hurrally, and put out all this folderol for public consumption, but there is no difference betwixt them when the label is taken off and one gets down to what is in the box. Then it is found that they are the same.

It is like the case of the old patent-medicine man who used to go around selling two different kinds of patent medicines. One he called "high popalorum" and the other he called "low popahirum." The only difference between the two bottles of medicine was that in the case of one he took the bark off the tree for the purpose of making that medicine beginning from the ground up, and in the case of the other medicine he used bark which he took from the tree beginning at the top and working toward the ground. [Laughter.]

That is the difference between a standpat Democrat and a standpat Republican. That is the difference between a liberal Democrat and a liberal Republican. There is no difference. There ought not to be two parties here called "Democratic" and "Republican." We ought to put on the label and fight under a liberal party, or we ought to fight under a reactionary party. That is all there is to it.

That is my definition for my friend from Washington [Mr. BONE], so that he may understand it more clearly. If anyone in this body desires to identify who is a genuine, simon-pure liberal and who is a genuine reactionary, I will say that those who are not in agreement with me are reactionary. [Laughter.]

So, Mr. President, we went into the Chicago convention to fight the battle of liberals. There was not any doubt about how the lines were drawn there. Wherever a liberal was met, it was usually found that he was with us, unless his State had instructed him to do something else, and then he was trying to go around behind the barrel and do something to keep us from accomplishing the ultimate purpose. One would see, perhaps, a man come in whose delegation was for Roosevelt, but he would come in and announce that he was not in sympathy with something we were trying to do, or something else, and he would muddy up the waters or mix up the cards, and give us a lot of trouble, and we had to work perhaps all night to get back something that such men tried to get away.

We had to fight against the States' favorite sons. I kept two favorite sons from being mentioned in that delegation, and kept my own delegation from mentioning me, so that makes three favorite sons I kept from being nominated. I myself reduced that favorite-son nomination battle by three.

So we fought the battle of the liberals, and we were supposed to have won the battle. The liberals went before the people of the country with a liberal platform and a liberal candidate against what had been and against what was in these various matters that affected this country.

We promised—when I say "we promised" I mean the platform promised, or the candidate for President promised, or those of us speaking with due authority promised—what? We promised, first, that we should limit the size of fortunes in the United States of America. That is what we promised. That is in black and white over the seal of the President of the United States. That is no. 1. The first thing we promised was that we should go out and scale down these big fortunes to frying size. We were going to see that there should not be any such distinction and difference between one man and the other, and one business and the other.

That is no. 1 on the promised calendar.

We promised, first, a limitation on the size of fortunes, the decentralization of wealth, the sharing of profits, and of the wealth of the land among the people equitably. That is No. 1.

We promised, secondly, that we were going to shorten the hours of labor, so that the work might be distributed among the people and invented mechanisms made a blessing rather than a curse to humanity. We promised a farm-relief program contrary to what Hoover had advocated, and we promised a currency managed by the friends of the people. It does not make any difference what else was in the platform; that was all that was needed. The fact of the case is the first two promises were all that were needed, namely, a limitation of the size of fortunes and a limitation of the hours of toil. Those were all that were needed; we did not need anything else.

We have placed on the statute books so many laws that I myself have not read half of them. I hold a book in my hand that contains in the neighborhood of 800 pages. I have voted for some laws here that have just about that much in them; I mean I have voted for one bill here at one time which was about as thick as this whole book is or, at least, half as thick. We have had bills here with 200 and 300 pages, starting at America and going up to the Arctic and coming back to America and going south to the Anarctic. We have enacted laws dealing with everything from chicken feathers on up to the size of litters of hogs. We have legislated about everything. There is not a thing on the topside of God's earth that we have not legislated about; nothing has been left out. We have regulated by law everything that can be regulated, and then we have regulated the regulators. Nothing has been left out; there has been nothing we have not done. We have enacted laws for the appointment of inspectors, and laws for the appointment of secretaries of inspectors, and laws for the appointment of inspectors of inspectors, and laws for the appointment of supervisors of inspectors, and for the appointment of inspectors of the supervisors. [Laughter.] We have not left anything out.

There is not a single subject on the topside face of the earth that has not been touched. We have provided for investigation and reform. Men have been sent out into the corners of the country to advise us as to how high the corn ought to grow; men have been sent out to say when the cotton ought to be picked; they have been sent out to see when the feathers ought to be taken off the back of a goose, and they have been sent out to see what size a litter of puppies ought to be; they have been sent out to regulate how many chickens should be hatched out of one nest. Nothing has been left out of what has been undertaken in the way of various forms of regulations since I have been in Congress. Yet where are we? We are right where we started, with one little exception; one improvement has been made, thank God. We have put a few more people on the dole than we had on the dole, and by putting a few more people on the dole and spending more money of the country it has been made possible to put a few more people on private rolls, but today we are right where we were. We are spending a little faster, we are spending a little more, putting more people on the dole; and if all the remedies and all the nostrums were discontinued today, we would be left in a worse condition than we were in since 1929.

We did one thing that I can say was really a good thing. We did provide for a guaranty of bank deposits, but do not forget what we had to do in order to get that law. I might be called one of the fathers of that law; if anybody has a right to be called a father of it, I am probably one of them. We stood here on the floor of the Senate and filibustered against one bank bill for 22 straight days; that is, it was said we were filibustering, but we were not doing any such thing. We were merely discussing the measure. But we stood here for 22 days to kill the first bank bill. Why? Because we knew it was not going to do the thing that was going to have to be done, in that it did not take care of the little banks and did not guarantee bank deposits. When they came in on the 5th of March, as I recall, with the first bill on the floor of the Senate, I fought that bill and its provisions, because it failed to take care of the little banks or to guarantee bank deposits.

I fought it on the 6th day of March; I fought it on the 7th day of March; I fought it every day, until finally the splendid Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] offered an amendment to a bill which we supported; and that is what brought about the only law of financial integrity of which I know that has been passed by the Congress, the law creating the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. We passed other laws and they are doing no good, and they can do no good.

What do we need to do? We do not need have more than one law; and I will take the responsibility for saying that I can write it on five sheets of paper; I will take the responsibility for saying that, common a lawyer as I am, I can sit down right here at this desk and write a law between now and the time the Senate shall recess today merely limiting the size of fortunes and limiting the hours of toil, and such a law would put this country on its feet instantly. I do not need any professors to help me; but I would call them in if I needed them, because I have nothing against professors. I would have been one myself if I could have absorbed some of the learning that they threw at me in those days and times. I rather compliment them that some of the things they used to try to teach me in the schools have taken hold in their own craniums. So I have nothing against them, but I do not need to call in anybody. If I were allowed to write and have passed a bill through this Congress limiting the hours of toil to such an extent that there would of necessity be a spreading of the work among the people who need the work, and if I were allowed to limit the size of fortunes and to spread the wealth among the masses, we would not need any other law or any nostrum or any regulation. We could take every law we have in all the books and go with them if we would simply pass a law limiting the size of fortunes and limiting the hours of toil. We would not need any more laws; but if we are going to allow a handful of people to own more of this country's things to eat and things to wear than all the remainder of the people put together, there is not any kind of regulation that is going to do any good. What good is it going to do to pass some kind of a social law when a man here has all the food to eat and will not let anybody have any of it?

What good is it going to do to pass some other kind of a law when another clique have all the wearing apparel and will not allow anybody to have any of it? Why will they not allow anybody to have any of it? Because the people have not got anything to buy it with; and, unless we decentralize wealth in this country, the people will not have anything to buy it with. There is no way for the people to get it. This snowball rolling down hill continues to grow.

Am I advocating something radical? I have the word of Mr. Harold L. Ickes, the Secretary of the Interior, in a magazine article published last Sunday in the New York Times, in which he says that we are out to redistribute wealth. Well, are we doing it? I will show in a minute whether we are or not. I have the word of Mr. Ickes, as I said, that we are now on the road to redistribute wealth. That is all I have ever been advocating. I have been pronounced the greatest of radicals in this country because I am advocating a redistribution of wealth, and yet Mr. Ickes says that is what we are out to do.

I have the word of the President of the United States that we must not allow the concentration of wealth. I have his word that we have got to redistribute wealth. I have his word that we must not allow conditions that will permit the concentration of wealth. But what are we doing to redistribute wealth? Are we redistributing wealth? Some have no better sense than to think we are. I will give the figures and show how we are doing it.

In 1931 the Democratic Party, through its President—that is, through the man who is now President—and through others of us, published the statements of 200 corporations; and we showed that those 200 corporations owned 45 percent of the entire property and industry of this country. That was in 1931; and President Roosevelt, before his nomination, said, "If we continue this, within a few more years a dozen concerns will own all the United States." That is what he said. How much do those same 200 corporations own today, in this year of our Lord 1934? Do they still own 45 percent, or have we, in carrying out our promises, reduced it down somewhat?

How much do these 200 corporations own that we said were bringing about this destruction? They do not own 45 percent? No. They own 55 percent. The percentage they own has increased 20 percent since the Democratic Party came into power in 1933. That is the fact, according to the estimate that has been published and not denied in the American Mercury magazine in an article prepared by Mr. Lawrence Dennis. He quotes some gentleman who made the study and gave those statistics. I think it might have been the same man who gave us the original figures to start with, although I am not sure as to that.

Now I will go a little further. I have here the figures on that, if I can find the paper; and in order that nobody will have any doubt about the direction in which we are going, I am going to give the figures from a source that no one will ever question, to prove that we who have said that we are going to decentralize wealth are on the road going in the other direction. I handed the paper, which I am undertaking now to find, to my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] yesterday, and while he may not have returned it, I will be able to supply a copy within a few minutes' time, and I will read it to the Senate.

There is a newspaper published in Philadelphia known as the "Philadelphia Record." I have been looking for that paper to turn conservative, because it bought out the New York Evening Post a while back. The Philadelphia Record is one of our liberal newspapers which supported us for the nomination and for the election. The Philadelphia Record is known as a "great nonpartisan organ", but friendly to our Democratic Roosevelt administration—more so than I am; that is, more so than I was known as being before the election and following the election.

The Philadelphia Record has in it an article which I am going to read when it is brought to me in a few minutes. The figures it has compiled demonstrate that instead of having decentralized wealth and redistributed it among the people, we have turned the hands of the clock back the other way. It does not make any difference what we do in the country as long as we allow 1 percent of the people to own more than the other 99 percent of the people put together.

It does not make any difference how big the crop is, if we have 125,000,000 people to feed and only 1,000,000 of them have anything to buy with—it does not make any difference whether we raise the crop or not. It does not make any difference what we pretend to do, if we allow 1,000,000 people to be the only people who can buy anything in the United States, it means disaster to the other 124,000,000 and ultimately it means disaster to the million themselves.

One class never abdicates—the ruling class. They have never been known to say that they had to relax in order to save their own interests and their own selves. Marie Antoinette never reformed until she reached the guillotine. The ancient kings could not be reformed until they were beheaded. Croesus went to the grave calling for more gold. This clique in the United States, surrounding themselves with everything that can be worn or eaten or built into a house, cries aloud for a prosperity that will give them more profits and greater wealth. Never will they see prosperity until something happens in this country that allows them to make more than they have now. They started out with 5 percent of them in imperialistic control of finance, and when they finally destroyed the other 95 percent to where they had nothing, then this 5 percent of our people, comprising about 6,000,000 people, became cannibals among themselves. They began to eat the hides of the millionaires. One millionaire began to eat another millionaire until the ruling class was brought down to 4 percent. Then the financial cannibals, not finding enough meat and marrow on the bones of the common herd, began to eat upon one another until it was 2 percent of the people who owned practically all the wealth of the country. Then the cannibals, having nobody else whose flesh could be eaten because the common people had steadily been reduced to a condition of serfdom, kept on eating at the hide and flesh of one another until today the ruling class is less than 1 percent. Twelve men met in one banquet hall and one of them said "We 12 control America and everything in it." He said, "Strange as that may seem, we do. You and I are the 12 men who control this country, and every nook and corner of it."

Mr. President, the article to which I referred a few moments ago has just reached me. It appeared in the Philadelphia Record. The only way it got national circulation was through being reprinted in the American Progress. I have the article from the Philadelphia Record as reprinted in The American Progress, and I am going to ask the clerk to read the article in a very audible and distinct tone so it may be understood. This is from the Philadelphia Record as reproduced in the American Progress.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to bring to his attention a matter pertinent to that article?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I should like to inform the Senator from Louisiana of my personal acquaintance with the eminent publisher of the Philadelphia Record, Mr. David Stearn, who is a very eminent citizen. He is not only a great publisher, as the able Senator has intimated, but had a great deal of daring to take the New York Evening Post, in view of its past vicissitudes. This gentleman was the publisher and editor of an evening paper in Springfield, in Illinois, the State which I have the honor to represent in part. I was through intimately and constantly in contact with him and his paper during the very long battle there to rescue the State from a bipartisan condition which I need not describe to this body. There is no one to whom credit is due more than to this gentleman, Mr. Stearn, for rescuing that State from a condition which was abhorrent. His democratic spirit, his republican sense of form of government, and, above all, his sense of justice, man to man, I can assure the Senator, would stimulate every enterprise in a public manner, as the Philadelphia Record bears evidence.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator. I am very glad to have that contribution. I know we will all be interested in the reading of the article from the Philadelphia Record. I ask that the clerk may now read the article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the American Progress, May 29, 1934]

THE RICH GET RICHER—PRESIDENT'S PROGRAM STUMBLING BECAUSE THERE HAS BEEN NO REDISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH, SAYS A GREAT LIBERAL NEWSPAPER, THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD

The rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer.

That was the case in the boom days of Coolidge. It also was the case of the depression days of Hoover.

And it still is the case in the recovery days of Roosevelt.

Let those shuddering Tories who moan about administration radicalism observe these figures from the Treasury:

Taxes paid by corporations increased from $62,801,192, for the March payment of 1933, to $92,200,858 for the March payment this year;

Taxes paid by persons with incomes of more than $5,000 jumped from $88,599,235 last year to $109,766,752 this year.

And taxes on incomes under $5,000 dropped from $14,974,689 to $12,936,734.

Concentration of wealth goes on at a more rapid pace under the new deal than before.

These figures, to be sure, are neither complete nor conclusive; but they show a definite trend, and the prospect is that the contrast will be even greater before the year is up. That is so because nearly 2 out of 3 of the taxpayers with incomes of more than $5,000 made only partial payments—while smaller taxpayers paid in full at the rate of 5 to 1.

As for those millions who pay no income taxes at all, the figures reveal that while wages increased 7.5 percent between January and April food costs soared 16.7 percent and the price of clothing and furnishings 27.5 percent.

It is obvious that President Roosevelt has not been radical enough in redistribution of wealth, the essential requirement for lasting recovery.

The Tory attackers of the President are the ones waxing fat on his present policies.

The reason for all this is plain.

There has been no redistribution of wealth—because no new credit has been created and distributed to our millions who lack buying power. That's the crux of it all.

Those social reforms achieved by the administration only appear radical to the Tories because they are so far behind the times. Other countries have had such reforms for many years.

Roosevelt's labor policy has seemed prolabor only because labor itself was punch-drunk throughout the Hoover regime.

The President's money policy, through the Warren gold-juggling scheme, appeared radical, but it was quite the reverse.

Indeed, with these factors: with nullification of N.R.A. by compromises on vital questions; with the approval of code after code with provisions that wipe out the spirit of the President's reemployment agreement—we have had the form of a new deal but the substance of the old deal.

That is why the President and Congress must go even further to the left—not in theory but in practice—unless the new pace of concentration of riches is to land us again in the mire.

The Wirts and the Rands and the other baiters of the President stand confounded.

The same men of money who controlled the bulk of the Nation's wealth in 1929, who controlled still more of it in 1933, are possessed of more yet in 1934.

If this picture does not silence the Tories, it discredits them completely.

It shows why the administration must change its money policy and redistribute wealth by creating new credit for the millions on the short end of our economic horn of plenty.

The new deal is still hamstrung by the old deal's queer deck. deck.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, that article is not a criticism. It is a defense. It is an article from a Roosevelt Democratic newspaper, and the statements in it are very concise and to the point. Since it has been read by the clerk, I shall not again, of course, read it; but it is obvious from the figures given that the comments are justified.

The writer of the article says that the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few people is going on now, under the new deal, at a greater rate than it has ever gone on at any preceding time. That is something of which we ought to take note. The President says we must decentralize wealth. Mr. Ickes says we are on the road to redistribute wealth. I should like to get hold of him and put him on the right road.

I used to be a drummer traveling from place to place. That was before the day of the automobile when there was usually about one train a day. Coming on up through east Texas and north Texas and Louisiana and Oklahoma and all through that country we would have a passenger train, and we would get up at midnight and take it and sleep half the time in one town and the rest of the night in another town; but for the most part we had to travel by horse and buggy. Sometimes we traveled with a team of mules and a buggy of some kind; sometimes with one horse and a buggy. Very often I started somewhere—because most of the time I would drive myself—and I would get on the wrong road, and when I met some old man down around the forks of the creek who said to me, "Brother, you are on the wrong road; turn your mules around and go back for 5 miles and take the left-hand road", I thanked him for it.

I want to tell Mr. Ickes and Mr. Roosevelt that they are on the wrong road. If this article is true and these statistics are right, if they mean to redistribute wealth—and I will take them at their word—they are on the wrong road. They have started out to give the poor man a better break, but it is not possible to give the poor man a better break when the rich people are getting more and the little man is getting less.

I showed here on the floor of the Senate the other day that 3,000 farmers' places were being sold every day for mortgages that they could not pay, and I undertook to have enacted into law what was known as the "Frazier bill." Congress is going to adjourn very soon. We ought to have adjourned long ago. For the good we are doing, I am sorry we ever met; but Congress is going to adjourn very soon—for what? In order to give the people a rest—from what? From what?

Mr. President, we are going to give them a rest, but we are going to turn them over to bureaus and the bureaucrats whom we have brought in to administer these things. What man who wants to escape from a bear wants to be met by a lion? What man who runs into a house to get refuge, and puts his hands up against the wall, wants a snake to bite him? Yet we are going to adjourn Congress—and God help us to adjourn it! The quicker we do, the better off we will be. The quicker we do, the better off the country would be, if we could adjourn some of the rest of the things we have done; but we have not done a thing on God's earth to do or to undo what we had promised as essential to the American people.

Where is the law to redistribute wealth? Please tell me. Where is the law to give the little man more of what is in the country? Tell me where it is. Oh, yes; we put him on a dole. Why, we could get a hand-out long before that in the old days. It was not anything new for somebody to walk up to the back porch and ask to be given something to eat. I have seen that kind of men many times in my day and time; and as long as I had a dime in my pocket I never failed to feed a man who asked me for something to eat when he was hungry, or, whether or not he was hungry, I would give it to him rather than take the chance. We had that long ago. We had people asking for a little something to get something to eat long ago; but I did not think the time ever was going to come when we should be told that we ought to be satisfied to make tramps out of the whole American people; that all America is to be a tramp and a bum. The only difference is, instead of going up to somebody else's porch to get a hand-out, the United States Government has to give the hand-out, because now nobody has anything. The only difference is that everybody has been reduced to the point where the man who used to be able to give his unfortunate brother something to eat is now a bum himself.

The middle class is gone. Oh, yes; we once had a middle class, but it is gone now. Congress is adjourning—adjourning with a great record—oh, yes; a great record! I helped in this record. If the Lord ever grants me forgiveness for some of the things I have helped do here I shall feel that I have accomplished a great deal. Taxes paid by corporations have increased; taxes paid by the little man have decreased; wealth in the hands of the big man has increased; wealth in the hands of the little man has decreased; yet we talk about being on the road to the redistribution of wealth! How are we?

The N.R.A. is blowing up topside and bottom. God help it to blow up! The faster it blows up, the better. The worst thing ever done was on the night here when we voted the N.R.A. into law, and I said so at the time. The nostrums with which we were going to do good things have operated to the exact reverse. Now we come along with this bill; and that brings me to a discussion of this bill.

We have a silver bill before us. No; do not misunderstand me; we have not a silver bill before us. We have a bill not quite so drastic as the last bill was. The last currency law that we enacted was a far more drastic measure than this bill. I hope that my conservative Republican friends who have criticized this bill on the ground that it is creating too much money are not smiling inwardly as they are making their criticism. I hope that my friend from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who spoke here nearly all day yesterday, did not really fool himself into believing some of the things he said. He need have no fear. As far as the results that will be accomplished are concerned, I had a whole lot rather have the Senator from Ohio write the bill than to have the bill we have here now. So far as the effect is concerned, we are not going to get any more silver money—not a dime of it. I know that. You may not know it, but you do not have to knock me down more than one time for me to know that I have hit the ground. I know we are not, because I know what we got the last time, and I know who is going to administer the law. I know just as well as I know anything that when we get through with the Treasury Department, whatever we get out of there in the way of currency or monetary expansion can be placed in a man's right eye without doing a single cell the least harm or damage.

I know we are not going to get any more silver money, because I have been to market once and came back with an empty basket, and it is not necessary to send me up that hill again. I know what this thing is. I have been at this business long enough to know. It is not necessary to take me over that ground again.

I know what the bill is. Somebody may not want to say what he thinks about this thing, but, bless your soul, I am going to say what I think about it, and Congress is going to adjourn with me here saying what I said the first day I came here, and the results I have pointed out every day.

I know what this bill is going to do, and everybody else who wants to be frank with himself knows. The trouble is, everybody is afraid to think, because when they reason out the matter they are going to reach the same conclusion that I have already reached. When I came here in 1932, in the month of January, I said that we would look back on January 1932 as a good month, and we did. A few months later I said that we would look back on that time as a good month, and I say right now that if we should discontinue the expenditures that are being made by the Federal Government to keep people on the dole and to provide some of the employment that is going on in this country today—expenditures that are coming out of the Government today that they have no way to provide the money for unless they change the tax program—we will find that the country will go right back to a worse condition than it was in at any time since 1929.

Where are we going to get this money? We have not started on the worst of it. If the concentration of wealth is worse now than it was then, if times are worse now than they were then—and they would be if we should discontinue the dole—how are we going to meet the future? What is going to happen when we get down to the point where we have to pay this $32,000,000,000, and seven more billion, and seven more billion?

Conditions will not be any better next year than they are this year. They will not be any better with Congress gone than they are with it here. We now owe $30,000,000,000, or somewhere around that figure. There will be seven or eight billions more, and when we get through with that we will have to pay back seven or eight billions more, and when we get through with that, we will have to pay back eight or nine billions more, and then there will be more the next year, and we will have to pay back nine or ten billions more.

We have not started on the public debt. We have it up to around $30,000,000,000, and we had better be figuring up around $40,000,000,000 the way we are going, and after we get it to $40,000,000,000, we will have to be figuring on $50,000,000,000.

Where is the money coming from? Who is to pay off this deficit? Is it expected that the little man at the bottom will pay it off, the 125,000,000 people, most of whom have not anything to live on today? Are they expected to pay it? Who is to pay it? Who is going to pay this money?

If we start to saddle it on the rich, they holler "bloody murder." They form a demagogic party and make all of us members of it when we start to take a little from them.

I have proposed amendments, other Senators have proposed amendments, in a half-way effort to keep the Government from spending more than is being taken in, and we cannot get that kind of amendment or law across.

Who is going to pay the money? Who is to pay the money we are spending this year? Who is to pay the money we spent last year? We still owe it. The debt continues to mount. It is increasing. Who is going to pay it?

Are we to impose a sales tax and take it out of the hide of the little man who has not anything with which to buy food now? Are we to continue the kind of tax system we have now, and ultimately take it away from the man at the bottom? Who is going to pay, unless we change the laws we have on the books now? The condition will be a great deal worse than it is now, and the next year worse. We are traveling now the very worst route we could go. It would have been better, if we were not going to take a solvent view, if we were not going to topple off the fortunes of the big until we had brought them down to a moderate size, and use the money as a means for rehabilitating the people at the bottom—it would have been better, if we were not going to do that, so far as the public debt and financial solvency is concerned, if we had never tried any of these nostrums at all. Yet we have to try them, because for the present that is the only thing we can do that will make it possible for people to be fed.

Mr. President, now we come to the currency question. I have discussed the concentration of wealth, brought about, as I have shown, with the currency used as a vehicle; brought about by demonetizing silver in the initial stage and keeping it demonetized; brought about through the mechanisms and inventions which increased production, but which forbade consumption, because there was not purchasing power in the hands of the people who had to consume. It is desired that people buy things. The producers cannot sell the things after they are manufactured because the public, it is said, will not buy. The public will not buy because the public cannot buy. The public has not anything it can use with which to buy. The public has no wealth. The wealth is in the hands of the people who control the manufacture.

The very man who is making the things he wants to sell to the American people cannot find a market for them because the people who will have to use them and have to wear them out or have to eat the things which are manufactured or grown from the soil cannot buy them because they have not purchasing power. The wealth is in the hands of the master who makes the product, and nothing is being done to distribute the wealth, notwithstanding Mr. Ickes, and notwithstanding other and sundry satellites who say we are on the road. They are having one hell of a time getting anywhere. [Laughter.] They are on the road. I never saw anybody go so fast in my life. If they are on the road, they are like the boy I told about one day who was trying to go to school when it had rained and the ground was so slippery that every time he took one step toward the schoolhouse he slipped back two steps. [Laughter.] Finally one of his neighbors came along and said, "Well, the way you are losing ground, the only way you will ever get to school is to start back home. That is the way for you to gain a step."

If Mr. Ickes and Mr. Roosevelt and the balance of them are on the road to redistribute wealth, they are slipping too fast, and they had better turn around and go in the other direction. They are not accomplishing anything of the kind. On the contrary, the statistics, the records, and everything that has been compiled, show that we are going exactly in the wrong direction.

Now we are in the death days of the Congress. We are now fixing to adjourn the Congress. In other words, we are now fixing to let the Congress expire. What is there left for Congress to stay in session for, anyway? What are the powers of the Congress?

There was a power of Congress to coin money. We have surrendered that, so that there is no need to stay here to coin money.

There was a power to fix the value of money. We have surrendered that power. We have not that any more.

There was a power of Congress to raise revenue by taxation and tariffs. We have surrendered most of that. That is practically all gone.

Then we had a power to fix certain regulations over agriculture. We have not only given away power Congress had, but we gave away some powers that Congress did not even have, and the bureaus did some things which Congress did not authorize, and now they want Congress to authorize them. What is there left to Congress, as we review these various things?

There was the power to regulate the banking system. We have surrendered that.

There was the power to impose tariffs, of course. We have already surrendered that.

What is there left to keep Congress in session? Why this formality, this waste of time? Why this passing backward and forward? There is nothing more Congress can do unless it is to get back upon the level ground and enact what was promised the American people, namely, laws looking to the limitation of fortunes.

I will come to the pending bill, because, having discussed the things which led up to it we find that they are so directly in point that I fear I may lose the attention I am trying to attract to the immediate matter before the Senate.

We have before us a silver bill. We passed a measure last year under which we allowed the President to do most anything he wanted to do with the currency, with gold or with silver. To put it in plain language, there is nothing that can be done with gold or silver or paper that the President and the Secretary of the Treasury have not authority to do today. If anybody can think of anything that needs to be done about the money question that the President has not power already to do, I do not know what it is. I will pause now to see if anybody knows of anything the President is forbidden to do under the present law that we have on the statute books. Very well.

I do not suppose anybody will dispute the statement that the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, whom the President appoints, can do anything they want to do about money today. They can make it out of weeds, they can make it out of chicken feathers, they can make it out of silver, they can make it out of gold, they can make it out of paper; they can fix it at one value one day and something else the next day; they can decrease the gold content of the dollar, they can raise the gold content of the dollar, they can swap, they can barter, they can trade. There is nothing left they cannot do.

The measure we passed did not work, so we came back with another silver bill. And what is this silver bill? I will read it:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the short title of this act shall be "Silver Purchase Act of 1934."

SEC. 2. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the proportion—

Here is the thing. "It is declared." They have not "Be it enacted" there, they have not even "Be it resolved." It reads:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the proportion of silver to gold in the monetary stocks of the United States should be increased, with the ultimate objective of having and maintaining one-fourth of the monetary value of such stocks in silver.

That is the policy. What was the policy last year? Was it not the policy last year to expand the currency? Did we not pass a measure last year the policy of which was to provide more money in this country, including gold and silver and paper money? What happened with that thing we passed last year that had a policy all the way through it, if it had anything at all?

We had $6,068,000,000 worth of money last year when we passed the measure the policy of which was to expand the money market and expand the currency. How much have we today, with that policy? We passed the measure, and we fixed the policy, if there is anything to a law. We have $5,300,000,000 worth of money now. We passed a law, when we had $6,000,000,000, to increase the money. That was last year. We have today $700,000,000 less money than we had last year, when we passed a measure to expand the currency. So gentlemen may think they are getting something out of this policy.

"Oh", they say, "you know that is the policy; that is the policy. We are getting a lot; we are getting a policy." Yes; we are getting a policy, like the old, ancient story, when they went to the king's house at night and woke him up in his delirium and said to him, "Your Majesty, we demand our rights", and the king poked his head out of the window and said, "I will give you your rights. They are yours." And the crowd went away perfectly happy.

We came in last year demanding more money, and we were told, "That is the policy. That is the intent." And we went away, and after a year's time we have $700,000,000 less money than we had before we wrote the law.

We now come back and say, "It is the policy to increase silver", and well may it be.

Let us read some more of this valuable legislation which we are called upon to enact into law.

Section 3: I do not see why a section is given to this thing. It is the same song, and the same verse, down through the whole bill. There is no need to give any section number to it. The bill can be taken, wadded up, and put into a gun barrel for all the effect it will have in law. It will make no difference. We will read on from this valuable manuscript:

SEC. 3. Whenever and so long as the proportion of silver in the stocks of gold and silver of the United States is less than one-fourth of the monetary value of such stocks, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase silver, at home or abroad, for present or future delivery with any direct obligations, coin, or currency of the United States, authorized by law, or with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, at such rates, at such times, and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem reasonable and most advantageous to the public interest.

In other words, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to buy silver whenever he thinks it is a good thing to do so. And he says he does not think it ever is a good thing to do. That is what he has said. Wonderful work we have done here after 6 months of study. We have actually authorized a man who says he does not think we ought to buy any silver at all, who says it is bad business and rotten finance—we have authorized him to buy silver whenever he thinks it is a good thing to do. It is a great accomplishment, Mr. President, and I will go home and put up my tombstone for that part of the bill if I vote for it. We cannot do any harm by voting for it, and we cannot do any good by voting for it. It does not make any difference, not a bit of difference, how we vote. It is just like spilling water out on the ground.

I continue to read:

Provided, That no purchase of silver shall be made hereunder at a price in excess of the monetary value thereof.

There is no necessity of providing that he cannot do anything, because he is not going to do anything anyway.

SEC. 4. Whenever and so long as the market price of silver exceeds its monetary value or the monetary value of the stocks of silver is greater than 25 percent of the monetary value of the stocks of gold and silver, the Secretary of the Treasury may, with the approval of the President and subject to the provisions of section 5, sell any silver—

And so forth. We are not worried about that. He is not going to buy any silver under this law. Suppose he did buy a little silver. What good would that do? That does not make silver money. Later on, however, I will show the Senate what he can do.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Treasury—

Now this gets to be interesting to me. It has all been explained to me, and I want the Senate to understand, Mr. President, that I understand this bill. I am one of the few men in the Senate who actually understands the bill. It has been explained to me.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to issue silver certificates in such denominations as he may from time to time prescribe in a face amount not less than the cost of all silver purchased under the authority of section 3.

Now get that. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to buy silver at 45 cents an ounce. Nearly all the silver experts have left the Chamber except me, but I understand it, and so I will explain it. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue currency on the basis of what the silver costs. The silver costs 45 cents an ounce, and he is authorized to issue so much currency as he spends for silver.

Silver on a monetary basis is at $1.29 an ounce. That is the basis of the dollar we have today. We have $850,000,000 worth of silver in the United States, and it is on a basis of $1.29 an ounce. The Secretary of the Treasury is going out and buy silver at 45 cents an ounce, and issue currency on a basis of such money as he has paid for the silver. That means instead of issuing it on the basis of $1.29 he is going to issue it on the basis of 45 cents. One silver dollar has $1.29 worth of silver behind it. Another silver dollar has 45 cents worth of silver behind it.

It is said that is going to work all right. Well, how is it? We have today in the silver dollar 0.78 troy ounce of silver. In $10 we have today 7.8 troy ounces of silver. That is just 16 times as many ounces of silver as there are ounces of gold in a gold dollar.

We issue silver today at a ratio of 16 to 1, except since the gold dollar has been devalued down to 59 cents I would say that we issue silver on a ratio of 28 to 1. It is a ratio of 28 to 1 today after the gold dollar has been devalued.

The Secretary of the Treasury is going out to buy silver. The present-day market for silver is 45 cents an ounce, and if the Secretary buys a thousand dollars worth of silver that costs him a thousand dollars, he is going to issue a thousand dollars worth of currency and hold in the vaults, according to the explanation which is made, three times as much silver as he bought, to back up the 45-cent dollar.

Mr. President, that policy may be sound. If it is, very well. Senators cannot tell me that we can have 1 silver dollar being spent in this country on the basis of $1.29, and currency issued on a basis of 45 cents an ounce of silver, and make the two harmonize. I do not care what experts tell me they can do, I do not see how it can be done, and I do not believe the Secretary can do any such thing. To me it is an impossible law, which mixes up the situation, which gums up the cards. I will show how much further they have gummed up the cards.

There shall be maintained in the Treasury as security for all silver certificates heretofore or hereafter issued and at the time outstanding an amount of silver in bullion and standard silver dollars of a monetary value equal to the face amount of such silver certificates.

What is that going to be?

All silver certificates heretofore or hereafter issued shall be legal tender.

I am now going to pass over this other business which does not mean anything at all.

SEC. 6. Whenever in his judgment such action is necessary to effectuate the policy of this act, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, with the approval of the President, to investigate, regulate, or prohibit, by means of licenses or otherwise, the acquisition, importation, exportation, or transportation of silver and of contracts and other arrangements made with respect thereto.

In other words, he can stop anybody from buying any silver.

SEC. 7. Whenever in the judgment of the President such action is necessary to effectuate the policy of this act, he may by Executive order require the delivery to the United States mints of any or all silver by whomever owned or possessed.

That is like the gold law. Everyone can be made to bring in all the silver he has. I do not know how far that is going to be carried out; whether that means that the silver vases and the silver knives and tablespoons are to be exempted or just what silver that is going to include, but under this bill, whenever the Treasury wants to, it can bring in all the silver.

Someone has an idea that nationalizing silver is going to be a great thing. I never have thought so. I will not criticize it. I cannot see it. Perhaps it will.

Now we come to section 8. Here is an absolute stipulation in the law. Section 8 says:

Schedule A * * * is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subdivision to read as follows.

Instead of reading all of section 8 I will state what it is. The Treasury takes all the silver anyone has bought heretofore and sells hereafter and makes him pay a tax of 50 percent of the difference between what he bought it for and what he sells it for. In other words, if this measure is constitutional—and I do not argue the Constitution any more—anyone who sells silver can be made to pay 50 percent of the difference between what he paid for it and what he sold it for.

This proposal to place a 50-percent tax on all the profits realized on all transfers of silver bullion after May 15, no matter how long previously the profits may have accrued, is so obviously confiscatory, discriminatory, and unjust as to be incredible, except on the theory that all its implications have not been considered.

It has been for years just as legal and proper for a citizen of the United States to own silver as to own rubber or cotton or tin or nickel or platinum or real estate or stocks.

Let us assume the case of a citizen who several years ago, in 1932 or 1931 or 1929, bought a stock of stuff, whether it was copper, or lead, or ore, or steel, or what not, and we come along today and say to him, "It has become necessary to nationalize that commodity or call it in to Government use, and now in order to call it in we are going to make you pay one-half of the difference between what that commodity was valued at when you got it and what it is valued at now."

Suppose you took cotton, suppose you took copper, you would have the right to say today to a man, "Here, you have got so much stuff which you bought last year; now it is worth so much, and we will not let you dispose of that or consume it unless you pay us one-half of the difference." What would you do? You would take your cotton across the line to Canada, where you have a right to take it and to have command of it. What they are going to do is this: They are going to destroy the market for silver in the United States, and we had better not pass this bill at all if we have got to have section 8 in it in order to pass it. If, in order to give the President the same power he already has, we have got to provide that the American people cannot deal in silver as it can be dealt in anywhere else in the world, then the best thing we can do is not to pass this measure at all.

Let us assume the case of a citizen who, in 1932, bought silver when it was selling between 25 and 30 cents simply as an investment, simply on the theory that a commodity which had been money for almost all the people of the world for thousands of years and was still the only money of more than half the people of the world and was selling at the lowest price in all history in relation to gold, was a sound investment, the natural increment of which might offer at least as good and perhaps a better equivalent interest return than bonds or stocks or real estate even at their then greatly depreciated prices. Such has not altogether proved to be the case, for many stocks and bonds and certain commodities such as tin and rubber have risen far more than has the price of silver.

Mr. President, there are many commodities in this country that have already increased in value far more than has silver. Silver is not the only commodity that has gone up. Do we not say that wool has gone up? Do we not say that cotton has gone up? Do we not say that wheat has gone up? Do we not say that copper has gone up? Do we not say that lumber has gone up? Well, are we going to place a tax of 50 percent of the difference on everything that has increased in value simply because a man has it and the Goverment wants it? If the Government wants to steal it, it ought to say so. Did it ever say that it was going to take it from the man without allowing any value? It has never been suggested that a confiscatory tax in addition to the regular income tax should be levied on profits realized in cotton or wheat or chemicals or iron or lumber or real estate. Yet it is apparent that the rise in the great fundamental commodities with a world market has been about proportional to the depreciation of the dollar on the world market exactly as has the rise in silver.

The decrease in the price of these other commodities, based upon the depreciation of the gold content of the dollar, has been in about the same proportion for all. Why should the citizens who happened to decide upon silver as a vehicle of investment be penalized by a retroactive and highly discriminatory confiscation of what may, in some cases, be a large fraction of his wealth. Why should he be singled out for ex post facto punishment for doing a thing that was not only not illegal, or, in any sense, immoral or against public policy but was, indeed, directly in furtherance of public policy as repeatedly proclaimed by the Government, which was to raise the price of all commodities. The Government has said, "We are going to raise the price of all commodities, go out and buy them." As a result, the people bought them, and thus a stimulation was afforded through which commodity prices were caused to rise. Yet we now propose to say, "If you made a bad investment and the value went down, that loss is yours; but if you made a good investment, such as silver, and it goes up, then the Government takes half the profit." That is a nice thing for the Government to do. Dillinger would be hung for that; but the United States Government does it according to this proposition from the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury.

I understand that there is nobody insisting on this provision but the Secretary of the Treasury; my understanding is, though I may be misinformed about it, that the Secretary of the Treasury is the only man insisting upon this confiscatory monstrous provision that the Government is going to make the people give it half the difference in the value of the property as of the time they bought it and at the present time, simply because the commodity went up instead of going down.

In that connection, if I may be permitted, in a few moments, I will discuss the statement which the Government issued a few days ago to people who bought silver, trying to have it appear that the man who invested his money in silver was disloyal to the American Government because it had gone up and had a chance to go up still higher.

The action of the considerable group of citizens who bought silver bullion in the dark days of 1932 was certainly calculated to and did actually measurably support and promote the price of silver, and consequently in all human probability the price of all other commodities because it is an ancient and widely held economic theory that there is a direct causal relationship between the price of silver and of all other commodities. Indeed, that theory was officially adopted and authenticated and declared by the President himself in his proclamation of December 1933. Yes, Mr. President, that was the President's proclamation.

Moreover, the Government of the United States was the owner of a large quantity of silver bullion which had greatly depreciated in price and had recently added stocks of silver in payment for war debts. Consequently, any citizen who bought a quantity of silver and whose continued ownership removed such quantity from the world market was not only not doing a thing in any sense damaging to the public interest but was actually rendering a public service.

Those who went out and bought silver on the exchange or bought silver in the open market made money for the Government. They helped to raise the price of silver bullion which the Government owned and was acquiring, and the Government made a profit as the result of the spirit that was brought about in the silver market.

There has been much loose talk about the speculation in silver. There is no principle of our law or of our historic national policy that denounces legitimate investment in fundamental commodities like silver, cotton, wheat, and tobacco as criminal or antisocial. There was not anything against a man buying gold, so far as that is concerned. But if our historic attitude toward legitimate investment is to be revolutionized and a new policy of discouraging and penalizing it is to be adopted then:

First. Such punitive measures should be made to apply only to investments in the future and not to that which is past.

Second. If past purchases of silver is to be penalized then past investment in securities and real estate and all other commodities should be equally penalized. In other words, if we are going to penalize a man who bought silver because it went up, then we ought to penalize a man who bought land if it went up.

Third. It is impossible ever sharply to distinguish speculation from investment; but insofar as a border line can be drawn between them, surely the man who bought silver on May 1 and sold it the next day, a day-to-day in-and-out trader, tends to fall on the side of the speculator, and a man who bought silver 2 or 3 years ago for permanent retention and still owns it tends to fall on the side of the investor. Yet, it is proposed in this case to penalize the legitimate investor and let the speculator go free.

Let us take the case of a citizen who invested in silver in 1932 at 25 cents an ounce. In the first place, it took real courage to buy silver then at 25 cents. It was the lowest price at which silver had sold since records had been kept. Nobody wants to buy anything when it is down at the bottom; it is not human nature to do it. But let us assume that a profound and possibly protracted and costly study of history and of world conditions, and especially of conditions in the great world of the Orient, induced the conviction that silver was one of the safest, soundest investments in the world and likely to enhance in value over a period of years. Let us assume that he then had no thought of the remonetization of silver by our Government, an assumption wholly reasonable in the light of the preceding 60 years of our history. Let us assume that he never advocated remonetization—and, indeed, let us go further to assume that he opposed remonetization by this country as not being in the interest of the public. If he sold his silver on May 14, he would have paid the regular tax on his profit and been the owner of a certain quantity of wealth. But if he waited until the 16th to sell, or if he still retains his silver, then a large and possibly disastrous fraction of his wealth as of May 14, 1934, is to be unequitably appropriated by his Government—notwithstanding there was no more talk of remonetization on May 16 than there was on May 14 and no material change of price between the two dates.

Finally, let us take the case of one selling after May 15 at a profit of $10,000 silver that he has held for 2 years, and let us assume that on other dealings in silver prior to May 15 he suffered a loss of $10,000. He is now exactly even, having no net profit in silver transactions, and yet a tax of $5,000 is to be imposed upon him, which is a sheer confiscation of a part of his original savings and in the nature of an ex post facto penalty for his daring to do a perfectly legal thing; namely, deal in silver. Can anything be imagined more unjust than that?

It has been urged by the Treasury that no citizen should be allowed to profit by the execution of a monetary policy; but plenty of them have been allowed to do it. They have been allowed to ship gold out of this country and ship it back to this country. After the Government had prohibited them from shipping gold out of this country, they were allowed to mine it and ship the newly mined gold out and bring it back, and they almost doubled the value of it. The Treasury published the name of everybody who bought or owned any silver. Why did they not publish the name of everybody who bought or shipped abroad gold? That would have been a very interesting thing to have done, if they wanted to get somebody on the map. They had just as much right to do the one as the other. A profit by millions of citizens is the inevitable consequence of any change in monetary policy. Moreover, the Government is understood currently to be buying corn and perhaps other grains for relief purposes. Buying corn for hunger relief is at least as solemn and sacred an exercise of government power as the buying of silver for monetary relief; yet there is no suggestion of a retroactive penalty on profits in corn, the rise in which has actually been greater than the rise in silver.

Finally, there is to be considered the obvious feature of double taxation, so repugnant to American traditions and so strikingly involved in this proposal.

One can quite understand the justice and propriety of a tax upon such profits as might result from a rise caused by the actual buying of silver by our Government if and when it is engaged in the gigantic and, it may be, impossible task of adding 1,300,000,000 ounces to our silver reserves; but the profit on which such tax is computed should not include profit already accrued before the purchasing program began.

What is the danger of silver being remonetized? Before I pass to that subject, however, let me say that I do not favor section 8 of the bill at all, and I know of very few others who do. I know it has very little support so far as the real, sincere belief of Senators is concerned. It ought not to be tolerated. If the bill is passed with section 8 in it, it will mean that the United States will have no market for silver here at all. If we are not going to have a market for silver in America, we are attempting to turn one wheel backward while at the same time we are trying to turn the other one forward.

During the delivery of Mr. LONG's speech,

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. I have here a very interesting telegram from Mr. Richard T. Harriss on the subject of this bill, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

NEW YORK, N.Y., June 7, 1934.

Senator HAMILTON F. KEAN,
Senate Office Building:

Irrespective of the underlying merits or demerits of the silver bill, the proposed tax of 50 percent on the silver profits of American citizens is unfair and highly discriminatory against our citizenship, for no tax can be levied against a British subject on profits he makes in selling silver in London to the American Government. This applies with equal force to the proposed limitation of 50 cents per ounce to be paid to an American citizen while being prepared to pay $1.29 an ounce to a foreigner. I vigorously protest this unjust discrimination against our people and in favor of foreigners. Furthermore, it means the closing of silver trading in New York, which has now become the world's great silver market, putting entirely out of business and employment those engaged in trading in silver and turns back to London a monopoly on the world's silver trade.

RICHARD T. HARRISS.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me for a brief period before he calls for a quorum?

Mr. LONG. Very well; I yield to the Senator from Illinois, if he wishes, with the understanding that I do not lose the floor. I wish to call a quorum, however.

Mr. LEWIS. Personally I do not care for a quorum.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator call a quorum for me when he finishes his remarks?

Mr. LEWIS. I shall do so.

Mr. LONG. Very well; with that understanding I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

THE THREATENED STEEL STRIKE AND THE NEED TO DEFY LAWLESSNESS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, there are some views which I think ought to be expressed by someone who is a Member of the Congress—either of the Senate or the House of Representatives—on the steel strike as now threatened. We gather from public reports that this menace is resting seriously at this time upon this Republic.

I notice that the very able educator and eminent Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], in opening his discussion yesterday on the silver bill, alluded to the opening remark of a great orator as made in Indianapolis, where that orator said, "The past rises before me like a dream." If my memory serves me with accuracy the observations submitted by the distinguished orator alluded to the tragic subject of the past involving the Civil War. I should like to appropriate for this moment the observation of the distinguished Senator from Ohio and make it applicable to some matters which will revive to the minds of all those present the necessity of very serious consideration of the events I now recount and its threat of repeating the disastrous experience.

The threat which seems to arise today of a strike in the steel industry, the complications between those who may be said to be the workers in steel and those who are the proprietors, afford justification for serious reflection on the part of the people of America. I invite those who honor me with their attention to the observations which I intrude at this time. It is to recall that in politics more than all things else there is nothing new and that we repeat under similar conditions the same result.

When General Harrison was President of the United States, in the spring of 1892 a certain force in this Government was enabled to take charge of the general system of administration and so paralyze it that they brought on this Government what was known as the "Homestead strike." In that strike business was demoralized, merchants were terrified, toilers were assailed, the honorable Government impaled on confusion, and throughout the world America was impeached for lawlessness, and subsequently a very just verdict of condemnation branded upon her for allowing brutal murder on the highways. The unhappy result of that strike and what followed it fell politically upon the administration then in power, as the subject matter generally—as the able junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who participated so greatly in the events of that hour, now parenthetically observes—was made a political issue by each and all the political parties then in controversy. Upon the Government itself it left a very deplorable fate because of what might be called the inefficiency of government in the failure to preserve law and order.

Mr. President, Grover Cleveland became President of the United States following Mr. Harrison. It will be recalled by those around me that my memory is just when it invites into consideration that a similar industrial situation arose under Cleveland. There was excited in this Government an organized assault upon the peace of the Nation, upon the honor of its laws, upon the order of the daily life of a law-abiding people. This was in what were called "strikes" growing out of the confusion touching the railroad question. There followed what we now recall as the "Debs strike." Unhappily, under that leadership my great State of Illinois, which I have now the honor to represent, suffered most in the devastation of riot, incendiarism, and murder.

The Debs strike, as we so speak of it, and that which followed it, produced complications all over America in every phase of industrial and commercial existence. Lawlessness controlled on every side, assaults upon every form of peace and order became general, rioting on the street corners and in the public places leading to deaths, followed with arrests under the law; the courts became stifled, and soon or late the Nation found itself paralyzed.

Unhappily for America, it became necessary for the President of the United States to use force in sending out the officials of the Government for the preservation of peace. Under the authority of carrying the mails within the provisions of the law and under the Constitution to maintain the order of the Government by a form of military display, greatly to be regretted, but which in history was justified by the conditions which called it forth, Cleveland ordered out the necessary Army force for necessary action to secure peace and preserve property and life.

Later in years Theodore Roosevelt became President of the United States. He found it agreeable, in the pursuit of what he felt was his duty to his countrymen and in the fulfillment of his obligations to the Nation, to prevent certain railroad masters from dominating this Republic in such manner as to proceed to execute their design of seizing every highway in the United States and carrying out a policy which they had of venting a grievance against the then President and punishing him with the power which they could command, that stifled the people of all transportation.

This was as vengeance on Roosevelt because he had assumed to support legislation in Congress which sought to assure just regulation of railroads. This was that there should be no wrong done the country, no monopoly maintained, but, above all, no injustice done the toilers.

Mr. President, this move of oppression in form of conspiracy to force a railroad strike proceeded so rapidly that the then President of the United States was compelled to take a measure of force to oppose the threat. He sent to Congress for immediate enactment a measure to protect the law and order of the country, to justify the common decency of mankind in demanding that there should not be in America another example of bloodshed in the conflict between mere power of numbers, on the one hand, and power of oppressive finance, on the other.

It would seem to us, as we reflect—to use the language of my eminent friend from Ohio, and appropriating a line as I do, as "the past rises before us like a dream"—that the same events I am now reciting, one after the other, during these Presidencies, came immediately following the inauguration of President Wilson.

While he was in power, though the country was then virtually in the threat and peril of war, every form of menace and danger was rushed upon us, sir, like some great cyclone in its hurry crossing the world. It was filled with fire and discharging its explosions upon all humanity. Here the same forces which we have been describing for a moment presumed to take advantage of the embarrassing circumstances then enforced against Woodrow Wilson as President. From the advices he received, upon reflection upon what would be the sure condition of embarrassment to his country—measured by that which he had seen had occurred in the previous similar events which I have recounted under preceding Presidents—President Wilson sent down to Congress for immediate enactment a measure of which we now speak as the "Adamson Law." This, which was molded after the law which had been presented by William McKinley when a distinguished Member of the House of Representatives was to meet an emergency which arose in the city of Washington and which he presented as affecting the District of Columbia.

Yet such was the merit of the bill and its virtue of legislative form that the then President of the United States, Mr. Woodrow Wilson, and his legal conferees, copied the measure literally, and put it into effect as a national law under the name of the then chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Mr. Adamson, a Member of Congress from the State of Georgia.

By this particular act, sir, the President was able, with the cooperation of his countrymen of all political parties, to avoid the coming upon this Nation of that which had been begun, as an illustration, in the Homestead strike, that which followed after it under Grover Cleveland, that which was attempted under Theodore Roosevelt, and that which was then being committed under Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. President, this Nation is on the eve of repeating this tragedy. The courage of this Government should very early be announced. It is immaterial to me whether the announcement should come from the voice of the distinguished President in whom we all confide, both as to his honor and his patriotism, or whether it should come from a Member of this body or of the House of Representatives; but it should come to these, whoever they are saying that the great Congress of the United States at a time like this, when the world seems ready for every form of holocaust that could erupt and break forth as a matter of civil, or, if you please, sir, industrial dispute, here sir, we advise our countrymen that we look for peace; we look for forbearance; we look for concessions on all sides; and that this America does not intend to allow any lawless force to seize this Government in this hour, or in the pending day just ahead of us, we will not allow to be repeated—catastrophe in a manner similar to that which was undertaken and unhappily afflicted upon this Government in the instances I have recounted.

Mr. President, I take the liberty of rising and making these observations to say that this is a moment, such as comes in the life of every government, when America must, to use a sidewalk expression—most easily understood in its meaning by citizens who are not particularly interested in refinement of expression—America must show "guts"—this phrase now understood where action is called for. It must be borne in on the minds of all interested that this Nation is in no mood to dally or to parley with anything that has for its object an open, declared violence, or a defiant lawlessness, or a purposed defiance to the Government, obstinately placed because of power against the law, against the peace, against the order of the citizenry, or against the honor and flag of America.

It is not necessary that this Government should wait until there has been some assault to announce the position of America, nor is it wise that we sit silently, leaving it doubtful whether we would sustain the President and his Government in whatever steps are necessary to preserve justice among the citizens, law and order in the land.

It is prudent, sir, that at a timely moment—and I take the liberty of saying this is the moment—we should announce to the country at large that the Government will stand behind the President in everything that is essential for the maintenance of the law, in the execution of it honorably through the courts, for the sustaining of order by orderly procedure, that we may enjoy peace in the conduct of government. Above all else, sir, that there shall not be allowed in this Government, for the gratification of any selfish pursuit of any set of men, however powerful or numberful, that which shall lay a blight upon the honor of the Republic, or bring us again to such disasters as we endured in the time which I have made bold to recount before this honorable body, sirs, remember it all, that it might revive all America to these experiences.

Therefore, Mr. President, I break into this moment that all the country may know that from this honorable body comes the voice announcing complete support of the Government in every step necessary for the maintenance of order and justice. We owe it that we shall assure the preservation of just property, but, above all, the sustaining of the rights of the citizen; and, sir, as against all things else, the complete support of America in its effort to continue as a nation of peace and honor among its citizens. We must avoid the entrance by any force whatever of that which shall mean riot and insurrection among our people and cast dishonor on the Constitution, and the dishonor on the Republic from the riotous lawlessness forcing this Government, as in the past, to call for its repression by force.

This land seeks no force of military power for the suppression of internal disorder. We hope to repress internal disorder by avoiding it; but, if it shall arise, then to repress it by such steps of persuasion and friendly concession as is natural, sir, among human beings of a just faith in a true government and an honest faith in a just God.

We propose at this moment, sir, to remind our countrymen that such will remain the creed of our Republic; if to be urged by persuasion, sir, we hope with success; but if, sir, to be assured by force, necessarily if it must be, then, sir, wholly within the law as duty to the United States of America.

CHARLES J. WEBB SONS CO., INC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2138) for the relief of Charles J. Webb Sons Co., which were, on page 1, line 7, after "claims", to insert "against the Government of the United States", and on page 1, line 13, after "consummated", to insert:

: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. DAVIS. For the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

RELIEF FOR CERTAIN ARMY DISBURSING OFFICERS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2046) to provide relief for disbursing officers of the Army in certain cases.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the bill with the amendment of the House be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8781) to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and to amend the Federal Aid Road Act, approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

MONETARY USE AND PURCHASE OF SILVER

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9745) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that beginning at 2 o'clock on Monday debate on the pending bill and any pending amendments be limited to 15 minutes, and not to exceed one speech to each Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to state to the Senate that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] desires to be heard on this issue; likewise the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and perhaps others.

In order that they may be present when this question is being considered, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the roll was called at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], so that Senators interested in the pending bill might be present. I had proposed a limitation of debate when the lack of a quorum was suggested. I should like to know from the Senator from Oklahoma, or from other Senators present, whether there would be any objection to fixing an hour for a vote on the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, since I called for a quorum, I have conferred with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and it is agreeable to him to have a time fixed for a limitation of debate. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is present and may speak for himself. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] was out of the Chamber when I made the suggestion of the absence of a quorum, but he is now present. I am prepared, so far as I am concerned, to agree, because I have nothing further to say.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Nevada state his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that beginning at the hour of 3 o'clock p.m. on Monday, June 11, 1934, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 15 minutes upon the pending bill or upon any amendment that may be pending or that may be proposed thereto, or upon any motion made relative thereto.

Mr. MCNARY. I prefer to have the proposal read by the clerk first, because I did not distinctly hear all that the Senator may have proposed. I have a suggestion to make, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). The clerk will read the unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, That beginning at the hour of 3 o'clock p.m. on Monday, June 11, 1934, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 15 minutes upon the pending bill, or upon any amendment that may be pending or that may be proposed thereto, or upon any motion made relative thereto.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the proposal, save the fact that it is only one-half of the proposal. It should begin by saying that at the conclusion of today's work we shall recess until Monday at 11 o'clock, and that at 3 o'clock on Monday this limitation shall take effect. If that is added to the proposal I shall have no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MCNARY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If it meets with the approval of the Senator from Nevada, in charge of the bill, it is my purpose to move a recess until 11 o'clock Monday whenever the Senate concludes its labors today. There are some conference reports and perhaps some bills on the calendar which there is special necessity for considering, which will require only a few minutes. They can be taken up only by unanimous consent, if taken up at all. I am sure that that arrangement will be satisfactory.

Mr. MCNARY. Do I understand from that statement that the Senator wishes to have the calendar considered on Monday morning?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No, Mr. President; I do not. I have been informed, for instance, by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that he has a bill to which I can conceive of no objection. I have examined the report on the bill. He would like to have that bill considered before the Senate concludes its labors today. I merely wish to assure the Senator from Oregon that if this arrangement is entered into we can speedily conclude our work today and recess until 11 o'clock Monday.

Mr. MCNARY. Very well; but I should like to have the agreement understood, and, if I may be permitted, I will state it in my own fashion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator from Nevada, if it meets with his approval, that he modify his proposal to provide that when the Senate concludes its labors today it shall take a recess until 11 o'clock Monday.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask to have that suggestion included in the request for unanimous consent; and I ask the approval of the Senate of the modified request.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, permit me to finish my proposal. I was about to make the motion complete in my own form and fashion, and suggest this kind of an arrangement—that when the Senate concludes its session today it recess until 11 o'clock on Monday, and that general debate on the bill continue until 3 o'clock on Monday; that after 3 o'clock on that day the debate on the part of each Senator shall be limited to 15 minutes on the bill and any amendments which may be pending or offered thereto, with the further exception that between 11 o'clock on Monday morning and 3 o'clock in the afternoon the time shall be equally divided between Republican and Democratic Members of the Senate.

That is the proposal I shall make.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no objection so far as I am personally concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada accept that proposal?

Mr. PITTMAN. I accept that as a part of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, does the limitation of 15 minutes mean 15 minutes on the bill or on any amendment?

Mr. PITTMAN. Both; 15 minutes on the bill and 15 minutes on any amendment pending on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, as modified?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yielded to permit the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] to make some remarks. I had the floor. I do not think I shall want more than a few more minutes. I desire it understood that I should like to have the floor for a few minutes on Monday. Otherwise, the time before the limitation of debate might be consumed, and I might not be able to finish the speech I was making. I shall not continue very much longer. I shall not want over half an hour.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator would have that time under the agreement.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposal of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], as modified? The Chair hears none.

GRANT OF PROPERTY TO WISCONSIN

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Order of Business 1345, being Senate bill 3532, may be read for the information of the Senate; and after that shall have been done I will ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this is the bill to which reference was made a few moments ago. I have examined the report of the committee; and, so far as I am concerned, I find no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. 3532) granting certain property to the State of Wisconsin for institutional purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were on page 1, line 9, after the word "effective", to strike out "at any time prior to July 1, 1934, if, before that date," and insert "if and when"; and to insert at the end of the bill a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the State of Wisconsin for institutional purposes the property known and designated as the "Hayward Indian School"; located at Hayward, Wis., such grant to include the land and buildings and such equipment as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, except the hospital, the nurses' home, and the doctor's residence: Provided, That this grant shall be effective if and when the Governor of the State of Wisconsin on behalf of the State files an acceptance thereof with the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That right is reserved by the Secretary of the Interior to retain until July 1, 1934, dormitory and other space needed for the housing and care of Indian pupils now accommodated at said school: Provided further, That it is a condition of this grant that Indians residing within the State of Wisconsin shall be accepted in State institutions on entire equality with persons of other races: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as prohibiting payment by the Federal Government of tuition for Indian children enrolled in public schools.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMERGENCY CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC HIGHWAYS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HAYDEN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8781) to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 14, 15, 17, 19, 20, 21, and 23, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 10. Section 19 of the Federal Highway Act, approved November 9, 1921, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 19. That on or before the first Monday in January of each year the Secretary of Agriculture shall make a report to Congress, which shall include a detailed statement of the work done, the status of each project undertaken, the allocation of appropriations, an itemized statement of the expenditures and receipts during the preceding fiscal year under this act, and itemized statement of the traveling and other expenses, including a list of employees, their duties, salaries, and traveling expenses, if any, and his recommendations, if any, for new legislation amending or supplementing this Act. The Secretary of Agriculture shall also make such special reports as Congress may request.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted in said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 12. Since it is unfair and unjust to tax motor-vehicle transportation unless the proceeds of such taxation are applied to the construction, improvement, or maintenance of highways, after June 30, 1935, Federal aid for highway construction shall be extended only to those States that use at least the amounts now provided by law for such purposes in each State from State motor vehicle registration fees, licenses, gasoline taxes, and other special taxes on motor-vehicle owners and operators of all kinds for the construction, improvement, and maintenance of highways and administrative expenses in connection therewith, including the retirement of bonds for the payment of which such revenues have been pledged, and for no other purposes, under such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall promulgate from time to time: Provided, That in no case shall the provisions of this section operate to deprive any State of more than one-third of the amount to which that State would be entitled under any apportionment hereafter made, for the fiscal year for which the apportionment is made."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 15. To provide for the continuation of the cooperative reconnaissance surveys for a proposed inter-American highway as provided in Public Resolution No. 104, approved March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1697), and for making location, surveys, plans, and estimates for such highway, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend not more than $75,000 to pay all costs hereafter incurred for such work from any moneys available from the administrative funds provided under the act of July 11, 1916 (U.S.C., title 23, sec. 21), as amended, or as otherwise provided."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate changing the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

KENNETH MCKELLAR,
CARL HAYDEN,
GEO. MCGILL,
THOMAS D. SCHALL,
LYNN J. FRAZIER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILBURN CARTWRIGHT,
LINDSAY C. WARREN,
WM. M. WHITTINGTON,
C. MURRAY TURPIN,
CLYDE KELLY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, what does the conference report do with respect to the Senate bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. The House adopted the general principle of the Senate bill, with the exception that there was a reduction in the first annual appropriation to be made for forest highways, for national park highways, and for roads throughout public lands and Indian reservations from $30,000,000 to $24,000,000. Then the same figure is carried through the 3-year period; to wit, $10,000,000 per year for roads within the national forests, seven and a half million dollars for roads within the national parks, $4,000,000 for roads within Indian reservations, and two and a half million dollars for roads throughout the public lands.

To carry out that proposal the conference report reduced the amount provided for national parks in the years 1936 and 1937 from $10,000,000 to seven and one-half million dollars.

The other change is the increase of the amount for Federal aid to be matched by the States in 1936 and 1937 from $100,000,000 to $125,000,000 a year.

Those are the monetary changes in the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The arrangement for the next fiscal year, however——

Mr. HAYDEN. Is exactly as it was.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have no objection.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, what amount is now appropriated for roads and highways in States that does not have to be matched by State appropriations?

Mr. HAYDEN. The bill in that respect is exactly as it passed the Senate. There remains, carried over into the next fiscal year from the previous appropriation of $400,000,000, the sum of $230,000,000 to be actually paid out of the Treasury during the next year. To that amount the Senate bill proposes to add $100,000,000 to carry out a recommendation made by the President in his Budget message; so for the first year there will be a grant, unmatched by the States, amounting to $330,000,000. In the second year there will be a grant of $100,000,000, and Federal aid for $125,000,000 which must be matched by the States.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. For the next fiscal year?

Mr. HAYDEN. For the fiscal year 1936. The grant for the next fiscal year, beginning the first of next July, requires no matching by the States.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The amount is $330,000,000?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. In the following year the States will commence to match Federal aid on the basis of $125,000,000 a year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

RELIEF TO GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 9002, being Order of Business 1278. I have talked to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] since I attempted to call up the bill on Thursday.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, what is the bill?

Mr. LOGAN. I may say to the Senator from Michigan that it is a bill which was introduced upon the recommendation of the Treasury Department. It has passed the House. It simply provides that persons having contracts with the Government when the N.R.A. codes were adopted, and who accepted the provisions of the codes, may file in the General Accounting Office, for adjudication, their claims growing out of the increased cost of labor and material. I believe there is no objection to it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the bill. I hope it will pass. I was trying to find out what it was that the Senator was proposing.

Mr. LOGAN. I am asking that the bill be considered and passed at this time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 9002) to provide relief to Government contractors whose costs of performance were increased as a result of compliance with the act approved June 16, 1933, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, after line 2, to strike out:

That the President, through such agency or agencies as he may establish or designate, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to hear and determine, on a fair and equitable basis, claims of persons who entered into a contract or contracts with the United States, including subcontractors and materialmen, for additional costs incurred by reason of compliance with a code or codes of fair competition approved by the President under section 3 of the act approved June 16, 1933, known as the "National Industrial Recovery Act", or by reason of compliance with an agreement with the President executed under section 4 (a) of said act. In the event that such contract was performed, wholly or in part, by a surety on the bond of the contractor, the claim may be presented by such surety.

SEC. 2. In order to be entitled to a consideration of his claim, the person presenting the same shall be required to establish (1) that the contract or contracts were entered into prior to August 10, 1933, or that the bid resulting in the contract was submitted prior to said date; (2) that the contract was performed wholly or in part subsequently to said date; (3) that in the performance of such contract or contracts he fully complied with the terms of the approved code or codes of fair competition for his trade or industry, or subdivision thereof, or that, in the absence of such code, he entered into and fully complied with an agreement with the President under section 4 (a) of the said act of June 16, 1933; and (4) that the cost of performance of such contract or contracts has been directly increased over the cost prevailing at the time that the bid was submitted, by reason of such compliance, and the amount of such increase.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle on a fair and equitable basis claims of persons who entered into a contract or contracts with the United States prior to August 10, 1933, including subcontractors and materialmen performing work or furnishing material direct to the contractor under such contracts, for additional costs incurred by reason of compliance on and after August 10, 1933, with a code or codes of fair competition approved by the President under section 3 of the act approved June 16, 1933, known as the "National Industrial Recovery Act", or by reason of compliance with an agreement with the President executed under section 4 (a) of said act in the performance after August 10, 1933, of the contract or any part thereof. In the event that such contract was performed wholly or in part by a surety on the bond of the contractor, the claim may be presented by and settlement made with such surety, but such surety shall have no greater rights than would have accrued to the contractor had such contractor completed the contract. Any contractor, subcontractor, or completing surety desiring an adjustment and settlement with respect to any such contract under this act for increased costs incurred after August 10, 1933, by reason of compliance with the codes or reemployment agreements shall file with the department or administrative establishment concerned a verified claim itemizing such additional costs, and any subcontractor on any such contract may file his claim directly with the head of the department or independent establishment concerned or through the contractor. After the claim has been examined by the head of the department or independent establishment concerned, or such person or persons as he shall designate, the claim shall be transmitted to the Comptroller General of the United States, accompanied with an administrative finding of fact and recommendations with respect to the claim.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to propose an amendment to the committee amendment, after the word "material", in line 3 on page 3, to insert "or necessary fuel."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, section 3, line 7, after the word "any", to strike out "award" and insert "allowance", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. In no event shall any allowance exceed the amount by which the cost of performance of such part of the contract as was performed subsequently to August 10, 1933, was directly increased by reason of compliance with a code or codes of fair competition, or with an agreement with the President, as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, section 3, line 13, after the word "any", to strike out "award" and insert "allowance"; and in line 16, after the word "made", to strike out "The agency or agencies to be created or designated thereunder" and insert "The head of the department or establishment concerned, subject to the approval of the Comptroller General", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. In no event shall any allowance be made which would result in a profit to the claimant exceeding 7 percent on the cost of performance of the contract in respect of which the claim is made. The head of the department or establishment concerned, subject to the approval of the Comptroller General, shall have the authority from time to time, to determine the actual cost and profit thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 21, to strike out section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. No claim hereunder shall be considered or allowed unless presented within 6 months after the President shall have established or designated an agency or agencies to whom such claims may be submitted, or, at the option of the claimant, within 6 months after the performance of the contract is completed.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 4. No claim hereunder shall be considered or allowed unless presented within 6 months from the date of approval of this act or, at the option of the claimant, within 6 months after the completion of the contract, except in the discretion of the Comptroller General for good cause shown by the claimant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 12, to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. In all proceedings under this act, the agency or agencies to be created or designated hereunder shall have the power to compel the attendance of witnesses to testify under oath and to produce books, papers, letters, or other documents.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 6. In all proceedings under this act witnesses may be compelled to attend, appear, and testify and produce books, papers, and letters, or other documents; and the claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to incriminate the person giving the same shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person in the trial of any criminal proceeding. Nothing in this act shall in any way relieve or excuse any officer of the United States or any claimant from prosecution under any statute of the United States for any fraud or criminal conduct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 4, to strike out:

SEC. 8. The agency or agencies created or designated hereunder are hereby authorized to make, adopt, and promulgate rules and regulations for the determination of claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RELIEF OF DROUGHT-STRICKEN AREAS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H.DOC. NO. 398)

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has taken the floor for the purpose of discussing the bill which is the unfinished business, the silver bill. If he will yield for that purpose, I should like to move an executive session; but before doing so I ask that the message from the President be laid before the Senate.

Mr. KING. I yield the floor for that purpose, and then I will yield for an executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Unforeseen drought has visited disaster upon a large part of our country. Prompt and vigorous action to meet the emergency has been taken by the Federal Government through its various agencies. But the situation has become more grave as rainfall shortage has continued. Future rainfall cannot restore more than a small part of the damage to crops and livestock. An especially serious problem has developed because, while there is no prospect of shortage of human food, a shortage of animal feed threatens over a wide area. This is causing losses to farmers and regions dependent upon the livestock industries. Large-scale assistance by the Federal Government is necessary to protect people in the stricken regions from suffering, to move feed to livestock, and livestock to feed, and to acquire and process surplus cattle to provide meat for relief distribution.

Organizations already exist in the Department of Agriculture, the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, and the Farm Credit Administration to carry on the emergency program.

To finance operations of the magnitude planned, further funds are needed. After a conference with Members of Congress from the affected regions, a program along seven lines has been devised to meet the situation. These proposals and the funds required as estimated at this time are:

1. $125,000,000 for special work program and human relief.
2. $75,000,000 for livestock purchase in addition to the funds already available under the Jones-Connally Act.
3. $100,000,000 for shipping, processing, and relief distribution of purchased cattle.
4. $100,000,000 for loans to farmers to finance emergency feed purchases and shipments.
5. $50,000,000 for emergency acquisition of submarginal farms and assistance in relocating destitute farm families.
6. $50,000,000 for work camps to afford employment in the drought area for young men principally from cities and towns.
7. $25,000,000 for purchase of seed for 1935 plantings, and for loans to get seeds into farmers' hands.

These wholly tentative estimates have been made upon the basis of present and probable conditions. I believe the present emergency can be effectively met by the appropriation of $525,000,000. Only such portion, of course, will be used as becomes absolutely necessary. We are dealing with a rapidly changing problem, and it is important that the authorization should be flexible so that funds can be allotted to the several Federal agencies as required.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 9, 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of

AMERICAN-LA FRANCE & FOAMITE CORPORATION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the clerk's desk, being Calendar No. 1302, Senate bill 2156.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the bill (S. 2156) for the relief of the American-La France & Foamite Corporation of New York, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the American-La France & Foamite Corporation, of New York, successor to the American-La France Fire Engine Co., Inc., all sums illegally collected by the Internal Revenue Bureau as excise taxes upon fire-fighting apparatus from the American-La France Fire Engine Co., Inc., under the Revenue Act of 1916, the Revenue Act of 1917, and/or the Revenue Act of 1918, not heretofore refunded, and all claims for refund heretofore filed by the American-La France Fire Engine Co., Inc., which have not been allowed shall be considered, notwithstanding any statute of limitations prohibiting such refund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this is a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to repay to this concern money erroneously collected in taxes on fire apparatus under the laws of 1917 and 1918. The Treasury admits the erroneous collection, but, because of a lawsuit pending in the courts and the confusion of Treasury rulings on the subject, the company was 15 days late in filing its claim, which made it impossible for the Treasury to pay it. The Treasury, however, admits that the amount was wrongfully collected, and, while it does not pass on the question of whether we ought to authorize its repayment, certainly we ought not to make it possible for the Treasury to collect money and admit that it ought not to collect it and then keep it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF OLD TENLEY SCHOOL IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 1308, being House bill 9184.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The legislative clerk read the bill (H.R. 9184) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to sell the old Tenley School to the duly authorized representative of St. Ann's Church of the District of Columbia, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to sell and convey to the duly constituted representative and agent of St. Ann's Roman Catholic Church, of the District of Columbia, located at or near the corner of Wisconsin Avenue and Yuma Street NW., the following described real estate: The old Tenley School building, and original site, known as parcels 35/130 and 131, parcel 130 containing 2,880 square feet, and parcel 131 containing 42,036 square feet, or a total of 44,916 square feet, being the same land and premises now leased to the pastor of St. Ann's Church by a certain lease signed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, dated October 16, 1933, and now included in parcel 35/260.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wish to say, by way of explanation, that the school referred to is an old building which was abandoned some years ago by the District; and they desire to sell it, but they want permission to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVEYANCE OF BUILDINGS, ETC., TO REPUBLIC OF HAITI

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few days ago the President of the United States transmitted a message to Congress asking authority to convey certain buildings, material, and equipment to the Government of the Republic of Haiti. Pursuant to the message of the President, a bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], a member of the committee, reported it, as I understand, unanimously. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3739) authorizing the President to convey certain buildings, material, and equipment to the Government of the Republic of Haiti, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to convey to the Government of the Republic of Haiti, without cost to that government, such buildings, materials, and equipment owned by the United States in Haiti as may appear to the President to be appropriate.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and a treaty (and withdrawing two nominations), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received and nominations withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

THE CALENDAR—TREATIES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the first treaty on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let the treaties go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaties will be passed over.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of John Ward Studebaker, of Iowa, to be Commissioner of Education.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That should be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be passed over.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph R. Jackson, of New York, to be Assistant Attorney General, Customs Division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Frank K. Myers to be United States district judge, eastern district of South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William Burgeson to be United States marshal, eastern district of South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Reuben Gosnell to be United States marshal, western district of South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

HAWAII

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Arthur A. Greene, of Hawaii, to be Secretary of the Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Eugene Carlson, of Virginia, to be supervising inspector, Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Percy Poe Bishop to be brigadier general, Coast Artillery Corps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION—JOHN WARD STUDEBAKER

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to recur to the nomination of John Ward Studebaker, of Iowa, to be Commissioner of Education, and that the nomination be acted upon at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination?

The nomination was confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the calendar.

MONETARY USE AND PURCHASE OF SILVER

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H.R. 9745) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as indicated by our distinguished leader, I took the floor a few moments ago for the purpose of discussing the pending so-called "silver bill." In view of the understanding reached that we shall take a recess until Monday at 11 o'clock, I shall pretermit any observations today with the understanding that when the Senate reconvenes at 11 o'clock Monday morning I am to have recognition at the hands of the Chair.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock Monday morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 12 minutes p.m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until Monday, June 11, 1934, at 11 o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who fills heaven with His presence and majesty and glory and from whom love never goes out, we pray to Thee. We thank Thee that the goodness of the Lord is our portion forever. Thy words that have seemed as vanishing as the perfume of a dying flower proves eternal. Should we fail of the blessing that the whisper of the Lord is with them that fear Him, forgive and help and come with us. O river of God, flow along our pathway; go about the places where our feet stray and add twilights when the splendor of the West lingers in the open sky. Blessed Heavenly Father, we are in the throes of sorrow. One of our circle has left us in all the plenitude of his personal honors. He yielded pride, vanity, and leisure—everything except honor and truth, fidelity and friendship. O God, reason sometimes staggers—do Thou support us. O Thou whose throne is mercy, whose face is light, and whose name is love, comfort the loved ones in this their darkest hour. Smite the black shadow and the iron fate and count them as Thy beloved children until they, too, fall asleep in the arms of perfect peace. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 4337. An act to amend the Judicial Code by adding a new section to be numbered 274D.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3618. An act to grant a portion of the Fort Douglas Military Reservation to the University of Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah; and

S. 3741. An act to convey certain lands to the State of South Dakota for public-park purposes, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 541. An act for the relief of John P. Leonard;

H.R. 2439. An act for the relief of William G. Burres, deceased; and H.R. 3032. An act for the relief of Paul Jelna.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate (S. 3285) entitled "An act to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communications by wire or radio, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 74. An act to authorize payment of expenses of formulating claims of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians of Oklahoma against the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 870. An act for the relief of L. R. Smith;

S. 2138. An act for the relief of Charles J. Webb Sons Co., Inc.;

S. 3443. An act to provide for the creation of the Pioneer National Monument in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes;

S. 3502. An act authorizing the Oregon-Washington Bridge board of trustees to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Oreg.; and

S. 3615. An act authorizing the county of Wahkiakum, a legal political subdivision of the State of Washington, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River between Puget Island and the mainland, Cathlamet, State of Washington.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—DROUGHT RELIEF

The SPEAKER. The House has just received a message from the President of the United States which is very short. Arrangements have been made by the broadcasting companies to transmit the message by remote control to the drought-stricken States. The people there have been advised that this would be done at exactly 15 minutes past 12, and without objection, at 12:15 the Chair will suspend all business of the House until the President's message is read.

TO PROTECT LABOR IN ITS OLD AGE

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, the subject of legislation to protect labor in its old age is of increasing interest, and I trust that a bill along this line will be enacted during the present session of Congress.

I have long been an advocate of such legislation, and inasmuch as my views have been erroneously stated in Oklahoma upon this important subject, I want to call attention to the fact that on February 1, 1934, I introduced a bill (H.R. 7556) to protect labor in its old age.

Many other bills of a like nature dealing with the same subject have been introduced and are pending before the House Committee on Labor. That committee has reported out a bill, H.R. 8641, introduced by its chairman, Mr. CONNERY, which, in many respects, is similar to the bill which I introduced. Both of these bills provide for the creation in the Department of Labor of a bureau to be known as the "Old Age Security Bureau", to administer the act, which provides that the Government shall contribute one-third of the total sum paid to aged persons under the laws of the States or Territories which have old-age assistance laws. This contribution by the Federal Government shall be subject to certain conditions and limitations as set out in the act. The bill calls for an annual appropriation of $10,000,000, to be apportioned among the States and Territories to aid them in giving assistance to aged persons under the conditions of the act.

The report indicates that 28 States and 2 Territories now have old-age pension laws, and I am sure that with the enactment of Federal legislation every State will be encouraged to enact similar legislation and take advantage of the Federal contribution.

Several days ago my attention was invited to a report in an Oklahoma paper published in Oklahoma City, which made the broad statement that I was opposed to old-age pension legislation. The erroneous statement was perhaps made because of the controversy over the age limit at which pensions should begin. The Representative from Oklahoma insisted that old-age pensions should begin at the age of 50. I informed the Representative from Oklahoma that the bill which I had introduced provided that cooperation by the Government with the States, provided that a pension should begin at the age of 65, and that I did not believe there was any sentiment in Congress favorable to old-age pension legislation where the pension should begin at the age of 50, and that if the representative of the pension organizations was anxious for favorable legislation, those interested in it should cooperate in an effort to secure legislation which should provide for pensions beginning at a higher age.

The bill reported by the House Committee on Labor provides for old-age assistance beginning at the age of 65 years. The bill which I introduced extends assistance beginning with that age. The bill as reported provides for cooperation by the States, and the bill which I introduced contains a similar provision.

This question is of such tremendous importance and I am so earnestly interested in its favorable consideration, inasmuch as I am about to retire from Congress, that I did not want the information to be sent out through Oklahoma that I was opposed to old-age pension legislation. Whether enacted during the present session, or whether it be postponed, such legislation is sure to be enacted. The Federal Government should cooperate with the several States and through such contributions old age should be assured of protection.

The plan which I have submitted has many provisions in common with the plan reported by the House Committee on Labor. This legislation has proved beneficial in the 28 States that have enacted it, and I feel sure that similar legislation will be favorably considered in the remaining States at an early date.

In view of my record in favor of old-age pensions and the statements which I have made throughout my district from time to time it is inconceivable that such an erroneous statement that I am opposed to old-age pension legislation should be circulated.

The bill which I have introduced provides that any beneficiary shall be a resident of the State, over 65 years of age, not possessed of real estate or personal property in excess of the value of $1,000, with an annual income of not more than $240, and with no child or other person able to support him.

This is humane legislation and strongly appeals to me. It should receive the favorable consideration of Congress.

LETTER OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR TO THE PRESIDENT WITH REFERENCE TO PROPOSED COMPREHENSIVE PLANS OF WATERWAY IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to embrace therein a letter written by the Secretary of War to the President in reference to waterway improvements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to present the letter of the Secretary of War to the President, dated April 20, 1934, in reference to the proposed waterway improvement plans then under consideration.

I desire particularly to call attention to that portion of Secretary Dern's letter making reference to so-called "pork-barrel" legislation. From his letter it will be seen that this practice has been completely eliminated from congressional procedure with reference to river and harbor improvements as carried out by the Corps of Engineers of the War Department. Secretary Dern's letter very admirably states the situation, and I desire to call it to the especial attention of the Members of the House. It is as follows:

APRIL 20, 1934.

MR. PRESIDENT: With strong mental reservations I have signed the foregoing report because it seems to be about as good a literal compliance with your directive as can be expected from the committee at this time. While assuring you of hearty cooperation in whatever program may be adopted, I do not concur in the report in all respects, and I respectfully submit the following comments, information, and suggestions:

1. Notwithstanding the fact that you requested this committee to submit a list of 10 most desirable projects to be given priority in an improvement program, I feel that the committee should caution you against such a method of procedure, because:

(a) The selection of 10 projects at this time, either by this committee or by the National Planning Commission, cannot be based on sufficient knowledge of the subject, and must, therefore, be haphazard and hard to defend. It would, therefore, invite criticism and controversy, which ought to be avoided so far as possible at the beginning of a grand plan such as you have in mind. In other words, I fear that the proposal might prove politically inexpedient. The tactics of the campaign for such a fine, new, constructive conception should be carefully considered so as to anticipate and avoid unnecessary resistance.

(b) It does not comply fully with the directive of Congress "to send to the Senate a comprehensive plan for the improvement and development of the rivers of the United States, with a view of giving to Congress information for its guidance in legislation which will provide for the maximum amount of flood control, navigation, irrigation, and development of hydroelectric power."

(c) It might cause a reversion toward pork-barrel and logrolling methods of authorizing projects in Congress, which have now been substantially eliminated. It is my understanding that pork-barrel legislation is exactly what you want to head off, and I assume that you will welcome the views of the committee as to the best way to accomplish your purpose.

Some years ago river and harbor projects used to be regarded as the most notorious examples of congressional logrolling. A great many persons do not yet know that Congress has cleaned house in this respect and that such projects are now actually on a merit basis and that the present system is open to very little criticism.

(d) It ignores the fact that the data are available right now for the preparation of a comprehensive plan in full compliance with the request of Congress. The compilation of these data has been one of the most noteworthy and praiseworthy achievements of the Corps of Engineers, acting in pursuance of law as an agency of the legislative branch. If you now wish to expand the study beyond the scope prescribed by Congress, the War Department will cheerfully and whole-heartedly cooperate with such other departments as may be able to make a contribution to the study. It would, however, be wasteful not to make the fullest possible use of the painstaking and intelligent work performed during the past 7 years. The Army Engineers have a familiarity with water-use problems that could not be acquired by any new group without years of intensive and continuous study. To supersede them now instead of seeking their cooperation would be an inefficient procedure.

The following information is submitted:

Senate Resolution 164 is substantially identical with a provision in the River and Harbor Act of January 21, 1927, which assigned to the Secretary of War and to the Chief of Engineers the duty of making surveys in accordance with House Document No. 308 (69th Cong., 1st sess.), with a view to the formulation of general plans for the most effective improvement of navigable streams of the United States and their tributaries for the purpose of navigation and development of water power, the control of floods, and the needs of irrigation. (Consideration of the Colorado River was precluded.) The Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928, amplifies this duty with respect to the tributaries of the Mississippi River.

Pursuant to the above-mentioned congressional mandate, the Corps of Engineers has been engaged in this work for 7 years and has expended upward of $10,000,000 thereon. National planning for putting the waters of the United States to the highest beneficial use is therefore well under way, so far as assembling the basic data is concerned. It was initiated by Congress, which constituted the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers as its agent in finding the facts upon which it might act. They are required by law to report their findings to Congress, but this provision does not make it inconsistent for them to supply the information to you, so as to enable you to comply with Senate Resolution 164.

The reports on a majority of these surveys have been transmitted to Congress. The remaining reports are in preparation, but sufficiently advanced to permit all necessary information to be concisely tabulated so as to set forth the elements of a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the United States. The Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers can, within a very short time, prepare for you a comprehensive plan such as Congress has requested.

The work of the Corps of Engineers in assembling these data has been, by congressional mandate, restricted to navigation, hydroelectric power, flood control, and irrigation. If it is desired to add studies on stream pollution, soil erosion, reforestation, recreation, and sociological plans, these can be superimposed upon the data already submitted without conflict. If any field work or research has been carried out by any agency of the Government on these additional factors, these data can simultaneously be submitted to Congress by you, together with your own recommendations.

I have been trying to make up my mind whether all elements of a program of national planning should be combined in one plan. I do not think it is necessary to do so.

For example, putting an end to stream pollution seems to have little or no connection with improving the streams for navigation, flood control, power, or irrigation, because it is chiefly a matter of the construction of sewage-disposal plants, which so far has been a municipal question.

Soil erosion, except along the banks of the streams, would appear to be more closely allied with reforestation and restoration of plant cover than with stream improvement. In some cases, however, soil-erosion work will involve the construction of dams.

Reforestation plans an important part in flood control and soil erosion, but it may be carried on quite independently of river improvement works.

And so it goes. Each of these activities is a special problem, to be handled by a special group of experts if satisfactory results are to be obtained. Here is a place where too much coordination, or the coordination of unrelated activities, might prove harmful instead of beneficial.

As above stated, voluminous data and estimates on stream developments proper have been assembled by the War Department. Obviously, the bulk and mass of this information renders it difficult of digestion by anyone not familiar with the subject matter. However, the information at hand is sufficient in scope and form, in my opinion, for acceptability as a comprehensive plan responsive to Senate Resolution 164. The plan includes the improvement of less extensive watersheds, as well as the development of predominant basins, and is thus comprehensive. A program for the comprehensive development of our seacoast harbors might well accompany the plan for the development of our interior waterways.

As a result of the War Department's investigations, now nearing completion, about 2,000 river projects have been found practicable, with an estimated aggregate cost of about $8,000,000,000. The relation between estimated costs and estimated benefits of these projects has been determined. Obviously, more projects have been investigated than could be undertaken and paid for in the measurable future, but the expenditure of $8,000,000,000 over a 50-year period would involve an average annual outlay of but $200,000,000. It should be well understood that the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers are not recommending the construction, nor even the adoption, at this time of such a great number of projects. They are but presenting a plan, specific in its elements and estimates, which they regard as appropriate for future selection and appropriation, looking to a final comprehensive development of the waterways of the United States for the purpose of navigation, the development of water power, the control of floods, and the needs of irrigation.

So far as these activities are concerned, I respectfully suggest the following procedure:

1. The immediate preparation of a report by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers on the investigations made during the past 7 years.

2. The adoption of a plan based on this report by Congress and the authorization for its construction without prescribing any priorities.

3. Lump-sum annual appropriations of such amounts as Congress may determine.

4. The determination of priorities by a designated agency.

5. Construction of projects by the War Department, except irrigation projects which should be left in the Interior Department.

This plan would be along the same lines as are now employed in the construction of Federal Aid Highways. It would keep river and harbor work out of politics. It would eliminate pork-barrel legislation. It would make it possible to work according to a carefully developed plan, and it would keep the work in the hands of a closely knit, efficient, and continuing agency of the Government, namely, the Corps of Engineers of the Army, which could be required to cooperate with other agencies or departments so far as might be deemed necessary or advisable, in carrying out a program of stream pollution, soil erosion, reforestation, and other conservation activities.

Respectfully submitted.

GEO. H. DERN.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order today to consider in the House as in Committee of the Whole unobjected-to Senate bills on the Private Calendar and Senate bills on the Speaker's table where similar House bills have been favorably reported and are now on the Private Calendar, the call of said bills to begin with no. 629 of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the majority leader how long he expects to hold the House in session this afternoon? I ask the question because I am not sure just how long these Senate bills will take.

Mr. BYRNS. It is the expectation to adjourn within a reasonable time out of respect to the memory of our deceased colleague the gentleman from Idaho, Mr. Coffin, but I thought that we would take up these bills for a while and dispose of this very necessary business in view of the anticipated early adjournment.

Mr. HOPE. With the gentleman's assurance I shall not object, but I did not want to go on too long, because we are not prepared on this side.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Tennessee if these bills are in possession of the clerk of the committee here? Personally, I do not have them. I do not know what bills the gentleman expects to call up.

Mr. BYRNS. I understand that all or most of them are in possession of the clerk. Of course, if we get to a point where the Members are unable to give proper consideration to the bills, then we can stop. I may say to the House that my only object in making this request is due to the fact that the Senate has passed three or possibly four times more House bills than the House has passed Senate bills. These bills have an opportunity to become law. If they are not passed now there is a possibility that they may fail, and I think where we have bills which can become law upon approval by the House, consideration should be given to them.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Has the gentleman information as to the number of House bills passed by the Senate?

Mr. BYRNS. The Senate has passed three or four times more House bills than the House has passed Senate bills. I may say in response to the question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] that the other day out of 185 private bills which passed the Senate, 141 of them were House bills and the gentleman will note that means more than 3 to 1 in favor of House bills. Either yesterday or day before, as the RECORD will show, the Senate passed a large number of House bills, which, of course, adds to the percentage.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Where a bill has been passed by the Senate, and it gets by the House on unanimous consent, that ought to be sufficient evidence that it has some merit in it?

Mr. BYRNS. I should think so. Of course, every gentleman will have the right to make his objection.

Mr. TRUAX. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee if I do not have a copy of any bill which is called up, I am going to object.

Mr. BYRNS. That is the gentleman's privilege.

Mr. TRUAX. This is entirely unexpected.

Mr. BYRNS. I made the statement yesterday that I was going to make the request today.

Mr. TRUAX. Well, I objected to the gentleman's request at that time.

Mr. BYRNS. I made the statement later on that I would make this request today.

Mr. BLANTON. We have the Senate bills here. Some of us are prepared to go ahead. I have them before me, and I am ready to pass on all the bills.

Mr. TRUAX. Well, I am not willing to pass on a bill unless I have it before me.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say to the gentleman that this will not take any privilege away from Members of the House if the request is granted.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. When the gentleman refers to Senate bills that are on the Speaker's desk, does he refer merely to private bills?

Mr. BYRNS. Bills that are on the Private Calendar where exactly similar bills have been reported by the committee, and only such bills.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Suppose there was a House bill on the Private Calendar previously and it had been objected to and then a Senate bill comes over similar to the House bill. The Senate bill being on the Speaker's table, may we take up that bill?

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, that is a question that probably should be submitted to the Speaker rather than to me. It is more in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I refer to a private House bill on this calendar, previously objected to, where the Senate has now passed a similar bill and the bill is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If it is not on the calendar, it cannot be considered under the proposed agreement.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understood, in addition to the bills on the calendar, the gentleman from Tennessee asked unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table any Senate bills where a similar bill had been reported by the House Committee.

Mr. BYRNS. I will read again that part of the request:

And Senate bills on the Speaker's table where similar House bills have been favorably reported and are now on the Private Calendar, the call of said bills to begin with no. 629 of the Private Calendar.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The request states " that are now on the Private Calendar." Does that means on the Private Calendar following the star?

Mr. BYRNS. I would so construe the request, but that is a parliamentary inquiry that I think should be addressed to the Speaker and not to me.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not see the necessity for that part of the request, if it is a Senate bill on the Private Calendar after the star. The gentleman's request to take up just Senate bills on the Private Calendar would cover all Senate bills.

Mr. BYRNS. No; it would not, because the bill may not have reached the Private Calendar. This is simply to take up all Senate bills that are on the Speaker's desk where a similar House bill is on the Private Calendar.

Mr. O'CONNOR. On the Private Calendar before or after the star?

Mr. BYRNS. After Calendar No. 629; that is, beginning where the House left off.

Mr. TRUAX. And they are to be called in their order on the calendar, beginning with no. 629?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Commencing with the star, where a House bill has not been passed upon or considered by the House at all, there are 14 Senate bills on the Speaker's desk which correspond to a House bill below the star.

Mr. BYRNS. And they are not on the Private Calendar.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. They are not on the Private Calendar, and these 14 House bills have never been acted on by the House in any way.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I just wanted to make it clear that you are starting at the star and not going back of it. Of course, I should like to do that, but I wanted it cleared up.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not think this request will take care of the gentleman in that respect. I hope the request will be granted.

Mr. PEYSER. How about Senate bills back of the star which were passed over without prejudice; cannot they be called up by unanimous consent?

Mr. BYRNS. They can be taken up by unanimous consent, but they are not included in my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—DROUGHT RELIEF (H.DOC. NO. 398)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Unforeseen drought has visited disaster upon a large part of our country. Prompt and vigorous action to meet the emergency has been taken by the Federal Government through its various agencies. But the situation has become more grave as rainfall shortage has continued. Future rainfall cannot restore more than a small part of the damage to crops and livestock. An especially serious problem has developed because, while there is no prospect of shortage of human food, a shortage of animal feed threatens over a wide area. This is causing losses to farmers and regions dependent upon the livestock industries. Large-scale assistance by the Federal Government is necessary to protect people in the stricken regions from suffering, to move feed to livestock and livestock to feed, and to acquire and process surplus cattle to provide meat for relief distribution.

Organizations already exist in the Department of Agriculture, the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, and the Farm Credit Administration to carry on the emergency program.

To finance operations of the magnitude planned, further funds are needed. After a conference with Members of Congress from the affected regions, a program along seven lines has been devised to meet the situation. These proposals and the funds required as estimated at this time are:

1. $125,000,000 for special-work program and human relief.

2. $75,000,000 for livestock purchase in addition to the funds already available under the Jones-Connally Act.

3. $100,000,000 for shipping, processing, and relief distribution of purchased cattle.

4. $100,000,000 for loans to farmers to finance emergency feed purchases and shipments.

5. $50,000,000 for emergency acquisition of submarginal farms and assistance in relocating destitute farm families.

6. $50,000,000 for work camps to afford employment in the drought area for young men principally from cities and towns.

7. $25,000,000 for purchase of seed for 1935 plantings and for loans to get seeds into farmers' hands.

These wholly tentative estimates have been made upon the basis of present and probable conditions. I believe the present emergency can be effectively met by the appropriation of $525,000,000. Only such portion, of course, will be used as becomes absolutely necessary. We are dealing with a rapidly changing problem, and it is important that the authorization should be flexible so that funds can be allotted to the several Federal agencies as required.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 9, 1934.

EDUCATION AT THE CROSSROAD—GRAPHIC PRESENTATION OF CHARTED FACTS SHOWING SERIOUS CRISIS CONFRONTING EDUCATION THROUGHOUT THE NATION—THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSIBILITY

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER] is recognized to address the House at this time for 10 minutes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, on June 4, when the deficiency appropriation bill was passed under a rule limiting debate, there was no chance for an amendment. Only $48,000,000 was indicated as the allocation to take care of the emergency that confronts the schools of the United States.

As a member of the Committee on Education, I should like to say to the membership of the House that we have worked diligently in an effort to get the real facts concerning the deplorable crisis the schools of the Nation are now facing. Education is at the crossroads. I presented a bill for the consideration of the committee, as did a number of others. The chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DOUGLASS], introduced a bill, which was reported out. The Douglass bill stipulates $75,000,000, which we had hoped and still hope can be earmarked to take care of the emergency, at least in part, that challenges education everywhere.

The deficiency appropriation bill is now being considered by the Appropriations Committee in the Senate, and for the benefit of Members here I want to say that there is a possibility of inducing the Senate to adopt an amendment earmarking $75,000,000 to help in keeping the schools of the Nation open.

FACTS PRESENTED IN CHARTS

I thought it might be somewhat helpful if charted facts were presented to enable you to visualize the situation and aid you in appealing to your Senators to approve such an amendment.

I have secured permission from the Committee on Printing to reproduce these four charts picturizing for the Members of the House statistical information brought to us by research authorities showing you how serious the crisis in education really is.

That each of you may have a complete picture of the facts concerning education in your own State, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). Without objection, it is so ordered.

RELATIVE ECONOMIC IMPORTANCE OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, public elementary and high schools constitute a major industry in this country when thought of in terms of the number of persons employed annually and in terms of the annual pay rolls.

Chart 1 shows the relative importance of public schools in the industrial life of the Nation as compared with railroads, manufacture of textile-mill products, telephones, manufacture of motor vehicles, steel works and rolling-mill products, and the manufacture of electrical equipment, apparatus, and supplies.

Public schools are exceeded both in the number of employees and the amount of annual pay rolls by railroads and are barely equaled by textile-mill products in the number of employees.

As to the total number of persons employed, education is of almost equal importance with telephones, motor vehicles, steel works and rolling-mill products, and electrical equipment all combined.

As to annual pay rolls, education is almost twice as important as textile-mill products and of about equal importance with telephones, motor vehicles, steel works and rolling-mill products, and electrical equipment combined.

EMERGENCY MUST BE MET

The point to remember here is that if the Federal Government is to concern itself with meeting emergency conditions in leading industrial activities in order to keep people employed and keep pay rolls adequate and constant it can hardly afford to neglect the importance of public education in these respects.

Hundreds of millions of dollars have been loaned by the Government to the railroads, and Congress has recently taken action to make loans to other industrial enterprises.

Furthermore, education is a public enterprise and is of vital concern to the national welfare. When public education suffers, the national welfare suffers at the most vital point of its existence, the lives of our children, our future citizens, not alone of the States and communities but of the Nation.

More than one-fourth of our entire population is engaged annually either in going to school or in the service of the schools. Surely in meeting the emergency the Federal Government cannot overlook such an important enterprise affecting the lives of such large numbers of our people.

THE CAUSES OF THE EMERGENCY IN PUBLIC EDUCATION

Enrollments up, expenditures down

The burdens carried by the public schools have steadily increased during recent years, and especially since the period of the depression, but expenditures have taken a sharp decline since 1931 and are still declining.

These facts are strikingly illustrated by chart 2. Starting with the year 1926 as a basis of measurement, it will be seen that the total enrollment in public elementary and high schools has increased by approximately 8 percent and that the high-school enrollment is nearly 50 percent greater now than in 1926.

This last fact is of special importance because the annual cost of educating a high-school pupil is approximately twice as great as the cost of educating an elementary-school pupil. Thus the great increases in enrollment have occurred in the most expensive part of the school system.

HALF BILLION DECREASE

While these school burdens have been increasing, the annual current expenditures have decreased nearly a half billion dollars, or 23 percent since 1928. During this time the expenditures for school buildings and equipment have practically disappeared, being now less than 20 percent of the amount spent in 1926. Expenditures for these purposes have been declining each year since 1926.

When this fact is considered in the light of the increasing enrollments it can be readily seen why classrooms are becoming overcrowded and why children in many places are being housed in temporary buildings.

The facts shown in chart 2 force the conclusion that somewhere the crisis must be reached. That it has already been met is now a fact too well established to be any longer contradicted. (See hearing on Federal Emergency Aid for Education before the House Committee on Education, Feb. 26 to Mar. 1, 1934.)

Decreasing school revenues explained

The reason for the decline in school expenditures and the present financial emergency in public school support is not difficult to find. About 75 percent of the support of public elementary and secondary schools comes from local property taxes and the other 25 percent from other taxes. Local property taxes have greatly declined in amount because assessed valuations have declined and because delinquencies in collections have been heavy. The effect of decreases in assessments and increases in delinquencies on the amount of revenue available for school support is shown in the following table:

POOR STATES HIT HARDEST

An examination of the foregoing table shows that 16 States have had reductions in school revenue of 25 percent or more, and that 17 States have had reductions ranging from 10 to 25 percent. Every one of the 16 States having reductions of 25 percent or more in revenue since 1932 have during the school year 1933–34 been enabled to keep schools open for a normal term only because Federal relief funds have been made available to pay the salaries of rural teachers.

Complete data are not available to show the reductions in amounts suffered by all States during the past 4 or 5 years, but data for California, Ohio, and Arkansas are undoubtedly typical of conditions in other States. For example, since 1929 the reductions in assessments of property for taxation have declined 33 percent in Ohio and Arkansas. And in California the decline since 1930 has been 28 percent. Such decreases in assessed valuations, of course, produce corresponding decrease in local revenue for school support. It happens, however, that the greatest decreases usually occur in the poorest areas of a State, making the emergency much graver than the mere statistics of averages would indicate.

THE EFFECTS OF THE EMERGENCY IN PUBLIC-SCHOOL REVENUES

Chart 3 shows the average expenditure per classroom in seven States in 1931 as compared with 1934. Three of these States, New York, New Jersey, and California, are rich States and have for a long time had high expenditures for public schools. Ohio is shown as a State belonging to the middle group of expenditures per classroom. Three States, South Carolina, Alabama, and Arkansas, are poor States and have always had relatively low expenditures for schools per classroom.

The full length of each bar shows the expenditure per classroom in 1931; the black part of each bar shows the expenditure in 1934; the white part of the bar shows the reduction in expenditures.

Two things are noticeable: (1) the great difference between the rich and poor States in 1931; and (2) the relatively greater differences in 1934. The depression has had a graver effect on the poor States than on the rich. This chart should be an answer to those persons coming from wealthy States who seemingly cannot understand why the school emergency exists in some States and not in others. The actual necessary reductions in 21 States are shown in the following table:

DRASTIC REDUCTIONS IN TEACHERS' SALARIES

Chart 4 shows that out of a total of 860,000 teachers actually employed in 1933–34, about 450,000 were rural teachers; that is, teaching in places of 2,500 population or less.

Of those 450,000 teachers only one-half received more than $750 per year. One-half received less than $750 per year, which is less than the minimum wage required for common laborers by the N.R.A. codes.

Of those who receive less than $750 per year, about 90,000 receive less than $450 per year, a ridiculously low salary which nobody in America should attempt to defend.

No class of people in this country has made greater sacrifices in times of depression than the rural teachers of America. In hundreds of cases they, and they alone, have kept the schools open.

THOUSANDS OF TEACHERS UNPAID

Thousands of teachers have kept the schools open, and have not been paid for their services. The 1st of March at least $55,000,000 was owed to teachers for salaries, and not even warrants had been issued for their salaries, and at least $48,000,000 in warrants that could not be cashed were in the hands of teachers or their creditors. Thus, more than $100,000,000 was owed to teachers.

Where these amounts were owed to teachers is shown in the following table:

States in which Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans for teachers' salaries are urgently needed

State	Salaries in arrears	Warrants constituting an emergency	Explanations
Arizona		$1,280,000	Discounts range from 10–25 percent. At least ⅓ cannot be cashed at all.
Arkansas	$300,000	2,287,977
Colorado		2,066,000	Discount rate; 2–50 percent; large amount not cashable at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE SITUATION IN OHIO

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to show on this chart how the States here have decreased anywhere from 10 to 25 percent in their revenues. For some of the States there is no information, but take Ohio, for example. In my own State, Ohio, the assessed valuation of taxable property has decreased about 15 percent since 1932 and about 33 percent since 1929. Since about 75 percent of our school revenue comes from property taxes and 25 percent from other taxable resources, it is obvious that such reductions in assessed valuations have greatly affected school revenues.

Such facts as these prove what our chairman, Mr. DOUGLASS, has so frequently said, namely, that the States must reorganize their entire taxing systems.

The States must put their houses in order so that they will not need the aid of the Federal Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman speaks of reorganizing their houses. Congress has within the last 2 weeks granted to Dr. Ballou, superintendent of the school system of Washington, a large sum of money to initiate and install in our school program here a system of character building. When we had that under consideration we took the position that as long as the teacher is all right that system would prosper, but if you get the wrong kind of teachers in the schools there will be no success in character building with the little children. Does not the gentleman agree with that proposition?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, I agree with that. But if we do not pay the teachers we already have a salary on which they can live, will not their own characters, their personalities, and efficiency deteriorate? Before we talk so much about the compulsory teaching of patriotism we ought to be consistent and practice some of it ourselves by paying the teachers of the country what we owe them.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I agree that our underpaid teachers should receive proper pay; but it is not just a question of pay. Take the teachers of New York who recently refused to take an oath of allegiance to the United States. Every teacher like that ought to be driven out of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. FLETCHER. In answer to the gentleman, I am willing to agree that the teachers of the United States should take the oath of allegiance just the same as Congressmen do; but I think the school-board members who hire the teachers should go along and take the oath of allegiance, too. Why not have everybody take the oath of allegiance? [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Theoretically, every good American has taken it; but for a teacher, who is a public official and who is getting part of his pay from the United States Government, to refuse to take the oath of allegiance to this Government, he is a sorry kind of teacher. He is a traitor to his country, and he ought to be run out of the country.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to say that I agree with the gentleman from Texas about teachers taking the oath of allegiance, but I do not think that is a matter for legislation by the Federal Government. That is a matter for the States. If the States cannot get teachers to take the oath of allegiance, I do not think the United States Congress should interfere with them and try to tell the States how to run their business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER] has expired.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I think we are going rather far afield from the matter under discussion. Getting back again to Federal aid of schools, it is true, is it not, that there is not a single dollar actually earmarked for educational aid in the appropriation bill that was passed under suspension of the rules the other day?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is true.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. There are $48,000,000 set aside in the estimates upon which the appropriations were based, but there is actually not one dollar earmarked.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does the gentleman not think we can afford, as the National Government, to spend at least as much money to save the schools of America as we are spending for road building?

Mr. FLETCHER. I agree with the proposition that we should save the schools.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does the gentleman not also think that if the Members of this House had an opportunity to vote on the Douglass bill they would pass it by three-fourths of the votes of this House?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there is no question about that. Since the gentleman mentioned the amount as $48,000,000, may I again remind you that there are $55,000,000 owed to teachers now in back pay, without any warrants at all, and $48,000,000 is the amount that has been allocated in back pay with warrants, many of which are not worth a dime?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does not the gentleman feel that as long as the teachers do not get a living wage they cannot teach the children The Star-Spangled Banner with the same patriotic fervor and feeling?

Mr. FLETCHER. I say to you that the children are taught more through their eyes by what they see society doing to their teachers and other victims of the economic situation than they are by all the moralizing we may do in Congress. The children of this Nation are cynical enough now. They will not have much respect for the Congress of the United States which allows their teachers to stand before them every day to talk about the flag and patriotism when their salaries are not paid. [Applause.]

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. What does the gentleman think the children of this country can think of a government that deliberately permits the money lenders to confiscate their farms and their homes? We have it in our power today or any other day to pass legislation that will absolutely stop every foreclosure in this country.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to have permission of this House some day to tell the Members of Congress what the children of the United States, as I have found out, really think about what is happening to us in America. I have taken surveys in schools, colleges, and universities from coast to coast. I have held open forums attended by thousands of the coming citizens of tomorrow and have asked them what they think about many of the vital problems that confront this Nation. You would be surprised to know what they think about Congress and the Government, and about us of the older generation. It would be a good thing to reverse the order and have the adults go to school to the youth for awhile. Adults would learn something that would open their eyes.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. PEYSER. In answer to the gentleman from Texas, permit me to state that the city of New York is in a financial position to pay its school teachers; and it has less crime and communism than any other part of the United States in proportion to population. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I agree with the gentleman that our teachers are underpaid, woefully underpaid. I am in favor of doubling the salaries of many underpaid teachers. I am one of the many friends and admirers of our able and valuable colleague from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER] who appreciates the wonderful assistance he has been to education in the United States. I commend him for it; but I am wondering if his speech is now being broadcast into his State and other States.

Mr. TRUAX. We hope it is.

Mr. FLETCHER. I may say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that politicians in his section of the country practically gave away to landgrabbers and money changers hundreds of millions of dollars worth of land which, if it had not been squandered by politicians, would now be sufficient to finance all the schools in the vast empire of Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I agree with the gentleman; I have been fighting them for 40 years in Texas.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. What must the children of our State think of the shortage of school funds brought about because of the refusal of the chief executive of the State to tax wealth, public utilities, and the financial interests of our great State?

Mr. FLETCHER. There is very strong argument in favor of what I know my good friend from Ohio could say on this subject. Really it is treason against the educational future of the children of Ohio or any State that schools should be closed or handicapped for lack of funds.

Mr. TRUAX. I agree with the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 4 minutes for the purpose of making an announcement.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope that when the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] concludes he will not object to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER] continuing for 5 minutes, for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER] is discussing a subject of very great importance, a subject which has not had as much of the time of the House as it should have had.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER] in order not to break the continuity of his remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask that I may be permitted to address the House for 4 minutes at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER] may be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER] how much time he desires to complete his subject?

Mr. FLETCHER. As much time as the House cares to give me. I do not take up much of the time of the House and this is a subject which is of great importance and in which the entire Nation is vitally interested. I have not asked for more time. The requests that I be given additional time have come from Members of the House. If my time has again expired, I shall not ask to continue.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I hope we will have a little bit more of facts and just a little less of "hot air." [Applause.]

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman mean to be personal?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. No, not at all; I am referring to the interruptions from the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thank the gentleman from Oregon. But I do not object to the questions being asked. The questions from the floor indicate the interest of the Members in this important subject, and I am glad they are showing interest by the questions they are asking.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Ohio will permit, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oregon with regard to the schools of his own State to differentiate between facts and "hot air."

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I want to clear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER] absolutely of that charge made a moment ago.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy and fairness to me.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I was very much interested in the very able and delightful dissertation the gentleman is giving us on the subject of schools. I think the Members need this information. The hot air I was referring to was the hot air from the floor. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am not going to ask the gentleman a political question at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. The gentleman may ask any question he wishes, and I shall be pleased to try to answer it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Can the gentleman state whether or not any money has been earmarked for school purposes?

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand not a cent; and I know Mr. DOUGLASS, Chairman of the Committee on Education, who is here listening, will verify this. I feel, however, Mr. Speaker, that we have a chance here now to earmark at least $75,000,000, the amount designated in the bill introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and therefore I make an appeal to the Members to get in touch with their Senators, in view of the information that has been presented to you by means of these graphic charts I have used in this speech today, and persuade them to include in the deficiency appropriation bill the amount of $75,000,000 definitely earmarked so that we can announce to the country that this much money will be available to open our schools.

All our researches show that $75,000,000 provided in the bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts, is absolutely necessary to meet the crisis in education. We should let the country know now what to expect because they must hire their teachers sometime in June, July, or August, and they must know how much money will be available in order to open the schools and keep them open. The Douglass bill makes this possible. With these facts in mind I hope this Congress will unite in a determined effort to see that the amended deficiency appropriation bill is brought back here from the Senate Appropriations Committee with $75,000,000 earmarked for education. We owe it to the youth of America.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does not the gentleman think the House should appeal to the members of its own Rules Committee to bring out the Douglass bill, because without the authorization which is embodied in the Douglass bill a point of order would be raised against any appropriation being made.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Is there some safeguard in this bill, if we pass it, to prevent cities who have dissipated the funds of the taxpayers through bad organization and bad management from getting this money?

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts and the bill which I introduced to the committee, and all the bills that were seriously considered, include the safeguards to which the gentleman refers. The committee reported favorably the Douglass bill, which designates that the money is to be allocated in accordance with the needs of the States, as shown by the survey. The money will not be allocated to some particular spot, but only where there is great emergency and where money must be allocated in order to keep the schools open.

Mr. O'MALLEY. There are a great many communities in this country where the teachers are unpaid because of a lot of grafting politicians who have dissipated the funds of the people.

Mr. FLETCHER. In his bill the gentleman from Massachusetts anticipated that situation.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. In the opinion of the gentleman, will $75,000,000 be sufficient to open up all the schools?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it will. But the $48,000,000 designated in the deficiency appropriation bill is not sufficient.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will this be in the form of a loan or a gift?

Mr. FLETCHER. It will be an outright grant.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does not the gentleman think we need at least $225,000,000 to do the job right?

Mr. FLETCHER. We have been guided by the findings resulting from researches in the various communities where the need is evident, and $75,000,000, it is estimated, will keep the schools open.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. In support of what the gentleman stated, I may say to him that in the richest county in Michigan it has been found that a great many of the rural teachers are receiving as low as $270 a year and that 41 districts out of 177 could not operate at all according to law.

Mr. FLETCHER. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that his own State is many millions behind in educational funds.

Mr. KENNEY. Would the gentleman have any objection if the bill were amended to provide that no money should be paid to any teacher who had refused to take an oath to support the Constitution?

Mr. FLETCHER. If the gentleman heard the speech of our chairman, Mr. DOUGLASS, when a similar situation was before us at the time we were considering the Ellzey-George bill to allocate $3,000,000 to vocational education, he will remember that Mr. DOUGLASS specifically opposed that very proposition. Those of us who are following the intelligent and constructive leadership of our very able chairman are anxious that the Federal Government does not interfere with the educational curricula or policy of any State. Therefore, we are opposed to your proposition of Federal interference with the functions of the State.

Mr. KENNEY. Does not the gentleman think it is the business of this Congress to see that everybody throughout the country, and especially those who are rearing our children, support the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am in favor of everyone supporting the Constitution, but we are not here today discussing the question as to whether the Federal Government or the States should handle that proposition. The States themselves ought to have intelligence enough to see to it that every school teacher, and every school board member, takes an oath of office. I am reminded by the gentleman from Indiana to refer to his State in this discussion. Indiana is one of the few States of the Union that has enacted adequate revenue measures for schools. Indiana has a sales tax which created a good bit of disturbance at first, but they are taking care of their educational institutions in Indiana. I do not advocate a sales tax, but I think that some legislative plan should be adopted by the other States to enable them to put their houses in order.

Mr. KENNEY. The gentleman knows, I presume, that there are only 13 States in the Union which require their teachers to take an oath to support the Constitution. The States memorialize Congress quite frequently giving their views, and I think it is up to the Congress to memorialize the States on questions of patriotism.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection if Congress wants to take that action, but I think the States should handle the matter themselves.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, may I say that educators are just as important to the welfare of this country as are legislators. The legislation which we enact into law will not amount to much unless the children have the necessary training in citizenship. Children denied education easily become maladjusted citizens, and the maladjusted citizen is a very grave menace to the stability of any government. This country cannot rise above the level of what the citizens think, and the citizens cannot think above the level of what they know. They are not going to know enough if we continue in our failure to pay the salaries of our teachers. I am in favor of financing education as a matter of national defense. [Applause.]

GIVE EVERY AMERICAN CHILD A CHANCE

By presenting these facts to Congress today, illustrated by the graphic charts, I have tried to show that a real emergency in the support of public schools is beyond question. It should be met by the Federal Government for the same reasons that other emergencies are being met by the Federal Government.

The very people who are now being helped by the Federal Government are the same people who have the children to be educated.

For the same reason that local communities and States are not now able to care for their relief problems, these same communities and States are unable to meet the financial emergency in public-school support.

The Federal Government does have an interest in what happens to the children of this Nation. In the eyes of some people the children are wholly the responsibility of the Nation.

It is strikingly strange, however, that in time of war or national calamity the Federal Government considers the young men, the children of yesterday, the property of the Nation and not of the States.

When soldiers are drafted the Federal Government does not ask whether they come from Maine or Texas, California or South Carolina.

If the Federal Government can afford to waste billions of dollars in killing youth in times of war, then the same Federal Government can afford to invest a few dollars in training and educating youth in times of peace. Does the Nation have any interest in these hundreds of thousands of American youth, many of whom may be denied educational opportunity unless something is done to meet this situation? The answer is obvious.

Then let the Nation protect its interest in the citizens of tomorrow. Let the Federal Government, during the emergency at least, cooperate with the States in seeing to it that sufficient funds are guaranteed to the States, according to their respective needs, to keep the doors of educational opportunity open to every child in America. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, there comes a time in everyone's life when it is necessary to make some important decision, and I refer now to the announcement recently made by my distinguished colleague the Honorable W. W. HASTINGS, Representative in Congress from the Second Congressional District of Oklahoma, to the effect that he is voluntarily retiring to private life at the conclusion of the work of the present session.

Congressman HASTINGS, better known as "Bill" by his friends, is distinctly a product of what is now Oklahoma, having been born in old Indian Territory, and educated in the male seminary, which was conducted by the leaders of the tribe of Indians of which he is an honored member. Afterwards he obtained his law degree from Cumberland University, and, if I am correctly informed, was a classmate of our distinguished floor leader, the Honorable JOE BYRNS, of Tennessee.

The Cherokee Indian race, of which he is a member, originally was moved from the eastern portion of the United States to what was formerly Indian Territory. It has given to civilization many prominent citizens, and among the outstanding Cherokee was Sequoyah, who invented the alphabet that made it possible to translate the sound language into writing. Because of this invention it is said that the Cherokees became better educated and more enlightened than any other tribe of Indians, and as a mark of respect and honor to this great character there is now standing in the Hall of Fame a statue of his likeness.

Congressman BILL HASTINGS has spent the greater portion of his life in service for the Indian people and his Government. Some 42 years ago he first arrived in Washington to assist in the settlement of a controversy that existed between his race and the Federal Government. This agreement resulted in an amendment to the appropriation bill ratifying the so-called "Cherokee-strip agreement", and the same was opened up for settlement on November 16, 1893.

Afterwards he took an active interest in the creation of a Commission, which was known as the "Dawes Commission", that caused to be enrolled some 42,000 members of his tribe. Later, before the Court of Claims, he was successful in bringing about the elimination of the so-called "freedman" from the rolls, and this decision met the approval of the members of his tribe.

In 1907 Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory were merged into one State, called Oklahoma, and when the Legislature passed the congressional redistricting bill, which was sponsored by me as a Member of the Senate and chairman of the committee, he received the nomination and was elected as a Member of the House from the district that he has represented from the Sixty-fourth Congress up to the present date, with the exception of 2 years.

Congressman HASTINGS has been a Member of the Committees on Education, Indian Affairs, Banking, and Appropriations. No Member has given any finer service to his constituents, the State of Oklahoma, and the Nation, than he. His voluntary retirement from this body takes away the only Member of Indian blood, and, in my opinion, the best informed person in the United States on Indian matters.

As chairman of the Oklahoma house delegation, I want to add a word in the way of a personal tribute for the fine way that he has cooperated with the delegation in looking after every matter in the interest of our great State. When it comes to loyalty, fidelity, integrity efficiency, and hard work, I know of no Member who has so fully measured up to the requirements of a faithful public servant, as he, and it is a source of deep regret, not only to me, but to every Member of the House, that he has decided to end his congressional service.

It is often the case that a constituency does not have a proper appreciation of the fine standing, and the high regard in which a Member is held by his colleagues in the House of Representatives. Oftentimes they are disposed to listen to the cry of selfish individuals, who participate in a campaign of slander and villification, until it is too late to realize that the high position and prestige of the district has gone.

Congressman BILL HASTINGS, in retiring to his home at Tahlequah, takes with him his lovely wife and three children, who have been an inspiration to him all during his services, and I wish to express the hope that in all of their undertakings they will be rewarded with success, happiness, and prosperity.

In conclusion I want to ask that each Member of the Oklahoma delegation be allowed to extend in the RECORD at this point such remarks as he may care to make relative to our distinguished colleague, the Honorable W. W. HASTINGS. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, it is a genuine pleasure to add a few words to the splendid tribute just paid our colleague, Congressman W. W. HASTINGS, of Oklahoma. When I first came to Washington and needed help and advice I frequently called on Congressman HASTINGS, and he was never too busy to lend a helping hand. I soon found that "BILL" HASTINGS, as his colleagues from Oklahoma take the liberty of calling him, was the last word on Indian affairs. I have repeatedly said that BILL HASTINGS knows more about Indian affairs than any other man in either House of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, as I believe it has heretofore been stated, Congressman W. W. HASTINGS entered Congress in 1914. Ripe experience had equipped him for his work. For many years he had represented, in one capacity after another, the Cherokee Tribe of Indians, of which he is a member. For years he had represented his people before the committees of Congress, the departments of the Government, and the courts. In this way he became familiar with the legislative and departmental methods of our Government.

Congressman HASTINGS had been active in tribal affairs for many years before he came to Congress, and held many positions under the Cherokee government, including attorney general and national attorney, with authority to represent the nation before the commission which made the final rolls and allotted the lands to the members of his tribe.

Upon entering Congress he first saw service on the Banking and Currency Committee and took an active part in the preparation and enactment of the rural credits bill, which made provision for loans to farmers, repayable upon the amortization plan. Since that time he has taken an active interest in legislation for the farmers and in amending the rural credits bill during the present Congress by providing for the guaranteeing by the Government of the Federal land-bank bonds.

He has been deeply interested in good roads and also in the extension of the Rural Mail Service, both of which are of great benefit to the rural population of our State and of the Nation.

As a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, he brought to it a rich experience and a knowledge of Indian law and customs, which was valuable not only to the members of the committee, but to the Congress as well.

He has sponsored much legislation in the interest of the Indians, and under his direction jurisdictional bills were enacted by Congress to permit the Indians to submit their claims to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

He was a Member of the House during the World War, and the responsibility was his to assist in enacting legislation for the successful prosecution and early termination of the war. He did this whole-heartedly.

During the past 10 years he has been a member of the Committee on Appropriations and has been assigned to two subcommittees—Interior Department and independent offices. His service on this great committee has been of great benefit to our State and Nation.

As a member of the Interior Department subcommittee he has made a study of appropriations for the Indians, including health work and education. Much progress has been made during the last 10 years along these lines, due in a large measure to his assistance and guidance.

As a member of the independent offices subcommittee he has assisted in making appropriations and the enactment of legislation for the soldiers.

He voluntarily retires from Congress and leaves with assurances of the best wishes and good will of each member of the Oklahoma delegation. I am sure I speak the sentiment of every Member of this House when I say that his leaving is a distinct loss to Congress, to the State of Oklahoma, and to the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, may I have unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, this is an unexpected compliment. I very greatly appreciate this expression of confidence and good will on behalf of the Membership of the House.

I was first elected to Congress 20 years ago and saw service under five distinguished Speakers: Clark, Gillette, Longworth, Garner, and the present distinguished Speaker, Rainey.

I have seen service in the House both in the majority and in the minority. It was my privilege to serve during an important period in our history. I have seen service under five Presidents: Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, and Roosevelt.

When I entered Congress the World War was raging across the seas. The responsibility was mine to represent a splendid district and a State in part when the World War resolution was passed in April 1917, and I supported all measures which threw our entire resources and man power into the balance for the successful conduct of the war and its early termination.

The privilege was mine to see service in the enactment of the rehabilitation legislation which followed the war, and, of course, I have seen service during the intervening years.

The present Congress has been the most difficult in which I have served. The stock crash ushered the depression upon us in 1929. During the past 16 months I have had the privilege of assisting in the enactment of a great deal of far-reaching legislation, some quite drastic, much of it temporary, some permanent, but all, as we hope, for the purpose of bringing about normal conditions and restoring happiness and prosperity to the people of the Nation.

The result of this and other legislation Congress may enact before adjournment will be left to the future. History in the end will record a true verdict.

My experience in public affairs has been greatly enriched by my association with the able and patriotic Members of this House. I have been accorded most generous consideration by all Members on both sides of the aisle. I want to acknowledge my very deep indebtedness to them. During my service here my relations with the members of my own delegation have been most cordial and intimate. I am under renewed obligations to the dean of the Oklahoma delegation and to each member of it.

With the fall of the gavel upon the adjournment of this Congress, I am voluntarily retiring and am glad to know I am doing this with the good will of the Membership of the House with whom I have served, and in return each of you may rest assured that I go leaving with you not only my very best wishes and highest regards but my very deep affection. I shall always cherish the memory of this occasion. [Applause.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] leaves the Halls of this Congress, there goes from here the best-informed man on Indian affairs in this country. He is a member of the great Cherokee Nation, and the blood of proud chieftains and Governors flows through his veins. He comes from one of the most illustrious families of the Cherokee Nation. For years he has appeared in Washington as the spokesman for that great intelligent nation.

I knew him in the early days, and I can tell you some wonderful things he has done. When the camp fires of democracy were burning low, when there was no hope of a reward, when we faced the battle of existence as a party he fought with us. Always true to the interests of his people and his State, and so now I say to him, God bless you, we all love you, good-bye. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear all these complimentary remarks made of my colleague from Oklahoma, Mr. HASTINGS; and whether we measure by what he has done, what he has been, and what he will do, I believe he is entitled to all the good things that have been said about him, and I approve of all of them.

I also approve of the splendid idea of saying good things of the living rather than wait until they have passed to the Great Beyond. A poet has well expressed my feeling in the following words:

A rose to the living is more,
Ere the suffering spirit has fled.
A rose to the living is more
Than sumptuous wreaths to the dead.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, during the past 12 years I have been a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House. During all of these years I have been more or less in constant touch with the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma, who is now retiring from public life, temporarily, I hope and believe. I may say in passing now to him and to my fellows in the House, that perhaps none of us at this moment deserve more encomiums because of service well performed than does this man WILL HASTINGS.

I refer now particularly to the work he has done for his own Indian people. Nor would I refer to that alone, because this man has been more than an Indian here, he has been just as good a white man as any of the rest of us in the promotion of good legislation for all of the people of our country. [Applause.]

I sincerely trust, Mr. Speaker, that what I have heard along the sidelines may be true, and that in the next 2 years we of the House, and perhaps some of the other body, may have the delightful experience of welcoming him again beneath the dome of our Capitol, to continue further service in behalf of his country. [Applause.]

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to take this opportunity to say a few words concerning the services of my friend and colleague, Congressman WILLIAM W. HASTINGS, of the Second Congressional District of Oklahoma.

Congressman HASTINGS is one of the most industrious and able Members of Congress with whom I have been acquainted during my service here. The House of Representatives is composed of members of various professions—distinguished lawyers who will compare favorably with members of that profession in any State, and even with the members of the Supreme Court itself. In this body we have several distinguished physicians and surgeons whose reputations extend beyond the limits of their own State. We have noted ministers, business men, trainmen, farmers, and members of other professions. In this body you will find experts in many different lines. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is a great compliment to have the reputation in this organization of 435 men and women of being the best-informed man on any one subject. It is conceded that Mr. HASTINGS is the greatest authority in the United States upon Indian affairs.

He was reared among the brave and noble Cherokees and is a member by blood of that tribe. In early life he began to familiarize himself not only with Indian customs but with the laws and treaties regulating the affairs of the different tribes. For more than 40 years he has been in public life and leaves a record worthy of the emulation of any young man. From the great tribe of the Cherokees, who were brave in war and generous in victory, he inherited some of their leading characteristics, namely, absolute sincerity in all his actions, strict attention to his own business, and always a supporter of law and order. After this long service, Congressman HASTINGS is voluntarily retiring from public life to live with his family around his own fireside and among his neighbors and friends.

Mr. Speaker, Congressman HASTINGS has been a great honor to his native State of Oklahoma and to the country. Regardless of who may be sent here to succeed him and how bright and industrious he may be, he will stay here a long time before he will achieve the position of prominence and influence enjoyed by Congressman HASTINGS in the House of Representatives.

DISCUSSES FARM LEGISLATION

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, as the second session of the Seventy-third Congress draws to a close, I doubt if any Member of this House is wholly satisfied with the accomplishments thus far attained. But inasmuch as this House is composed of 435 Members, representing many divergent views, it is therefore impossible for each Member to secure all the legislation he desires. At this time I desire to discuss several of the achievements and possibly some of the shortcomings of the Congress soon to pass into history.

FARMERS IN DEPTHS OF DESPAIR

Practically every bank in the country was closed on the day Franklin D. Roosevelt was inaugurated President. Business was at a standstill. Our farmers were in the depths of despair. Prices of farm products had fallen to such ridiculously low levels it was hardly worth while to haul anything to market. More than 12,000,000 people were out of work. Women and children were hungry and naked in a land of plenty.

On every side, people were asking, "What will happen next?" The terrible situation demanded immediate and drastic action. Critics no doubt would like to forget that pitiful picture. Extreme Democratic partisans are saying that the depression is over, everybody is prospering, and everything is lovely. Extreme Republican partisans are saying conditions are worse than under the Hoover regime and that the country is fast going to the bow wows. Neither position is fair. Neither statement is a true picture of the real facts. Admitting there have been mistakes, possibly too many of them, it must also be admitted that there has been no lack of action on the part of the President. He has demonstrated that he is not afraid to tackle gigantic tasks nor venture down untrodden paths. [Applause.]

SPECIAL SESSION PASSED 12 CONSTRUCTIVE MEASURES

The special session of Congress called by President Roosevelt met on one of the blackest days in the history of this great land of ours and quickly passed 12 major constructive administration measures to start the new deal recovery program. I am glad to say I supported every one of them, believing the President's program should be given a fair trial. Then came the second session, which up to now has passed some 25 major administration measures.

Frankly, I am disappointed that several other measures I have advocated for years have not yet received favorable consideration and some of which seem doomed so far as the present session is concerned. Among those bills so far ignored are the Frazier-Lemke bill, the Wheeler silver bill, the Thomas-Swank cost-of-production amendment, and a practical, comprehensive, and fair old-age security bill, all of which I have heretofore advocated on the floor of this House and before the respective committees.

RECOVERY OF AGRICULTURE LAGGING

No one pretends to say that economic conditions are what they ought to be and what we hope they will be within the next 12 months. Recovery in agriculture has been lagging. One big reason for that, of course, is that this great industry was neglected for 12 long years by Republican administrations. Not only was it neglected, but it was penalized by tariff laws which increased prices of what the farmer had to buy and gradually shut off foreign markets for farm products by forcing the enactment of retaliatory foreign tariff laws which now may never be repealed or greatly modified by foreign governments.

Prices of farm commodities have not reached the levels we hoped they would and what we have every reason to believe they will be 6 months or a year hence. But when compared with prices that the so-called "Hoover prosperity" regime gave the country, there has been a considerable improvement. We no longer are selling wheat for 25 to 30 cents a bushel and cotton for 4 to 6 cents a pound.

BENEFITS OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Many criticized the Congress and the President when the Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed, declaring it unconstitutional and un-American. But it must be admitted that it saved the cotton farmer from complete collapse in 1933 and sent millions of much-needed cash into the State of Oklahoma, both in the form of plow-up checks and increased prices of cotton. Congress cannot be criticized for the mistakes made in administering the act.

BANKHEAD BILL DRASTIC 1-YEAR EXPERIMENT

Now a hue and cry has gone up against the President and Congress because of the passage of what is known as the "Bankhead cotton control bill." Frankly, I opposed the bill as a 5-year plan, but supported it, at the President's request, as a 1-year emergency measure. The bill is a drastic effort to save the farmer from 3- to 4-cent cotton this fall. Its sponsors believe it will force in line those big planters of the South who threatened to double or treble their acreage and take advantage of the fact that a majority of the farmers in Oklahoma and the other producing States had agreed to cut their acreage voluntarily. These big planters fought the bill bitterly and are criticizing the President for asking for the bill and for signing it. One of the striking things is that the only person who appeared before the committee opposing the bill was a gentleman from the State of Mississippi who manages a corporation-owned plantation of 48,000 acres, which he said was tilled by about 1,600 share croppers. He revealed that 60 percent of the stock in his corporation was owned in England. Those foreign stockholders care little for their 1,600 tenants, and less for the American farmer. I am sure the gentleman's testimony did more than any one thing to bring about the passage of this bill by a vote of 235 to 105, with every old-guard Republican leader voting against it.

EMERGENCY LEGISLATION INSUFFICIENT

I am convinced, however, that if the farmer is to come into his own, Mr. Speaker, that he must have something more substantial than emergency legislation. Crop reduction and curtailment will not solve the problem. Consumption of all farm commodities must be increased by increasing purchasing power.

Economists tell us that on the day Franklin D. Roosevelt was inaugurated President our debts, public and private, exceeded the total wealth of the land for the first time in our history. That is an alarming fact. Farm indebtedness, in mortgages on real estate, crops, and chattels, accounted for a staggering share of that great load of debt, most of them made when prices of things the farmer has to sell were fairly high. When prices collapsed a vast army of the finest people in the land were driven from their homes by foreclosure. Many others face foreclosure today. They are bankrupt and cannot pay their interest and taxes. One thing the previous administration did not seem to realize is the fact that it is impossible for 5-cent cotton to pay off a mortgage made when cotton was 20 cents a pound.

FARMERS DEMAND SQUARE DEAL

Is it any wonder that our farmers feel they have not had a square deal when they remember that during all this time our Government was providing cheap money through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to lend to failing banks, mortgage companies, and gigantic corporations? Government loans provided mortgage companies with ready cash to meet their obligations, permitting them to foreclose on farms and hold the real estate for the advance in prices they knew was coming. I favor legislation to force these mortgage companies to sell their land back to the former owners at the price they paid for it and I also favor exempting homesteads from taxation. Corporation farming is one of the big threats facing our country today.

FAVOR FRAZIER-LEMKE BILL

In this connection, let me remind Members of this House once more than I favor the Frazier-Lemke bill to lend money to farmers at a low rate of interest over a long period of years, permitting them to save their homes and regain their farms. It would permit the tenant farmer to refinance his debts and get out from under impossible burdens so that he can own his own home. It would aid materially in helping fulfill the fondest dreams of thousands of energetic, ambitious, and honest but landless citizens. [Applause.]

This bill is part of the Farmers Union program, a program I have supported loyally during my four terms in Congress. Another bill the Farmers Union advocates is the Wheeler bill to remonetize silver. That, if passed, would help increase the price of farm commodities and permit farmers to pay off their debts with money somewhere near the same value as when the debts were made.

Many leading farmers in every county of the district I represent have endorsed my stand for the Frazier-Lemke bill and the Wheeler silver bill. I am reminded of what a good farmer friend residing at Fletcher, Okla., recently wrote:

We must have cheap money. If the Government can lend money to foreign countries and railroads and corporations at 1 to 1½ percent, I don't see why the farmer can't get it when he has old mother earth for security. We must have a better price for our produce and cheaper money if we are ever to get out of the woods.

LEI'KE-M'KEOWN BILL

This morning I appeared with the Honorable WILLIAM LEMKE and other members of the farm bloc in Congress before the Rules Committee and made a plea for a rule in behalf of a modified Lemke-McKeown bill, recently reported out of the Judiciary Committee. This, of course, is not the Frazier-Lemke bill; but if passed it would bring relief to many distressed farmers who otherwise will face foreclosure of their homes.

The silver bill passed the other day by this House is not altogether satisfactory to me; but if the administration of it is sympathetic, it will put more than a billion dollars of silver into circulation and is certain to raise prices of all farm products, something we must have before we can hope to enjoy any appreciable prosperity. Although the bill as passed was not altogether satisfactory to me, it was far better than nothing.

FEDERAL FUNDS FOR WEAK RURAL SCHOOLS

The depression crippled practically every rural school in the State of Oklahoma. Farmers not only lacked money to buy food and clothing, had no money to pay taxes, but also were unable to keep their schools open. Thousands of children were affected. The Federal Government came to the aid of the so-called "weak" schools in a limited way during the year just closed. But that was not enough. I hope to see educational opportunities equalized for all our boys and girls and the heavy burden for support of the schools lessened. During this session I introduced a measure which would do that, and have been urging $75,000,000 Federal funds for our schools next year. It now seems, however, that this amount may be cut to $48,000,000 for our weak schools next year.

PROPOSED TEXTBOOK CODE

I am also glad that another House resolution I introduced blocked a code proposed by the big textbook companies which would have abrogated existing contracts, sidestepped State laws, and hiked prices generally. Schoolmen who investigated the matter stated before the House Rules Committee that the code, if adopted as proposed, would have cost the people of the country $10,000,000.

VETERANS' CUTS AND FEDERAL SALARIES

Local taxpayers were relieved of additional charity burdens when this Congress voted a measure of relief to some 29,000 disabled World War veterans, cut off and left at the mercy of private charity and local taxpayers by harsh and unreasonable rules of the Veteran's Administration. We provided small monthly compensation for the 29,000 presumptively service-connected veterans, 90 percent of whom are tuberculars or mental cases, with the passage of the much misunderstood independent offices appropriation bill. That bill carried out three of the four points of the American Legion's program for relief of disabled veterans and their dependents. In order to provide relief for these deserving veterans, it was necessary to cut salaries of Members of Congress $500 a year and reduce all Government salaries 5 percent, but I was glad to do that in keeping with my pledge to the people of the Sixth District that I would do everything in my power to see that these disabled veterans got a square deal. The bill, although it provided $9,312,500 for these presumptives, reduced governmental expenses $105,000,000 by continuing Federal salary cuts that otherwise would have expired June 30, 1934.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; I yield with pleasure.

Mr. PATMAN. I am very much interested in the gentleman's constructive statement. If the gentleman will permit, I should like to say I am sure that the veterans, as well as the farmers, of his State of Oklahoma, appreciate the good work the gentleman is doing and has done in the past for them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Texas for his generous compliment.

SHOULD AMERICAN BAYONETS PROTECT INVESTMENTS?

There has been a great hue and cry made by Wall Street income-tax payers and tax evaders about the enormous cost of caring for our helpless and disabled war veterans. The National Economy League, composed largely of war profiteers, did not warn us of the enormous cost of war when we were about to get into the last one. They were strangely silent when the Hoover and prior administrations sent American marines and gunboats into Central America and other foreign lands to protect American investments. I favor protecting our citizens, but I am not one who believes the flag should follow the dollar when it goes off into some foreign land hunting for bigger profits and greater dividends. American exploitation of Central and South America, under the shadow of American bayonets and with the full protection of American battleships, almost wrecked the independent oil industry of America in order to protect the Mellon interests, the Dutch Shell, the Standard Oil, and other Wall Street millionaires who had made investments in those foreign lands.

TREMENDOUS COST OF WAR

All of us know that generations yet unborn will continue for many years to pay the staggering cost of the last war. War should be abolished if for no other reason than the tremendous tax burden that always follows in its wake. No civilized person wants this great country of ours again thrust into the throes of war. Speaking on this subject, February 17, 1932, on the floor of this House I said in part:

Men who have faced machine guns, who have suffered the privations and hardships of war, who have stood in the muddy, filthy, cootie-infested trenches of Flanders Field, Chateau-Thierry, and the Argonne Forest, do not desire another war. They abhor the thought of another armed conflict. The sad memories of the last one to thousands are not only a terrible nightmare but a grim reality. They think of war as heartless military murder. They know, too, that war is utterly useless and seldom settles anything. Mothers, wives, and sisters of our war veterans are more bitter against war. Millions of innocent and helpless children cry out against war.

WOULD ELIMINATE WAR PROFITEERING

For many years I have been insisting that one of the most practical ways of lessening the likelihood of future wars is by conscripting money and materials as well as men in time of war. In my first race for Congress I advocated what is known as the "Universal Draft Act", to eliminate war profiteers, at which time I called attention to the fact that some 30,000 new millionaires were made during the last war, many of whom profiteered to the tune of from 500 to 1,000 percent. The proposed Universal Draft Act was not popular then, as few seemed to care about war profiteers, but we are becoming war conscious now and sentiment has been growing until Members who shunned the universal draft a few years ago are now supporting it enthusiastically. In one of my first speeches made on this subject in Congress, back in 1928, I said, among other things:

If peace is to be maintained in this great land of ours, we must take the profits out of war. We must eliminate the blighting effects of the damnable profiteers who have amassed great fortunes out of war. We must make it plain to our people and the world that property is no more sacred to America than human lives. We must conscript every available resource in this country in case of armed conflict. That will do far more, Mr. Speaker, toward perpetuating the peace of the world than all the peace conferences held in the past decade. Let us eliminate the profits of war, and then, when the other nations follow our example, peace will breathe as fragrantly in the world almost as if the day of redemption had come.

It is a source of much regret to me that this Congress, like preceding Congresses, has ignored not only the proposed universal draft but several other important progressive proposals of far-reaching importance.

FIGHT AGAINST POVERTY WORSE THAN WAR

Believing that those who profited most out of the war and believing also that those who are best able to pay should be taxed more heavily for the expenses of running this great Government that has been so good to them, I did not hesitate to vote during the present session to increase income taxes, especially in the higher brackets. I am glad to say that I was one of the 79 Members of this House who voted for another 10-percent increase, added by the progressives of the Senate after the House had raised income-tax rates to war-time levels. We are now and for the past 2 years have faced conditions that in some respects are worse than war. We are facing a war against poverty, unemployment, and almost universal distress. It takes money to fight a war of that kind. Someone is going to have to pay the bill for the billions we are spending to feed the hungry of the land and provide work for the unemployed. Why not make those best able to pay bear the brunt of the burden?

GOVERNMENT EXPENSES MUST BE CUT

Speaking on this subject of taxation on the floor of the House not long ago I said in part:

But my distinguished and able friend has repeatedly asked the question today, "What do you propose to do about it?" That is a fair question and I propose to answer it. Aside from increasing the surtax, corporation tax, income tax, gift tax, and estate tax I would reenact the excess-profits tax that brought in over $300,000,000 in 1921. Then I would cut expenses of the Government to the bone before calling on the people for additional taxes. I would actually abolish countless commissions and overlapping and useless boards and bureaus. You cannot cut too much there for me. I would cut and slash Federal salaries, especially in the higher brackets. Personally, I would gladly accept a cut of 10 percent, 20 percent, or more in order to do my part to assist the recovery program.

MADE NO EXTRAVAGANT PROMISES

No doubt many of the new Members who came here for the inauguration with various measures they had hoped to have passed immediately have been disappointed because these measures are still languishing in committees. They have been disappointed to find that seniority is everything in the House and that no Member can hope to gain a position of power and influence without serving 8 or 10 years as an apprentice here. I felt that same disappointment keenly when I came here 8 years ago and found I could not get the major committee assignments I felt I deserved because of my many years of previous service in the Oklahoma State Senate. I must say I was more than surprised when I found that a new Member could not even make a motion to adjourn without special permission from the Speaker. Fortunately, however, I had made no wild and extravagant promises in my campaign and had not told the people I would set the world on fire if elected.

HELPED WRITE MUSCLE SHOALS BILL

In touching on the accomplishments of the Seventy-third Congress, I am proud of having had a small part in sponsoring one bill of great national importance—the Muscle Shoals bill. It was my good fortune to be a member of the delegation that went to Muscle Shoals with the President and Senator NORRIS, and to be a member of the subcommittee that wrote the Muscle Shoals bill, one of the first major measures asked for by the President and one that promises to outline a new and far-reaching national policy on the controversial power question.

During the present Congress I have thoroughly enjoyed my work, although my responsibilities, as well as my opportunities for greater service, have increased manyfold. Correspondence is many times as heavy as it was even 2 years ago. More than 100,000 letters have come to my desk since the inauguration of President Roosevelt. It is obvious that the two clerks allowed me under the law could not begin to do the work required in my office. I have, therefore, been glad to employ considerable extra office help at my own expense in order to give prompt and efficient service to the people of the Sixth District.

PEOPLE WILL NOT BE SWEPT OFF FEET

I am proud to have the honor to represent the splendid people of the Sixth District. They have been loyal to me under all circumstances. They have not been swept off their feet by wild charges and insincere statements of those who have sought to destroy me in the past, and they will not do so now. I have an abiding faith in the people. I have remained at my post of duty here, feeling it my patriotic duty to render every possible assistance in helping bring order out of chaos. That is much more important than the reelection of any Member of Congress. I have refused to go home and campaign, even though my friends insisted that I do so, because I have hoped to have an opportunity before the close of this session to vote for the Frazier-Lemke bill, old-age security legislation, and several other progressive measures of so vital importance to the farmers and plain people of America. I feel that it is the solemn duty of each of their true friends to remain at his post here as long as there is any possibility of being of service, either in voting for progressive legislation or in killing bad legislation.

I HAVE KEPT THE FAITH

In closing, let me say that I am proud of the record I have been able to make during my four terms in Congress. The increased majorities given me by the voters of the district have not only been a personal satisfaction to me but have added materially to my influence and power with my colleagues and administration leaders at the National Capital. At any rate, I feel in my heart that I can look my constituents in the face and paraphrase the saying I learned at my dear old mother's knee, "I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith." And I know the people will keep faith with me. [Applause.]

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the first bill in order on the Private Calendar.

CONCRETE ENGINEERING CO.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1540) for the relief of the Concrete Engineering Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2139) for the relief of the Western Union Telegraph Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MEMBERS OF RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2688, to validate payments for medical and hospital treatment of members of Reserve Officers' Training Corps and citizens' military training camps.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

AN OUTRAGEOUS ATTACK ON THE POOR MAN'S SOURCE OF SUPPLY—HOW THE NATIONAL RECOVERY ADMINISTRATIN IS USED TO CARRY OUT THE WHIMS OF SELFISH CLIQUES

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I feel I would be neglectful of my duty as a Member of Congress if I failed to call to your attention and the attention of the Congress and the people of the Nation with great emphasis today, to an outrageous proceeding now being fostered by certain persons connected with the National Recovery Administration and certain code authorities. A proceeding, Mr. Speaker, which, in fact, is an outrageous attack upon one of the oldest industries in America, an industry which is a source of supply for the poor man and woman of this Nation—those who toil in the fields and factories of America. I refer to the proposed hearing scheduled for Monday, June 18, in the auditorium of the Department of Commerce Building, at which a little clique of New York union organizers and clothing and dress manufacturers will attempt to lay the foundation for the ultimate destruction of the cotton-garment industry. This industry now gives employment to between 180,000 and 200,000 men and women in 3,800 factories, scattered through 42 States of the Nation, and many of these factories are located in my own State and district of Indiana.

Were it not so serious in its effect upon the men and women of this Nation as a whole, the proposal which is being made by the clique to which I refer would be amusing. It is unfortunate indeed that the National Recovery Administration and the President of the United States should be imposed upon in the manner which I will relate, and I think you will agree when I have outlined to you the facts that it is high time we ponder seriously upon the extent to which an otherwise salutary law may be used for selfish ends.

The 3,800 factories in the cotton-garment industry in America produce work shirts, work trousers, men's and boys' cotton pants, cotton wash dresses, and other items of apparel used by the farmers of this Nation—the toilers of this Nation—the wives and children of our people, upon whom fortune has not bestowed the wherewithal to robe themselves in more princely attire. The industry of which I speak is the industry which sold to that truck driver you see passing the denim overalls he wears. It is the industry which sold to the basement store the cotton wash dress in which the farmer's wife attempts to look her best in the evening of her worried day. It is the industry which places on the miner's back and the iceman's back and the service-station worker's back the work shirt, without which he could not perform the functions of his daily routine. It is the industry which provides the cotton trousers for your youngsters. Its products are worn today by those who make up the bulk of our citizenry, from the men who swing the pick to the men who guide the lathe.

It is the largest industry consuming cotton goods in the world. Upon its successful development in the totality of our industrial life depends largely the welfare of the cotton farmers of the South. I especially invite the attention of my colleagues from the cotton-producing States to this situation.

Can you think of an industry with a wider or more potent influence upon our daily life than the cotton-garment industry?

And yet there are those who are fashioning the destruction of the industry and are attempting to use high-sounding language in connection with the National Industrial Recovery Act to cloak their schemes. But no high-sounding language can successfully obliterate facts.

Leaders of this great industry, after 6 months of daily corridor pacing at the National Recovery Administration Building, finally obtained approval of a code of fair competition on November 17, 1933, having presented their code for approval back in July 1933. The International Association of Garment Manufacturers, which for 25 years has held together in a representative trade association the leading firms of this great industry, fought step by step through all the red-tape mechanisms of N.R.A. to hold the cotton-garment industry in one workable code, and to those leaders and to the cotton-garment code authority this Nation is indebted today for having wiped out the sweatshop or the substandard shop and raised this industry to the dignity of a potent factor in national recovery.

The $3 per week operator, who slaved for 50 hours stitching in the hot summer and cold winter of 1932 has disappeared from American industry.

No power on earth could have brought this about except the intelligent, concentrated effort of the leaders of this industry, working under a code of fair competition, and just when the fruits of 1 year's efforts are being realized, the clique attacks.

One of the outstanding figures in all the deliberations attending the consideration of the cotton-garment code was one, Sidney Hillman, who since the inception of N.R.A. has, with respect to the apparel industry, enjoyed an almost autocratic power as member of the Labor Advisory Board, assigned to the clothing and apparel sections.

Mr. Hillman also enjoys the position of consulting member of the Consumers Board, and is at the same time president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, a union organization dominating the clothing industry, and located, except negligibly, in the metropolitan area of New York City.

Mr. Hillman as a labor organizer has been one of the most successful in the field. He is a power in that field. He is the power and brains of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union. Without him little is done in the clothing industry, and by that industry I refer to the manufacture of woolen clothing, suits and overcoats. As a result of an untiring daily activity in the affairs of N.R.A., Mr. Hillman's word in connection with codes affecting apparel is perhaps as powerful in the offices of N.R.A. as it is within the union organizations he dominates and controls. There is nothing in the cotton-garment code today except that to which Mr. Hillman agreed, and much of what was sought to be placed in the cotton-garment code by the leaders of the industry who knew the industry's problem, was eliminated from the code at Mr. Hillman's demand. An able, clever, and intelligent union protagonist, he has naturally grown into a position of importance second to none in N.R.A.

Mr. Hillman's activities are largely centered on consideration of codes now coming under the supervision of Divisional Administrator Sol Rosenblatt, who rose to prominence at N.R.A. through his identification with the motion-picture and theatrical codes, but who now enjoys the supervisory direction, not only of the codes mentioned but also codes including that on burlesque, legitimate drama, circuses, advertising, cleaning and dyeing (what is left of it), the trucking industry, and 40 apparel codes, alphabetically ranging from academic costumes through corsets and brassieres, flags, furs, handkerchiefs, hand bags, millinery, rosebuds, and undergarments.

Under Mr. Rosenblatt, who has had wide experiences and acquaintances in New York, you will find Mr. Morris Greenberg, also from New York, who acts as Special Deputy Administrator in connection with certain cotton-garment matters, a Mr. Farnsworth, and a Mr. Hughes. The latest addition to the staff of Mr. Rosenblatt is a Mr. Edwards, reported to be an ex-New York building contractor; a Mr. Beecroft, who formerly was connected with a New York merchandising house, who went to N.R.A. as an authority on women's dresses; a Mr. Barr and a Mr. Vincent, who was formerly an attorney. Mr. Rosenblatt has the legal counsel, so far as the apparel codes are concerned, of three young lawyers, Messrs. Levi, Raphael, and Barenboim. There are many other aids, assistants, secretaries, and supernumeraries.

Mr. Edwards, who is just assuming his duties, succeeds Dr. Earl Dean Howard, professor at Northwestern University, who is returning to his school, having served at N.R.A. since the inception of the cotton-garment code. He was formerly vice president of the Hart, Schaffner & Marx Co., largely dealing in labor affairs, and has been a very close friend of Sidney Hillman, the labor leader, for a number of years. Dr. Howard's admiration for Mr. Hillman's judgment was an open secret at N.R.A.

It was during Dr. Howard's general supervision of the apparel section that Prof. Lindsey Rogers, of Columbia University, held sway. Professor Rogers was frequently called as an administrator in New York's labor difficulties. He was a friend of both Mr. Howard and Mr. Hillman and was located in an institution of learning within the confines of the island of Manhattan. He was the man whom the N.R.A. picked to take charge of the cotton-garment code. When it was proposed, Professor Rogers conducted the hearing on the code. He, with Mr. Howard, Mr. Hillman, and others mentioned, also had charge at N.R.A. of the men's clothing code set-up for the industry which Mr. Hillman dominates through his union organization. They also heard the dress code set-up for the industry manufacturing the more expensive of women's dresses, exclusive of women's cotton dresses, which industry is largely located within the city of New York and largely dominated by the union organizations of which union Mr. David Dubinsky of New York is the powerful and controlling personality.

It is difficult to keep track of all of these New York figures as they made their entrances and their exits. There was, for instance, Mr. Gitchell, who drifted into the cotton-garment picture about the time Professor Rogers stepped out. Mr. Gitchell came from New York where he was connected with a retail store and he brought with him all the ideals and ideas of New York's humdrum merchandising of business. He still enjoys the position of administration member of the dress code authority, located in New York, and has for some time been acting chairman of that code authority.

And now we come to the bug under the chip. The dress code authority has asked the administration to hold a hearing to find out whether or not cotton wash dresses sold in the house-dress departments of the leading stores of the Nation and in the basements of certain other stores and sold to the wives of the working men and farmers of the Nation may be moved into the dress code from the cotton-garment code so that the New York industry may dominate and control the manufacture of the poor woman's raiment, through the operations of Mr. Gitchell, Mr. Dubinsky, and others in the dress code group.

In passing, I may state that the general counsel of the dress code authority is an able young gentleman from the West who served as counsel for Mr. Gitchell, Dr. Howard, Professor Rogers, and others at N.R.A. before assuming this position with the dress code authority.

The men's clothing code authority—entirely dominated by Mr. Hillman, the friend of Dr. Howard, retiring administrator, and closely identified with the New York clique—has asked the administrator to determine whether all of the cotton pants and all of the lumberjacks, and various other similar items should not be transferred to the men's clothing code, with the result that the industry, which produces cotton garments for the farmers and workmen of America may fall within the complete domination of the wool-clothing industry dominated by Mr. Hillman.

Of course, all of this is not done in a crude manner. It comes about by a proposal of the apparel group that the wages of all of the apparel codes be brought into somewhat of a uniformity.

In other words, the unions dominating the clothing and dress industries now seek to force upon the cotton-garment industry of the Nation the complete domination of that industry by the New York clique.

No thought is given to the fact that such a move would wreck the cotton-garment industry completely and destroy the largest single domestic market for the cotton crop.

No thought is given to the fact that the cheap prices of cotton garments sold to the farmers and workmen of America would be raised to a point where the operation of consumer acceptance would cause cotton garments to disappear entirely from the market and result in wide-spread unemployment.

No thought is given to the fact that it would take approximately 10 or 12 units of production in the cotton-garment industry to equal in value one unit of production in the clothing industry.

The scheme is clearly a New York clique's clever move to force the woolen clothing and the dress industries into positions of complete domination of the apparel business of the Nation to the ultimate extinction of the cotton-garment industry.

It is amazing that so little attention is paid by the general public to this attempt to saddle upon the poor men and women of this Nation a burden of higher-priced apparel in the face of existing conditions. There seems to be a complete indifference to the fact that the prices being paid by the farmers and workingmen of this country for products of the cotton-garment industry have already advanced approximately 75 percent over the prices of 1932 through the operation of the cotton-garment code minimum wages and hour provisions and the additional cost of cotton fabrics resulting through the textile code.

There seems to be a deliberate attempt to keep from the public the fact, for instance, that the cotton pants which the farmers and workmen of this Nation have been buying, have ranged from $1 to $2 through the ups and downs of market prices for years, and that there is now going on a proceeding to force the cotton-garment industry to a point where those prices will forever disappear on the market where such apparel has been previously bought.

One point that is particularly significant is that the cotton-garment industry is the industry to which the prisons of many States turned for the employment of prisoners. For instance, in 1932, prisons produced and sold on the open market approximately 20,000,000 work shirts. Free factories in that same year produced 62,000,000 work shirts. In the same year prisons produced 7,000,000 work pants, while private manufacturers were disposing of 27,000,000 work pants. The prisons produced large quantities of overalls and other cotton apparel products. It was to meet these prison products that the sweat shop largely grew up in the cotton-garment industry. These prison sales grew up over many years, and during the last 10 years the cotton-garment industry made a bitter fight on prison labor and succeeded in the enactment of certain remedial legislation. During all the time the cotton-garment industry did not receive from either Mr. Hillman's union or from the clothing or dress industry one iota of assistance or one dollar in contribution.

When the clothing code, in which Mr. Hillman was vitally interested, and when the dress code, in which the New York clique was interested, went to Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, there was no mention in the codes of prison labor, but the cotton-garment industry ruled prison labor out of the industry in its code.

Obviously, neither Mr. Hillman, nor the clothing industry, nor the dress industry considered prison competition as a vital factor, but prison competition was threatening to destroy the cotton-garment industry.

Now, however, you will find that the same crowd which saw no objection to prison pants or prison wash dresses suddenly discover a competition to the woolen clothing and dress industry in privately made cotton pants, dresses, and work clothing.

Mr. Hillman has suddenly become a very loud and aggressive opponent of prison labor. Prior to N.R.A. he took no open or active part in any of the National or State movements calculated to stop prison labor.

Another significant little fact may be stated: The question of processing tax on wool as a result of the cotton-processing tax came up a few months ago.

Mr. William Goldman, one of the outstanding clothing manufacturers of the country, located in New York, was appointed head of the research committee of the clothing industry. Mr. Goldman found that there was no competition between cotton and woolen clothing. Yet today the New York clique is attempting to show that the cotton slacks in the poor man's country store threatens the very existence of the sport flannel trousers which the richer gentlemen of the country enjoy during the warm seasons, and the clothing code authority would place the poor man's cotton slacks under the domination of the New York clique producing flannel trousers.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not go further into detail. Much more will be brought out at the hearings. There is only a negligible production of cotton garments in the manufacturing plants of the New York area, dominated by the New York clique, and yet this little group is attempting to use the purposes and policy of the National Industrial Recovery Administration by taking into their jurisdiction and dominance 80 percent of an age-old industry, scattered through 42 States of the United States and who now pay their men and women employees decent wages in comparison to the prices of the products they make. It is unthinkable that this move should succeed.

For the information of the Members of Congress representing districts outside of the city of New York I desire to give you a chart showing the total number of cotton-garment, wash-dress, and pants factories located in the various States of the Union. I appeal to my colleages in these States to become informed concerning the danger threatening the factories and employees in your district.

In conclusion, I appeal to Members of the Congress, workers, consumers, and merchants to join in combating this insidious effort to move industries from the small towns to the large metropolitan areas.

I am loyal to the administration of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and the new deal, and I intend to continue to be loyal, but I am determined to prevent this grave injustice to a most necessary industry.

APPROPRIATION FOR EMERGENCY CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC HIGHWAYS

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 8781) to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and to amend the Federal Aid Road Act, approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, before the Clerk reads the statement I ask unanimous consent to make a correction on page 5 of the statement: "$75,000,000" should be "$75,000." I ask unanimous consent to make that correction.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8781) to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 14, 15, 17, 19, 20, 21, 23; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 10. Section 19 of the Federal Highway Act, approved November 9, 1921, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 19. That on or before the first Monday in January of each year the Secretary of Agriculture shall make a report to Congress, which shall include a detailed statement of the work done, the status of each project undertaken, the allocation of appropriations, an itemized statement of the expenditures and receipts during the preceding fiscal year under this act, and itemized statement of the traveling and other expenses, including a list of employees, their duties, salaries, and traveling expenses, if any, and his recommendations, if any, for new legislation amending or supplementing this act. The Secretary of Agriculture shall also make such special reports as Congress may request.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted in said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 12. Since it is unfair and unjust to tax motor-vehicle transportation unless the proceeds of such taxation are applied to the construction, improvement or maintenance of highways, after June 30, 1935, Federal aid for highway construction shall be extended only to those States that use at least the amounts now provided by law for such purposes in each State from State motor-vehicle registration fees, licenses, gasoline taxes and other special taxes on motor-vehicle owners and operators of all kinds for the construction, improvement and maintenance of highways and administrative expenses in connection therewith, including the retirement of bonds for the payment of which such revenues have been pledged, and for no other purposes, under such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall promulgate from time to time: Provided, That in no case shall the provisions of this section operate to deprive any State of more than one-third of the amount to which that State would be entitled under any apportionment hereafter made, for the fiscal year for which the apportionment is made."

And the Senate agreed to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 15. To provide for the continuation of the cooperative reconnaissance surveys for a proposed inter-American highway as provided in Public Resolution No. 104, approved March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1697), and for making location surveys, plans, and estimates for such highway, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend not more than $75,000 to pay all costs hereafter incurred for such work from any moneys available from the administrative funds provided under the act of July 11, 1916 (U.S.C., title 23, sec. 21), as amended, or as otherwise provided."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate changing the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8781) to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of said amendments, namely:

On amendment no. 1: Authorizes $200,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $400,000,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 2: Inserts in lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate the words "in making grants under such section to".

On amendment no. 3: Inserts in lieu of the word "such", the words "their highway", as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 4: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, an exception in the following language: "Except that the Secretary of Agriculture, upon request and satisfactory showing from the highway department of any State, may fix a less percentage of the apportionment of such State for expenditure on secondary or feeder roads."

On amendment no. 5: Eliminates, as proposed by the Senate, an allocation of $250,000 in the Virgin Islands, $1,500,000 in Alaska, and $1,000,000 in Puerto Rico.

On amendment no. 6: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, $30,000,000 and inserts in lieu thereof, $24,000,000, so as to authorize $24,000,000 instead of $50,000,000, as proposed by the House in said section 2.

On amendments nos. 7 and 8: Includes the survey, construction, and maintenance proposed by the Senate and monuments (including areas transferred to the National Parks Service for administration by Executive order dated June 10, 1933) and national forests, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 9: Strikes out section 3, as proposed by the House, and inserts section 3, as proposed by the Senate, so as to provide for emergency repair or construction without prior specific appropriation therefor, not to exceed the sum of $10,000,000.

On amendment no. 10: Authorizes an appropriation for Federal highway construction for each of the fiscal years 1936 and 1937 of $125,000,000 in lieu of the $100,000,000 proposed by the Senate, and provides that the sums authorized shall be available for expenditure for 1 year instead of for 2 years as heretofore.

On amendment no. 11: Authorizes the sum of $10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1936 and 1937 for forest highways, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 12: Authorizes for each of the fiscal years 1936 and 1937 the sum of $2,500,000 for main roads through public lands, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 13: Authorizes for roads and trails in national parks for each of the fiscal years 1936 and 1937 the sum of $7,500,000, in lieu of the $10,000,000 proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 14: Authorizes for each of the fiscal years 1936 and 1937 for Indian reservation roads, $4,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 15: Provides that, as proposed by the Senate, the term "highway", as defined in the Federal Highway Act, shall include such main parkways as may be designated by the States and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture as part of the Federal-aid highway system.

On amendment no. 16: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the Secretary of Agriculture shall make annual reports hereafter on the first Monday in January instead of on the first Monday in December, as heretofore provided.

On amendment no. 17: Provides that not exceeding one-half of 1 percent shall be used for surveys under both the grants and the Federal aid authorized, the language being the same as carried in section 1 of the bill as it passed the House.

On amendment no. 18: Prevents, in lieu of the amendment as proposed by the Senate, the diversion of motor taxes and gasoline taxes from highway maintenance, construction, and improvement, including the retirement of bonds, to other purposes by depriving the State of not more than one-third of its allocation in the event of such diversion.

On amendments nos. 19 and 20: Merely change the number of the sections.

On amendment no. 21: Provides, in lieu of the amendment as proposed by the Senate, that no deduction shall be made on account of any advances under the Emergency and Relief Construction Act of 1932 for furnishing relief and work relief to needy and distressed people.

On amendment no. 22: Provides, in lieu of the matter as proposed by the Senate, that not more than $75,000,000 from the administrative funds may be expended to pay costs for the continuation of the surveys for a proposed inter-America highway.

On amendment no. 23: Amends by inserting proper number of section. The title to the bill is amended as proposed by the Senate.

WILBURN CARTWRIGHT,
LINDSAY C. WARREN,
WILLIAM WHITTINGTON,
C. MURRAY TURPIN,
CLYDE KELLY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In reading the conference report, I notice certain matter to be inserted as section 12. While I do not think it is going to affect my State in any way—because, so far as I know, we are not allocating any of the money that we derive from the tax on gasoline and motor vehicles to any purpose other than road construction and redemption of road bonds—nevertheless it seems to me that in view of the situation confronting some of the States of the Union it would be rather unfair to penalize them, so far as Federal aid is concerned, if they should find it necessary to divert some portion of the money that is collected from the tax on motor vehicles and gasoline to relief purposes. The amendment, in my opinion, goes quite far, because it refers to future laws. If the legislature in the future should change its present law, the existing law, under this amendment, would prevail.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. This has nothing to do with the present. It only applies to the future, but I wish to remind you that legislation is a matter of give and take, and the conferees of the House could not get everything they wanted.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If it only deals with the future, why could we not wait for the future before adopting an amendment like this? What is the hurry?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Amendment 12, as contained in the report and as agreed to in the conference, is in lieu of an amendment proposed by the Senate. Personally, I opposed the amendment, as I believe the States should be free to act. I believe in State rights; and while I oppose diversion of road funds, I prefer to leave the matter to the States. This bill, however, not only has to do with the appropriation for the current year but this bill authorizes Federal aid for the fiscal years 1936 and 1937. Heretofore, if those funds that are allocated to the States were not matched within 2 years the funds lapsed and became a part of the general appropriation for redistribution among the other States.

Now, it has been thought that if Federal highway construction is to be promoted there should not be in the future any diversion by States of those taxes primarily intended for the maintenance, for the construction of highways, and for retirement of the bonds issued for the purpose of constructing highways. So the conference agreed to the section as it is carried in the report, and the section now provides that no diversion of gasoline tax or motor-vehicle tax shall be made by any legislation passed by any of the States following June 30, 1935, so as to enable the States to match Federal aid for the fiscal years 1936 and 1937. It does not prevent the use of any of those funds for the retirement of bonds or indebtedness, but it enables the States to utilize the funds that may be appropriated by Congress in the future. Not only that, but the amendment also provides that not more than one-third of the funds that are allocated to the States may be lost by such diversion. The whole purpose is to prevent the diversion of funds which the users of the highways intend shall be made available for the maintenance and for the construction of highways.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But it is evident from what the gentleman says that the thought is in the mind of the committee or whoever is responsible for this that they do not have confidence in the various States to take care of their highways or handle their receipts properly.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If we did have that confidence and thought the various States could take care of the highways, there would be no necessity for this legislation. It is for the reason that the States are utterly unable to provide for highway construction and maintenance that this bill is being passed with grants of $200,000,000.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is the point I make. If it is necessary to divert some of this money to take care of people in a stricken community, we should not penalize them for having done so. If they do divert part of the money under the terms of the amendment, they forfeit part of their Federal aid.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. There is no occasion for that, as funds are otherwise available for such worthy purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Certainly, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. In this conference report, as I understand it, it calls for the appropriation of $100,000,000 for this year, to which the States will not be obliged to contribute their part.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. That is true, in part; but the amount is $200,000,000, and not $100,000,000 as stated by the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. After this year it will go back on the basis of other road bills in previous years. Is that the fact?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. That is partly true, I may say to the gentleman, but you are not taking into consideration that part will be available this year and more later on.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts is partly correct. The bill as it passed the House authorized an appropriation of $400,000,000 for grants to be available until expended. This amount has been reduced to $200,000,000. It may be available in part this year, and it may be available later on. The deficiency bill, as the gentleman recalls, carried only $100,000,000. But at all events the authorization is for half of the amount carried in the House bill. In addition to that, as the gentleman suggests, there is authorization for an appropriation under the Federal highway act for each of the fiscal years 1936 and 1937 of $125,000,000, for Federal aid to be matched 50-50 by the States.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman inform the House if there are any other fundamental changes from the way the bill passed the House?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No; I would say I have referred to the principal changes. The other changes in existing law are substantially in the same form they were carried in the House bill, except under present law all funds must be matched by the States for 1936–37, in 2 years; this has been changed to 1 year. Annual reports are to be submitted in January instead of December, as heretofore. There is an authorization for expending not to exceed $75,000 for surveys for the inter-American highway.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. GLOVER. I should like to know for the benefit of the RECORD and for the information of the Members whether or not the provision in the original bill which earmarked 25 percent of the funds for post roads, farm-to-market roads, and roads over which school busses are operated is retained in the bill.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. It is retained in the bill.

Mr. GLOVER. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may need to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] to explain the feature of the bill referred to by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It shall be my purpose to delay the vote on the conference report but a minute or two, to explain the changes to the Jenkins amendment made by the Senate. You will remember I presented an amendment to the original bill which was adopted almost unanimously after considerable of a battle. This is the amendment to which the gentleman from Arkansas referred just a moment ago in his inquiry.

The amendment as adopted by the House carried the mandate that 25 percent of this money must be used for the improvement of school-bus routes, rural routes, and country roads. The previous law carried the language "feeder roads." In some States this was interpreted to mean one thing, and in other States it was interpreted to mean something else. We wanted the intent made clear so there would be no ambiguity about it. So this amendment was adopted.

The Senate changed the amendment a little, and some of the Members will probably be much interested in the change. As far as I am concerned, I think it is all right. This is amendment no. 4, and is my amendment with this language added:

Except that the Secretary of Agriculture upon request and satisfactory showing from the highway department of any State may fix a less percentage for apportionment of such State for expenditure on secondary or feeder roads.

An unsympathetic State highway department in any State might prevent the full 25 percent being used on these secondary roads; but I propose to see to it that in my State the highway department does not get away with such a plan if it attempts it, and I do not think the Department of Agriculture would want to thwart the evident intention of Congress.

It will be seen that if the State director makes a sufficient showing to the Federal Director, and these two officials together conclude that it is not necessary to use this 25 percent for this purpose, then they will not. They should not practice any unfairness in this matter, and I want the RECORD to be proof to all such gentlemen that Congress is accepting this change with the belief that no abuses will be practiced.

It is conceivable that some of the small States—perhaps Rhode Island, for example—might have most of its roads improved. The chances are that in that State there are not many school-bus routes or rural-carrier routes that are not pretty well taken care of at the present time; and in such an instance the 25 percent would not be needed for this purpose. On the other hand, in the larger States there will probably be more need for this money. Discretion is left in these two officials to determine the matter. There is some reason in it for this additional language. But the purpose of Congress is well understood.

I do not want to oppose Senate amendment no. 4. I want to compliment the conferees for getting as much as they did; and I hope the conference report is accepted immediately so that it may be accepted in the Senate yet today, and thereby have the bill ready for the President's signature by Monday.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield that I may supplement my answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, may I say further in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the $400,000,000 as proposed by the House was reduced to $200,000,000; the $50,000,000 as proposed by the House for forest roads and trails was reduced to $24,000,000, and that authorizations aggregating $24,000,000 for each of the years 1936 and 1937 for roads in forests, parks, public lands, and Indian reservations are carried in the bill. I neglected to include this information in my statement.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Under the Senate amendment, how much money is made immediately available—$100,000,000 or $200,000,000?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. This bill is not an appropriation at all; it is an authorization. There is none immediately available; but $100,000,000 will be immediately available in the deficiency bill already passed by the House.

Mr. MOTT. I understand that, but the House bill authorized an appropriation of $400,000,000.

The Senate amendment authorized an appropriation of $200,000,000?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MOTT. How much is immediately available of the $200,000,000—the whole thing or just $100,000,000?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Whatever Congress appropriates, and the deficiency bill carries $100,000,000 for this purpose. That is sufficient until the legislatures of the different States and Congress meet again in January.

Mr. MOTT. Then, as a matter of fact, we get just as much through the appropriations bill that was passed here the first of the week, earmarking $100,000,000 of the Public Works fund for roads? We would get just as much through that bill as if we did not pass this bill at all?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. No; but this provides for a 3-year program.

Mr. MOTT. What is the difference?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. There will be an additional $100,000,000 to appropriate in the future.

Mr. MOTT. Which the Congress at the next session may repudiate. In my opinion, the conferees did not do a very good job.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I think we did extremely well under the circumstances. This is even better than the way we originally passed it.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3285) to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communications by wire or radio, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. I propose to offer a point of order against the report. As I understand the point of order comes after the reading of the report and before the statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if that consent permits me to interpose my point of order before the reading of the statement, I shall not object; otherwise I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may make his point of order before the reading of the statement. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I interpose a point of order against the report on the communications bill on the ground that the committee of conference has exceeded its jurisdiction by writing into the conference report an express repeal of the Radio Act of 1927, and then in said report by reenacting practically in its entirety the original language of that act with the insertion of new matter; whereas the provisions of existing law so reenacted and the new matter so inserted have not been considered by the committee of the House having jurisdiction of the matter so covered by the conference report and in this way the conference report, if adopted, will enact into law matter highly technical and of great public interest without proper committee consideration. Moreover, the adoption of said report may without due consideration by the House deprive the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries, which is a standing committee of this House, of its original and time-honored jurisdiction which it has exercised for many years without question, running back to the inception of radio, which jurisdiction can be secured without further question by sustaining this point of order or by rejecting the conference report.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, the question of jurisdiction in this matter was determined not only by the Speaker originally in referring this bill, but the Speaker was sustained by a vote in the House when the bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House.

Furthermore, these amendments to the Radio Act were certainly considered by the proper committee in the Senate, because they were considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which has always considered radio legislation.

Further than that, and aside from the point of order, but referring to the statement of the gentleman from Virginia with reference to these matters not having been discussed or considered, practically every amendment that the Senate put on was enacted in a bill in the Seventy-second Congress, which was given a pocket veto by the President of the United States.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, may I answer the argument of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. I am not quite clear whether the gentleman is making the point of order because of the jurisdiction of the committee of the House or because of the differences in the language of the bill as it passed the two Houses and went to conference.

Mr. BLAND. I am making the point of order for both reasons.

Mr. MAPES. May I ask the gentleman whether it is not true that the Senate bill repealed the Radio Act of 1927 and then reenacted it in substance, so that the matter was actually in conference?

Mr. BLAND. The fact is that the bill originally referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce did not undertake to change the language of the Radio Act. The fact is that the proper committee of the Senate having jurisdiction of this matter did undertake to change and repeal the Radio Act of 1927 and to reenact substantially the same provision. I concede that.

Mr. MAPES. When the gentleman refers to the original bill that went to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, is he referring to the House bill?

Mr. BLAND. I am referring to the House bill.

Mr. MAPES. Not the Senate bill?

Mr. BLAND. Not the Senate bill.

Mr. MAPES. When the Senate bill came over to the House and was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, did it contain the provision repealing the Radio Act?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. So that the matter really was in conference as between the two Houses when it went to conference?

Mr. BLAND. The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce admitted in the argument on the floor that they did not know enough about the Radio Act to undertake to consider those particular provisions.

The point I make is that we are now undertaking to repeal and to reenact a most important act without its consideration by the proper committee of the House.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman's point, as I understand it, is as he has just stated it and not because the matter was not actually in conference before the conferees as appointed. Is not that correct?

Mr. BLAND. If the fact that this matter was in the Senate bill referred to the committee puts it into conference, it was in conference. I cannot deny that.

Mr. MAPES. I simply wanted to get the gentleman's position.

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may state further that the House bill did not amend the Radio Act, but it did abolish the Radio Commission and transferred its functions to this new commission.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the matter, the Senate passed a bill proposing to regulate communication, which came over to the House. That bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which subsequently reported the bill so that it is too late now to raise a question of order involving jurisdiction.

When the bill was considered in the House an amendment was offered, proposed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, striking out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and substituting an entirely new bill, and that amendment was agreed to by the House. The House subsequently passed the bill as amended and sent it back to the Senate, where that body disagreed to the House amendment and asked for a conference. The House agreed to the conference, so that both bills were then in conference.

The question involved in the point of order raised by the gentleman from Virginia has been passed on before, and the Chair reads from volume 5, section 6421, of Hinds' Precedents, as follows:

> Where one House strikes out all of the bill of the other after the enacting clause and inserts a new text and the differences over this substitute are referred to conference, the managers have a wide discretion in incorporating germane matters and may even report a new bill on the subject.

This decision, made by Speaker Colfax, has been followed by Speaker Clark and by other Speakers, and the Chair thinks it applicable to the instant case. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

The Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk proceeded to read the statement.

Mr. RAYBURN (interrupting the reading of the statement). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the statement be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McFADDEN and Mr. RAYBURN rose.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet, and I insist that the report be read in full.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the gentleman's request comes too late. The Speaker had already announced there was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. I was on my feet seeking recognition, I may say to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states he was on his feet seeking recognition. The Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the statement.

Mr. MAPES (interrupting). Mr. Speaker, I would like to now renew the request that the further reading of the statement be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3285) to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communications by wire or radio, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"TITLE I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"PURPOSES OF ACT; CREATION OF FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

"SECTION 1. For the purpose of regulating interstate and foreign commerce in communication by wire and radio so as to make available, so far as possible, to all the people of the United States a rapid, efficient, Nation-wide, and world-wide wire and radio communication service with adequate facilities at reasonable charges, for the purpose of the national defense, and for the purpose of securing a more effective execution of this policy by centralizing authority heretofore granted by law to several agencies and by granting additional authority with respect to interstate and foreign commerce in wire and radio communication, there is hereby created a commission to be known as the 'Federal Communications Commission', which shall be constituted as hereinafter provided, and which shall execute and enforce the provisions of this act.

"APPLICATION OF ACT

"SEC. 2. (a) The provisions of this act shall apply to all interstate and foreign communication by wire or radio and all interstate and foreign transmission of energy by radio, which originates and/or is received within the United States, and to all persons engaged within the United States in such communication or such transmission of energy by radio, and to the licensing and regulating of all radio stations as hereinafter provided; but it shall not apply to persons engaged in wire or radio communication or transmission in the Philippine Islands or the Canal Zone, or to wire or radio communication or transmission wholly within the Philippine Islands or the Canal Zone.

"(b) Subject to the provisions of section 301, nothing in this act shall be construed to apply or to give the Commission jurisdiction with respect to (1) charges, classifications, practices, services, facilities, or regulations for or in connection with intrastate communication service of any carrier, or (2) any carrier engaged in interstate or foreign communication solely through physical connection with the facilities of another carrier not directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, such carrier; except that sections 201 to 205 of this act, both inclusive, shall, except as otherwise provided therein, apply to carriers described in clause (2).

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 3. For the purpose of this act, unless the context otherwise requires—

"(a) 'Wire communication' or 'communication by wire' means the transmission of writing, signs, signals, pictures, and sounds of all kinds by aid of wire, cable, or other like connection between the points of origin and reception of such transmission, including all instrumentalities, facilities, apparatus, and services (among other things, the receipt, forwarding, and delivery of communications) incidental to such transmission.

"(b) 'Radio communication' or 'communication by radio' means the transmission by radio of writing, signs, signals, pictures, and sounds of all kinds, including all instrumentalities, facilities, apparatus, and services (among other things, the receipt, forwarding, and delivery of communications) incidental to such transmission.

"(c) 'License' means the holder of a radio station license granted or continued in force under authority of this act.

"(d) 'Transmission of energy by radio' or 'radio transmission of energy' includes both such transmission and all instrumentalities, facilities, and services incidental to such transmission.

"(e) 'Interstate communication' or 'interstate transmission' means communication or transmission (1) from any State, Territory, or possession of the United States (other than the Philippine Islands and the Canal Zone), or the District of Columbia, to any other State, Territory, or possession of the United States (other than the Philippine Islands and the Canal Zone), or the District of Columbia, (2) from or to the United States to or from the Philippine Islands or the Canal Zone, insofar as such communication or transmission takes place within the United States, or (3) between points within the United States but through a foreign country; but shall not include wire communication between points within the same State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or the District of Columbia, through any place outside thereof, if such communication is regulated by a State commission.

"(f) 'Foreign communication' or 'foreign transmission' means communication or transmission from or to any place in the United States to or from a foreign country, or between a station in the United States and a mobile station located outside the United States.

"(g) 'United States' means the several States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and the possessions of the United States, but does not include the Philippine Islands or the Canal Zone.

"(h) 'Common carrier' or 'carrier' means any person engaged as a common carrier for hire, in interstate or foreign communication by wire or radio or in interstate or foreign radio transmission of energy, except where reference is made to common carriers not subject to this act; but a person engaged in radio broadcasting shall not, insofar as such person is so engaged, be deemed a common carrier.

"(i) 'Person' includes an individual, partnership, association, joint-stock company, trust, or corporation.

"(j) 'Corporation' includes any corporation, joint-stock company, or association.

"(k) 'Radio station' or 'station' means a station equipped to engage in radio communication or radio transmission of energy.

"(l) 'Mobile station' means a radio-communication station capable of being moved and which ordinarily does move.

"(m) 'Land station' means a station, other than a mobile station, used for radio communication with mobile stations.

"(n) 'Mobile service' means the radio-communication service carried on between mobile stations and land stations, and by mobile stations communicating among themselves.

"(o) 'Broadcasting' means the dissemination of radio communications intended to be received by the public, directly or by intermediary of relay stations.

"(p) 'Chain broadcasting' means simultaneous broadcasting of an identical program by two or more connected stations.

"(q) 'Amateur station' means a radio station operated by a duly authorized person interested in radio technique solely with a personal aim and without pecuniary interest.

"(r) 'Telephone exchange service' means service within a telephone exchange, or within a connected system of telephone exchanges within the same exchange area operated to furnish to subscribers intercommunicating service of the character ordinarily furnished by a single exchange, and which is covered by the exchange service charge.

"(s) 'Telephone toll service' means telephone service between stations in different exchange areas for which there is made a separate charge not included in contracts with subscribers for exchange service.

"(t) 'State commission' means the commission, board, or official (by whatever name designated) which under the laws of any State has regulatory jurisdiction with respect to intrastate operations of carriers.

"(u) 'Connecting carrier' means a carrier described in clause (2) of section 2 (b).

"(v) 'State' includes the District of Columbia and the Territories and possessions.

PROVISIONS RELATING TO THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 4. (a) The Federal Communications Commission (in this act referred to as the 'Commission') shall be composed of seven commissioners appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one of whom the President shall designate as chairman.

"(b) Each member of the Commission shall be a citizen of the United States. No member of the Commission or person in its employ shall be financially interested in the manufacture or sale of radio apparatus or of apparatus for wire or radio communication; in communication by wire or radio or in radio transmission of energy; in any company furnishing services or such apparatus to any company engaged in communication by wire or radio or to any company manufacturing or selling apparatus used for communication by wire or radio; or in any company owning stocks, bonds, or other securities of any such company; nor be in the employ of or hold any official relation to any person subject to any of the provisions of this act, nor own stocks, bonds, or other securities of any corporation subject to any of the provisions of this act. Such commissioners shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Not more than four commissioners shall be members of the same political party.

"(c) The commissioners first appointed under this act shall continue in office for the terms of 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 years, respectively, from the date of the taking effect of this act, the term of each to be designated by the President, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of 7 years; except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he succeeds. No vacancy in the Commission shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the Commission.

"(d) Each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $10,000, payable in monthly installments.

"(e) The principal office of the Commission shall be in the District of Columbia, where its general sessions shall be held; but whenever the convenience of the public or of the parties may be promoted or delay or expense prevented thereby, the Commission may hold special sessions in any part of the United States.

"(f) Without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, (1) the Commission may appoint and prescribe the duties and fix the salaries of a secretary, a director for each division, a chief engineer and not more than three assistants, a general counsel and not not more than three assistants, and temporary counsel designated by the Commission for the performance of special services, and (2) each commissioner may appoint and prescribe the duties of a secretary at an annual salary not to exceed $4,000 per annum. The general counsel and the chief engineer shall each receive an annual salary of not to exceed $9,000; the secretary shall receive an annual salary of not to exceed $7,500; the director of each division shall receive an annual salary of not to exceed $7,500; and no assistant shall receive an annual salary in excess of $7,500. The Commission shall have authority, subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to appoint such other officers, engineers, inspectors, attorneys, examiners, and other employees as are necessary in the execution of its functions.

"(g) The Commission may make such expenditures (including expenditures for rent and personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere, for office supplies, law books, periodicals, and books of reference, and for printing and binding) as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in the Commission and as from time to time may be appropriated for by Congress. All expenditures of the Commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the commissioners or by their employees, under their orders, in making any investigation or upon any official business in any other places than in the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the Commission or by such other member or officer thereof as may be designated by the Commission for that purpose.

"(h) Four members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum thereof. The Commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

"(i) The Commission may perform any and all acts, make such rules and regulations, and issue such orders, not inconsistent with this act, as may be necessary in the execution of its functions.

"(j) The Commission may conduct its proceedings in such manner as will best conduce to the proper dispatch of business and to the ends of justice. No Commissioner shall participate in any hearing or proceeding in which he has a pecuniary interest. Any party may appear before the Commission and be heard in person or by attorney. Every vote and official act of the Commission shall be entered of record, and its proceedings shall be public upon the request of any party interested. The Commission is authorized to withhold publication of records or proceedings containing secret information affecting the national defense.

"(k) The Commission shall make an annual report to Congress, copies of which shall be distributed as are other reports transmitted to Congress. Such report shall contain such information and data collected by the Commission as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of interstate and foreign wire and radio communication and radio transmission of energy, together with such recommendations as to additional legislation relating thereto as the Commission may deem necessary: Provided, That the Commission shall make a special report not later than February 1, 1935, recommending such amendments to this act as it deems desirable in the public interest.

"(l) All reports of investigations made by the Commission shall be entered of record, and a copy thereof shall be furnished to the party who may have complained, and to any common carrier or licensee that may have been complained of.

"(m) The Commission shall provide for the publication of its reports and decisions in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use, and such authorized publications shall be competent evidence of the reports and decisions of the Commission therein contained in all courts of the United States and of the several States without any further proof or authentication thereof.

"(n) Rates of compensation of persons appointed under this section shall be subject to the reduction applicable to officers and employees of the Federal Government generally.

"DIVISIONS OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 5. (a) The Commission is hereby authorized by its order to divide the members thereof into not more than three divisions, each to consist of not less than three members. Any Commissioner may be assigned to and may serve upon such division or divisions as the Commission may direct, and each division shall choose its own chairman. In case of a vacancy in any division, or of absence or inability to serve thereon of any Commissioner thereto assigned, the chairman of the Commission or any Commissioner designated by him for that purpose may temporarily serve on said division until the Commission shall otherwise order.

"(b) The Commission may by order direct that any of its work, business, or functions arising under this act, or under any other act of Congress, or in respect of any matter which has been or may be referred to the Commission by Congress or by either branch thereof, be assigned or referred to any of said divisions for action thereon, and may by order at any time amend, modify, supplement, or rescind any such direction. All such orders shall take effect forthwith and remain in effect until otherwise ordered by the Commission.

"(c) In conformity with and subject to the order or orders of the Commission in the premises, each division so constituted shall have power and authority by a majority thereof to hear and determine, order, certify, report, or otherwise act as to any of said work, business, or functions so assigned or referred to it for action by the Commission, and in respect thereof the division shall have all the jurisdiction and powers now or then conferred by law upon the Commission, and be subject to the same duties and obligations. Any order, decision, or report made or other action taken by any of said divisions in respect of any matters so assigned or referred to it shall have the same force and effect, and may be made, evidenced, and enforced in the same manner as if made, or taken by the Commission, subject to rehearing by the Commission as provided in section 405 of this Act for rehearing cases decided by the Commission. The secretary and seal of the Commission shall be the secretary and seal of each division thereof.

"(d) Nothing in this section contained, or done pursuant thereto, shall be deemed to divest the Commission of any of its powers.

"(e) The Commission is hereby authorized by its order to assign or refer any portion of its work, business, or functions arising under this or any other act of Congress or referred to it by Congress, or either branch thereof, to an individual commissioner, or to a board composed of an employee or employees of the Commission, to be designated by such order, for action thereon, and by its order at any time to amend, modify, supplement, or rescind any such assignment or reference: Provided, however, That this authority shall not extend to investigations instituted upon the Commission's own motion or, without the consent of the parties thereto, to contested proceedings involving the taking of testimony at public hearings, or to investigations specifically required by this act. All such orders shall take effect forthwith and remain in effect until otherwise ordered by the Commission. In case of the absence or inability for any other reason to act of any such individual commissioner or employee designated to serve upon any such board, the chairman of the Commission may designate another commissioner or employee, as the case may be, to serve temporarily until the Commission shall otherwise order. In conformity with and subject to the order or orders of the Commission in the premises, any such individual commissioner, or board acting by a majority thereof, shall have power and authority to hear and determine, order, certify, report, or otherwise act as to any of said work, business, or functions so assigned or referred to him or it for action by the Commission and in respect thereof shall have all the jurisdiction and powers now or then conferred by law upon the Commission and be subject to the same duties and obligations. Any order, decision, or report made or other action taken by any such individual commissioner or board in respect of any matters so assigned or referred shall have the same force and effect, and may be made, evidenced, and enforced in the same manner as if made or taken by the Commission. Any party affected by any order, decision, or report of any such individual commissioner or board may file a petition for rehearing by the Commission or a division thereof and every such petition shall be passed upon by the Commission or a division thereof. Any action by a division upon such a petition shall itself be subject to rehearing by the Commission, as provided in section 405 of this act and in subsection (c). The Commission may make and amend rules for the conduct of proceedings before such individual commissioner or board and for the rehearing of such action before a division of the Commission or the Commission. The secretary and seal of the Commission shall be the secretary and seal of such individual commissioner or board.

"TITLE II—COMMON CARRIERS

"SERVICE AND CHARGES

"SECTION 201. (a) It shall be the duty of every common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign communication by wire or radio to furnish such communication service upon reasonable request therefor; and, in accordance with the orders of the Commission, in cases where the Commission, after opportunity for hearing, finds such action necessary or desirable in the public interest, to establish physical connections with other carriers, to establish through routes and charges applicable thereto and the divisions of such charges, and to establish and provide facilities and regulations for operating such through routes.

"(b) All charges, practices, classifications, and regulations for and in connection with such communication service, shall be just and reasonable, and any such charge, practice, classification, or regulation that is unjust or unreasonable is hereby declared to be unlawful: Provided, That communications by wire or radio subject to this act may be classified into day, night, repeated, unrepeated, letter, commercial, press, Government, and such other classes as the Commission may decide to be just and reasonable, and different charges may be made for the different classes of communications: Provided further, That nothing in this act or in any other provision of law shall be construed to prevent a common carrier subject to this act from entering into or operating under any contract with any common carrier not subject to this act, for the exchange of their services, if the Commission is of the opinion that such contract is not contrary to the public interest.

"DISCRIMINATION AND PREFERENCES

"SEC. 202. (a) It shall be unlawful for any common carrier to make any unjust or unreasonable discrimination in charges, practices, classifications, regulations, facilities, or services for or in connection with like communication service, directly or indirectly, by any means or device, or to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, class of persons, or locality, or to subject any particular person, class of persons, or locality to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage.

"(b) Charges or services, whenever referred to in this act, include charges for, or services in connection with, the use of wires in chain broadcasting or incidental to radio communication of any kind.

"(c) Any carrier who knowingly violates the provisions of this section shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500 for each such offense and $25 for each and every day of the continuance of such offense.

"SCHEDULES OF CHARGES

"SEC. 203. (a) Every common carrier, except connecting carriers, shall, within such reasonable time as the Commission shall designate, file with the Commission and print and keep open for public inspection schedules showing all charges for itself and its connecting carriers for interstate and foreign wire or radio communication between the different points on its own system, and between points on its own system and points on the system of its connecting carriers or points on the system of any other carrier subject to this act when a through route has been established, whether such charges are joint or separate, and showing the classifications, practices, and regulations affecting such charges. Such schedules shall contain such other information, and be printed in such form, and be posted and kept open for public inspection in such places, as the Commission may by regulation require, and each such schedule shall give notice of its effective date; and such common carrier shall furnish such schedules to each of its connecting carriers, and such connecting carriers shall keep such schedules open for inspection in such public places as the Commission may require.

"(b) No change shall be made in the charges, classifications, regulations, or practices which have been so filed and published except after 30 days' notice to the Commission and to the public, which shall be published in such form and contain such information as the Commission may by regulations prescribe; but the Commission may, in its discretion and for good cause shown, modify the requirements made by or under authority of this section in particular instances or by a general order applicable to special circumstances or conditions.

"(c) No carrier, unless otherwise provided by or under authority of this act, shall engage or participate in such communication unless schedules have been filed and published in accordance with the provisions of this act and with the regulations made thereunder and no carrier shall (1) charge, demand, collect, or receive a greater or less or different compensation for such communication, or for any service in connection therewith, between the points named in any such schedule than the charges specified in the schedule then in effect, or (2) refund or remit by any means or device any portion of the charges so specified, or (3) extend to any person any privileges or facilities in such communication, or employ or enforce any classifications, regulations, or practices affecting such charges, except as specified in such schedule.

"(d) The Commission may reject and refuse to file any schedule entered for filing which does not provide and give lawful notice of its effective date. Any schedule so rejected by the Commission shall be void and its use shall be unlawful.

"(e) In case of failure or refusal on the part of any carrier to comply with the provisions of this section or of any regulation or order made by the Commission thereunder, such carrier shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500 for each such offense, and $25 for each and every day of the continuance of such offense.

"HEARING AS TO LAWFULNESS OF NEW CHARGES; SUSPENSION

"SEC. 204. Whenever there is filed with the Commission any new charge, classification, regulation, or practice, the Commission may either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, upon reasonable notice, enter upon a hearing concerning the lawfulness thereof; and pending such hearing and the decision thereon the Commission, upon delivering to the carrier or carriers affected thereby a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may suspend the operation of such charge, classification, regulation, or practice, but not for a longer period than three months beyond the time when it would otherwise go into effect; and after full hearing the Commission may make such order with reference thereto as would be proper in a proceeding initiated after it had become effective. If the proceeding has not been concluded and an order made within the period of the suspension, the proposed change of charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall go into effect at the end of such period; but in case of a proposed increased charge, the Commission may by order require the interested carrier or carriers to keep accurate account of all amounts received by reason of such increase, specifying by whom and in whose behalf such amounts are paid, and upon completion of the hearing and decision may by further order require the interested carrier or carriers to refund, with interest, to the persons in whose behalf such amounts were paid, such portion of such increased charges as by its decision shall be found not justified. At any hearing involving a charge increased, or sought to be increased, after the organization of the Commission, the burden of proof to show that the increased charge, or proposed increased charge, is just and reasonable shall be upon the carrier, and the Commission shall give to the hearing and decision of such questions preference over all other questions pending before it and decide the same as speedily as possible.

"COMMISSION AUTHORIZED TO PRESCRIBE JUST AND REASONABLE CHARGES

"SEC. 205. (a) Whenever, after full opportunity for hearing, upon a complaint or under an order for investigation and hearing made by the Commission on its own initiative, the Commission shall be of opinion that any charge, classification, regulation, or practice of any carrier or carriers is or will be in violation of any of the provisions of this act, the Commission is authorized and empowered to determine and prescribe what will be the just and reasonable charge or the maximum or minimum, or maximum and minimum, charge or charges to be thereafter observed, and what classification, regulation, or practice is or will be just, fair, and reasonable, to be thereafter followed, and to make an order that the carrier or carriers shall cease and desist from such violation to the extent that the Commission finds that the same does or will exist, and shall not thereafter publish, demand, or collect any charge other than the charge so prescribed, or in excess of the maximum or less than the minimum so prescribed, as the case may be, and shall adopt the classification and shall conform to and observe the regulation or practice so prescribed.

"(b) Any carrier, any officer, representative, or agent of a carrier, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, or agent of either of them, who knowingly fails or neglects to obey any order made under the provisions of this section shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $1,000 for each offense. Every distinct violation shall be a separate offense, and in case of continuing violation each day shall be deemed a separate offense.

"LIABILITY OF CARRIERS FOR DAMAGES

"SEC. 206. In case any common carrier shall do, or cause or permit to be done, any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or shall omit to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, such common carrier shall be liable to the person or persons injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation of the provisions of this act, together with a reasonable counsel or attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court in every case of recovery, which attorney's fee shall be taxed and collected as part of the costs in the case.

"RECOVERY OF DAMAGES

"SEC. 207. Any person claiming to be damaged by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act may either make complaint to the Commission as hereinafter provided for, or may bring suit for the recovery of the damages for which such common carrier may be liable under the provisions of this act, in any district court of the United States of competent jurisdiction; but such person shall not have the right to pursue both such remedies.

"COMPLAINTS TO THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 208. Any person, any body politic or municipal organization, or State commission, complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any common carrier subject to this act, in contravention of the provisions thereof, may apply to said Commission by petition which shall briefly state the facts, whereupon a statement of the complaint thus made shall be forwarded by the Commission to such common carrier, who shall be called upon to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same in writing within a reasonable time to be specified by the Commission. If such common carrier within the time specified shall make reparation for the injury alleged to have been caused, the common carrier shall be relieved of liability to the complainant only for the particular violation of law thus complained of. If such carrier or carriers shall not satisfy the complaint within the time specified or there shall appear to be any reasonable ground for investigating said complaint, it shall be the duty of the Commission to investigate the matters complained of in such manner and by such means as it shall deem proper. No complaint shall at any time be dismissed because of the absence of direct damage to the complainant.

"ORDERS FOR PAYMENT OF MONEY

"SEC. 209. If, after hearing on a complaint, the Commission shall determine that any party complainant is entitled to an award of damages under the provisions of this act, the Commission shall make an order directing the carrier to pay to the complainant the sum to which he is entitled on or before a day named.

"FRANKS AND PASSES

"SEC. 210. Nothing in this act or in any other provision of law shall be construed to prohibit common carriers from issuing or giving franks to, or exchanging franks with each other for the use of, their officers, agents, employees, and their families, or, subject to such rules as the Commission may prescribe, from issuing, giving, or exchanging franks and passes to or with other common carriers not subject to the provisions of this act, for the use of their officers, agents, employees, and their families. The term 'employees', as used in this section, shall include furloughed, pensioned, and superannuated employees.

"COPIES OF CONTRACTS TO BE FILED

"SEC. 211. (a) Every carrier subject to this act shall file with the Commission copies of all contracts, agreements, or arrangements with other carriers, or with common carriers not subject to the provisions of this act, in relation to any traffic affected by the provisions of this act to which it may be a party.

"(b) The Commission shall have authority to require the filing of any other contracts of any carrier, and shall also have authority to exempt any carrier from submitting copies of such minor contracts as the Commission may determine.

"INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES—OFFICIALS DEALING IN SECURITIES

"SEC. 212. After 60 days from the enactment of this act it shall be unlawful for any person to hold the position of officer or director of more than one carrier subject to this act, unless such holding shall have been authorized by order of the Commission, upon due showing in form and manner prescribed by the Commission, that neither public nor private interests will be adversely affected thereby. After this section takes effect it shall be unlawful for any officer or director of any such carrier to receive for his own benefit, directly or indirectly, any money or thing of value in respect of negotiation, hypothecation, or sale of any securities issued or to be issued by such carrier, or to share in any of the proceeds thereof, or to participate in the making or paying of any dividends of such carrier from any funds properly included in capital account.

"VALUATION OF CARRIER PROPERTY

"SEC. 213 (a) The Commission may from time to time, as may be necessary for the proper administration of this act, and after opportunity for hearing, make a valuation of all or of any part of the property owned or used by any carrier subject to this act, as of such date as the Commission may fix.

"(b) The Commission may at any time require any such carrier to file with the Commission an inventory of all or of any part of the property owned or used by said carrier, which inventory shall show the units of said property classified in such detail, and in such manner, as the Commission shall direct, and shall show the estimated cost of reproduction new of said units, and their reproduction cost new less depreciation, as of such date as the Commission may direct; and such carrier shall file such inventory within such reasonable time as the Commission by order shall require.

"(c) The Commission may at any time require any such carrier to file with the Commission a statement showing the original cost at the time of dedication to the public use of all or of any part of the property owned or used by said carrier. For the showing of such original cost said property shall be classified, and the original cost shall be defined, in such manner as the Commission may prescribe; and if any part of such cost cannot be determined from accounting or other records, the portion of the property for which such cost cannot be determined shall be reported to the Commission; and, if the Commission shall so direct, the original cost thereof shall be estimated in such manner as the Commission may prescribe. If the carrier owning the property at the time such original cost is reported shall have paid more or less than the original cost to acquire the same, the amount of such cost of acquisition, and any facts which the Commission may require in connection therewith, shall be reported with such original cost. The report made by a carrier under this paragraph shall show the source or sources from which the original cost reported was obtained, and such other information as to the manner in which the report was prepared, as the Commission shall require.

"(d) Nothing shall be included in the original cost reported for the property of any carrier under paragraph (c) of this section on account of any easement, license, or franchise granted by the United States or by any State or political subdivision thereof, beyond the reasonable necessary expense lawfully incurred in obtaining such easement, license, or franchise from the public authority aforesaid, which expense shall be reported separately from all other costs in such detail as the Commission may require; and nothing shall be included in any valuation of the property of any carrier made by the Commission on account of any such easement, license, or franchise, beyond such reasonable necessary expense lawfully incurred as aforesaid.

"(e) The Commission shall keep itself informed of all new construction, extensions, improvements, retirements, or other changes in the condition, quantity, use, and classification of the property of common carriers, and of the cost of all additions and betterments thereto and of all changes in the investment therein, and may keep itself informed of current changes in costs and values of carrier properties.

"(f) For the purpose of enabling the Commission to make a valuation of any of the property of any such carrier, or to find the original cost of such property, or to find any other facts concerning the same which are required for use by the Commission, it shall be the duty of each such carrier to furnish to the Commission, within such reasonable time as the Commission may order, any information with respect thereto which the Commission may by order require, including copies of maps, contracts, reports of engineers, and other data, records, and papers, and to grant to all agents of the Commission free access to its property and its accounts, records, and memoranda whenever and wherever requested by any such duly authorized agent, and to cooperate with and aid the Commission in the work of making any such valuation or finding in such manner and to such extent as the Commission may require and direct, and all rules and regulations made by the Commission for the purpose of administering this section shall have the full force and effect of law. Unless otherwise ordered by the Commission, with the reasons therefor, the records and data of the Commission shall be open to the inspection and examination of the public. The Commission, in making any such valuation, shall be free to adopt any method of valuation which shall be lawful.

"(g) Notwithstanding any provision of this act the Interstate Commerce Commission, if requested to do so by the Commission, shall complete, at the earliest practicable date, such valuations of properties of carriers subject to this act as are now in progress, and shall thereafter transfer to the Commission the records relating thereto.

"(h) Nothing in this section shall impair or diminish the powers of any State commission.

"EXTENSION OF LINES

"SEC. 214. (a) No carrier shall undertake the construction of a new line or of an extension of any line, or shall acquire or operate any line, or extension thereof, or shall engage in transmission over or by means of such additional or extended line, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the Commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require the construction, or operation, or construction and operation, of such additional or extended line: Provided, That no such certificate shall be required under this section for the construction, acquisition, operation, or extension of (1) a line within a single State unless said line constitutes part of an interstate line, (2) local, branch, or terminal lines and exceeding 10 miles in length, or (3) any lines acquired under section 221 of this act: Provided further, That the Commission may, upon appropriate request being made, authorize temporary or emergency service, or the supplementing of existing facilities, without regard to the provisions of this section.

"(b) Upon receipt for an application for any such certificate the Commission shall cause notice thereof to be given to and a copy filed with the Governor of each State in which such additional or extended line is proposed to be constructed or operated, with the right to be heard as provided with respect to the hearing of complaints; and the Commission may require such published notice as it shall determine.

"(c) The Commission shall have power to issue such certificate as prayed for, or to refuse to issue it, or to issue it for a portion or portions of a line, or extension thereof, described in the application, or for the partial exercise only of such right or privilege, and may attach to the issuance of the certificate such terms and conditions as in its judgment the public convenience and necessity may require. After issuance of such certificate, and not before, the carrier may, without securing approval other than such certificate, comply with the terms and conditions contained in or attached to the issuance of such certificate and proceed with the construction, acquisition, operation, or extension covered thereby. Any construction, acquisition, operation, or extension contrary to the provisions of this section may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States, the Commission, the State commission, any State affected, or any party in interest.

"(d) The Commission may, after full opportunity for hearing, in a proceeding upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, authorize or require by order any carrier, party to such proceeding, to provide itself with adequate facilities for performing its service as a common carrier and to extend its line; but no such authorization or order shall be made unless the Commission finds, as to such extension, that it is reasonably required in the interest of public convenience and necessity, or as to such extension or facilities that the expense involved therein will not impair the ability of the carrier to perform its duty to the public. Any carrier which refuses or neglects to comply with any order of the Commission made in pursuance of this paragraph shall forfeit to the United States $100 for each day during which such refusal or neglect continues.

"TRANSACTIONS RELATING TO SERVICES, EQUIPMENT, AND SO FORTH

"SEC. 215. (a) The Commission shall examine into transactions entered into by any common carrier which relate to the furnishing of equipment, supplies, research, services, finances, credit, or personnel to such carrier and/or which may affect the charges made or to be made and/or the services rendered or to be rendered by such carrier, in wire or radio communication subject to this act, and shall report to the Congress whether any such transactions have affected or are likely to affect adversely the ability of the carrier to render adequate service to the public, or may result in any undue or unreasonable increase in charges or in the maintenance of undue or unreasonable charges for such service; and in order to fully examine into such transactions the Commission shall have access to and the right of inspection and examination of all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, or persons furnishing such equipment, supplies, research, services, finances, credit, or personnel. The Commission shall include in its report its recommendations for necessary legislation in connection with such transactions, and shall report specifically whether in its opinion legislation should be enacted (1) authorizing the Commission to declare any such transactions void or to permit such transactions to be carried out subject to such modification of their terms and conditions as the Commission shall deem desirable in the public interest; and/or (2) subjecting such transactions to the approval of the Commission where the person furnishing or seeking to furnish the equipment, supplies, research, services, finances, credit, or personnel is a person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, such carrier; and/or (3) authorizing the Commission to require that all or any transactions of carriers involving the furnishing of equipment, supplies, research, services, finances, credit, or personnel to such carrier be upon competitive bids on such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as it shall prescribed as necessary in the public interest.

"(b) The Commission shall investigate the methods by which and the extent to which wire telephone companies are furnishing wire telegraph service and wire telegraph companies are furnishing wire telephone service, and shall report its findings to Congress, together with its recommendations as to whether additional legislation on this subject is desirable.

"(c) The Commission shall examine all contracts of common carriers subject to this act which prevent the other party thereto from dealing with another common carrier subject to this act, and shall report its findings to Congress, together with its recommendations as to whether additional legislation on this subject is desirable.

"APPLICATION OF ACT TO RECEIVERS AND TRUSTEES

"SEC. 216. The provisions of this act shall apply to all receivers and operating trustees of carriers subject to this act to the same extent that it applies to carriers.

"LIABILITY OF CARRIER FOR ACTS AND OMISSIONS OF AGENTS

"SEC. 217. In construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any officer, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any common carrier or user, acting within the scope of his employment, shall in every case be also deemed to be the act, omission, or failure of such carrier or user as well as that of the person.

"INQUIRIES INTO MANAGEMENT

"SEC. 218. The Commission may inquire into the management of the business of all carriers subject to this act, and shall keep itself informed as to the manner and method in which the same is conducted and as to technical developments and improvements in wire and radio communication and radio transmission of energy to the end that the benefits of new inventions and developments may be made available to the people of the United States. The Commission may obtain from such carriers and from persons directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control, such carriers full and complete information necessary to enable the Commission to perform the duties and carry out the objects for which it was created.

"ANNUAL AND OTHER REPORTS

"SEC. 219. (a) The Commission is authorized to require annual reports under oath from all carriers subject to this act, and from persons directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, any such carrier, to prescribe the manner in which such reports shall be made, and to require from such persons specific answers to all questions upon which the Commission may need information. Such annual reports shall show in detail the amount of capital stock issued, the amount and privileges of each class of stock, the amounts paid therefor, and the manner of payment for the same; the dividends paid and the surplus fund, if any; the number of stockholders (and the names of the 30 largest holders of each class of stock and the amount held by each); the funded and floating debts and the interest paid thereon; the cost and value of the carrier's property, franchises, and equipments; the number of employees and the salaries paid each class; the names of all officers and directors, and the amount of salary, bonus, and all other compensation paid to each; the amounts expended for improvements each year, how expended, and the character of such improvements; the earnings and receipts from each branch of business and from all sources; the operating and other expenses; the balances of profit and loss, and a complete exhibit of the financial operations of the carrier each year, including an annual balance sheet. Such reports shall also contain such information in relation to charges or regulations concerning charges, or agreements, arrangements, or contracts affecting the same, as the Commission may require.

"(b) Such reports shall be for such 12 months' period as the Commission shall designate and shall be filed with the Commission at its office in Washington within 3 months after the close of the year for which the report is made, unless additional time is granted in any case by the Commission; and if any person subject to the provisions of this section shall fail to make and file said annual reports within the time above specified, or within the time extended by the Commission, for making and filing the same, or shall fail to make specific answer to any question authorized by the provisions of this section within 30 days from the time it is lawfully required so to do, such person shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each and every day it shall continue to be in default with respect thereto. The Commission may by general or special orders require any such carriers to file monthly reports of earnings and expenses and to file periodical and/or special reports concerning any matters with respect to which the Commission is authorized or required by law to act; and such periodical or special reports shall be under oath whenever the Commission so requires. If any such carrier shall fail to make and file any such periodical or special report within the time fixed by the Commission, it shall be subject to the forfeitures above provided.

"ACCOUNTS, RECORDS, AND MEMORANDA; DEPRECIATION CHARGES

"SEC. 220. (a) The Commission may, in its discretion, prescribe the forms of any and all accounts, records, and memoranda to be kept by carriers subject to this act, including the accounts, records, and memoranda of the movement of traffic, as well as of the receipts and expenditures of moneys.

"(b) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable, prescribe for such carriers the classes of property for which depreciation charges may be properly included under operating expenses, and the percentages of depreciation which shall be charged with respect to each of such classes of property, classifying the carriers as it may deem proper for this purpose. The Commission may, when it deems necessary, modify the classes and percentages so prescribed. Such carriers shall not, after the Commission has prescribed the classes of property for which depreciation charges may be included, charge to operating expenses any depreciation charges on classes of property other than those prescribed by the Commission, or, after the Commission has prescribed percentages of depreciation, charge with respect to any class of property a percentage of depreciation other than that prescribed therefor by the Commission. No such carrier shall in any case include in any form under its operating or other expenses any depreciation or other charge or expenditure included elsewhere as a depreciation charge or otherwise under its operating or other expenses.

"(c) The Commission shall at all times have access to and the right of inspection and examination of all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be kept by such carriers, and the provisions of this section respecting the preservation and destruction of books, papers, and documents shall apply thereto. The burden of proof to justify every accounting entry questioned by the Commission shall be on the person making, authorizing, or requiring such entry and the Commission may suspend a charge or credit pending submission of proof by such person. Any provision of law prohibiting the disclosure of the contents of messages or communications shall not be deemed to prohibit the disclosure of any matter in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"(d) In case of failure or refusal on the part of any such carrier to keep such accounts, records, and memoranda on the books and in the manner prescribed by the Commission, or to submit such accounts, records, memoranda, documents, papers, and correspondence as are kept to the inspection of the Commission or any of its authorized agents, such carrier shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500 for each day of the continuance of each such offense.

"(e) Any person who shall willfully make any false entry in the accounts of any book of accounts or in any record or memoranda kept by any such carrier, or who shall willfully destroy, mutilate, alter, or by any other means or device falsify any such account, record, or memoranda, or who shall willfully neglect or fail to make full, true, and correct entries in such accounts, records, or memoranda of all facts and transactions appertaining to the business of the carrier, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subject, upon conviction, to a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000 or imprisonment for a term of not less than 1 year nor more than 3 years, or both such fine and imprisonment: Provided, That the Commission may in its discretion issue orders specifying such operating, accounting, or financial papers, records, books, blanks, or documents which may, after a reasonable time, be destroyed, and prescribing the length of time such books, papers, or documents shall be preserved.

"(f) No member, officer, or employee of the Commission shall divulge any fact or information which may come to his knowledge during the course of examination of books or other accounts, as hereinbefore provided, except insofar as he may be directed by the Commission or by a court.

"(g) After the Commission has prescribed the forms and manner of keeping of accounts, records, and memoranda to be kept by any person as herein provided, it shall be unlawful for such person to keep any other accounts, records, or memoranda than those so prescribed or such as may be approved by the Commission or to keep the accounts in any other manner than that prescribed or approved by the Commission. Notice of alterations by the Commission in the required manner or form of keeping accounts shall be given to such persons by the Commission at least 6 months before the same are to take effect.

"(h) The Commission may classify carriers subject to this act and prescribe different requirements under this section for different classes of carriers, and may, if it deems such action consistent with the public interest, except the carriers of any particular class or classes in any State from any of the requirements under this section in cases where such carriers are subject to State commission regulation with respect to matters to which this section relates.

"(i) The Commission, before prescribing any requirements as to accounts, records, or memoranda, shall notify each State commission having jurisdiction with respect to any carrier involved, and shall give reasonable opportunity to each such commission to present its views, and shall receive and consider such views and recommendations.

"(j) The Commission shall investigate and report to Congress as to the need for legislation to define further or harmonize the powers of the Commission and of State commissions with respect to matters to which this section relates.

"SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO TELEPHONE COMPANIES

"SEC. 221. (a) Upon application of one or more telephone companies for authority to consolidate their properties or a part thereof into a single company, or for authority for one or more such companies to acquire the whole or any part of the property of another telephone company or other telephone companies or the control thereof by the purchase of securities or by lease or in any other like manner, when such consolidated company would be subject to this act, the Commission shall fix a time and place for a public hearing upon such application and shall thereupon give reasonable notice in writing to the Governor of each of the States in which the physical property affected, or any part thereof, is situated, and to the State commission having jurisdiction over telephone companies, and to such other persons as it may deem advisable. After such public hearing, if the Commission finds that the proposed consolidation, acquisition, or control will be of advantage to the persons to whom service is to be rendered and in the public interest, it shall certify to that effect; and thereupon any act or acts of Congress making the proposed transaction unlawful shall not apply. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed as in anywise limiting or restricting the powers of the several States to control and regulate telephone companies.

"(b) Nothing in this act shall be construed to apply, or to give the Commission jurisdiction, with respect to charges, classifications, practices, services, facilities, or regulations for or in connection with wire telephone exchange service, even though a portion of such exchange service constitutes interstate or foreign communication, in any case where such matters are subject to regulation by a State commission or by local governmental authority.

"(c) For the purpose of administering this act as to carriers engaged in wire telephone communication, the Commission may classify the property of any such carrier used for wire telephone communication, and determine what property of said carrier shall be considered as used in interstate or foreign telephone toll service. Such classification shall be made after hearing, upon notice to the carrier, the State commission (or the Governor, if the State has no State commission) of any State in which the property of said carrier is located, and such other persons as the Commission may prescribe.

"(d) In making a valuation of the property of any wire telephone carrier the Commission, after making the classification authorized in this section, may in its discretion value only that part of the property of such carrier determined to be used in interstate or foreign telephone toll service.

"TITLE III—SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO RADIO

"LICENSE FOR RADIO COMMUNICATION OR TRANSMISSION OF ENERGY

"SEC. 301. It is the purpose of this act, among other things, to maintain the control of the United States over all the channels of interstate and foreign radio transmission; and to provide for the use of such channels, but not the ownership thereof, by persons for limited periods of time, under licenses granted by Federal authority, and no such license shall be construed to create any right, beyond the terms, conditions, and periods of the license. No person shall use or operate any apparatus for the transmission of energy or communications or signals by radio (a) from one place in any Territory or possession of the United States or in the District of Columbia to another place in the same Territory, possession, or District; or (b) from any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or from the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or possession of the United States; or (c) from any place in any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or in the District of Columbia, to any place in any foreign country or to any vessel; or (d) within any State when the effects of such use extend beyond the borders of said State, or when interference is caused by such use or operation with the transmission of such energy, communications, or signals from within said State to any place beyond its borders, or from any place beyond its borders to any place within said State, or with the transmission or reception of such energy, communications, or signals from and/or to places beyond the borders of said State; or (e) upon any vessel or aircraft of the United States; or (f) upon any other mobile stations within the jurisdiction of the United States, except under and in accordance with this act and with a license in that behalf granted under the provisions of this act.

"ZONES

"SEC. 302. (a) For the purposes of this title the United States is divided into five zones, as follows: The first zone shall embrace the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and the District of Columbia; the second zone shall embrace the States of Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, Ohio, Michigan, and Kentucky; the third zone shall embrace the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, and Oklahoma; the fourth zone shall embrace the States of Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri; and the fifth zone shall embrace the States of Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, Washington, Oregon, and California.

(b) The Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, Alaska, Guam, American Samoa, and the Territory of Hawaii are expressly excluded from the zones herein established.

"GENERAL POWERS OF COMMISSION

"SEC. 303. Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the Commission from time to time, as public convenience, interest, or necessity requires, shall—

"(a) Classify radio stations;

"(b) Prescribe the nature of the service to be rendered by each class of licensed stations and each station within any class;

"(c) Assign bands of frequencies to the various classes of stations, and assign frequencies for each individual station and determine the power which each station shall use and the time during which it may operate;

"(d) Determine the location of classes of stations or individual stations;

"(e) Regulate the kind of apparatus to be used with respect to its external effects and the purity and sharpness of the emissions from each station and from the apparatus therein;

"(f) Make such regulations not inconsistent with law as it may deem necessary to prevent interference between stations and to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That changes in the frequencies, authorized power, or in the times of operation of any station, shall not be made without the consent of the station licensee unless, after a public hearing, the Commission shall determine that such changes will promote public convenience or interest or will serve public necessity, or the provisions of this act will be more fully complied with;

"(g) Study new uses for radio, provide for experimental uses of frequencies, and generally encourage the larger and more effective use of radio in the public interest;

"(h) Have authority to establish areas or zones to be served by any station;

"(i) Have authority to make special regulations applicable to radio stations engaged in chain broadcasting;

"(j) Have authority to make general rules and regulations requiring stations to keep such records of programs, transmissions of energy, communications, or signals as it may deem desirable;

"(k) Have authority to exclude from the requirements of any regulations in whole or in part any radio station upon railroad rolling stock, or to modify such regulations in its discretion;

"(l) Have authority to prescribe the qualifications of station operators, to classify them according to the duties to be performed, to fix the forms of such licenses, and to issue them to such citizens of the United States as the Commission finds qualified;

"(m) Have authority to suspend the license of any operator for a period not exceeding 2 years upon proof sufficient to satisfy the Commission that the licensee (1) has violated any provision of any act or treaty binding on the United States which the Commission is authorized by this act to administer or any regulation made by the Commission under any such act or treaty; or (2) has failed to carry out the lawful orders of the master of the vessel on which he is employed; or (3) has willfully damaged or permitted radio apparatus to be damaged; or (4) has transmitted superfluous radio communications or signals or radio communications containing profane or obscene words or language; or (5) has willfully or maliciously interfered with any other radio communications or signals;

"(n) Have authority to inspect all transmitting apparatus to ascertain whether in construction and operation it conforms to the requirements of this act, the rules and regulations of the Commission, and the license under which it is constructed or operated;

"(o) Have authority to designate call letters of all stations;

"(p) Have authority to cause to be published such call letters and such other announcements and data as in the judgment of the Commission may be required for the efficient operation of radio stations subject to the jurisdiction of the United States and for the proper enforcement of this act;

"(q) Have authority to require the painting and/or illumination of radio towers if and when in its judgment such towers constitute, or there is a reasonable possibility that they may constitute a menace to air navigation.

"WAIVER BY LICENSEE

"SEC. 304. No station license shall be granted by the Commission until the applicant therefor shall have signed a waiver of any claim to the use of any particular frequency or of the ether as against the regulatory power of the United States because of the previous use of the same, whether by license or otherwise.

"GOVERNMENT-OWNED STATIONS

"SEC. 305. (a) Radio stations belonging to and operated by the United States shall not be subject to the provisions of sections 301 and 303 of this act. All such Government stations shall use such frequencies as shall be assigned to each or to each class by the President. All such stations, except stations on board naval and other Government vessels while at sea or beyond the limits of the continental United States, when transmitting any radio communication or signal other than a communication or signal relating to Government business, shall conform to such rules and regulations designed to prevent interference with other radio stations and the rights of others as the Commission may prescribe.

"(b) Radio stations on board vessels of the United States Shipping Board Bureau or the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation or the Inland and Coastwise Waterways Service shall be subject to the provisions of this title.

"(c) All stations owned and operated by the United States, except mobile stations of the Army of the United States, and all other stations on land and sea, shall have special call letters designated by the Commission.

"FOREIGN SHIPS

"SEC. 306. Section 301 of this act shall not apply to any person sending radio communications or signals on a foreign ship while the same is within the jurisdiction of the United States, but such communications or signals shall be transmitted only in accordance with such regulations designed to prevent interference as may be promulgated under the authority of this act.

"ALLOCATION OF FACILITIES; TERM OF LICENSES

"SEC. 307. (a) The Commission, if public convenience, interest, or necessity will be served thereby, subject to the limitations of this act, shall grant to any applicant therefor a station license provided for by this act.

"(b) It is hereby declared that the people of all the zones established by this title are entitled to equality of radio broadcasting service, both of transmission and of reception, and in order to provide said equality of Commission shall as nearly as possible make and maintain an equal allocation of broadcasting licenses, of bands of frequency, of periods of time for operation, and of station power, to each of said zones when and insofar as there are applications therefor; and shall make a fair and equitable allocation of licenses, frequencies, time for operation, and station power to each of the States and the District of Columbia, within each zone, according to population. The Commission shall carry into effect the equality of broadcasting service hereinbefore directed, whenever necessary or proper, by granting or refusing licenses or renewals of licenses, by changing periods of time for operation, and by increasing or decreasing station power, when applications are made for licenses or renewals of licenses: Provided, That if and when there is a lack of applications from any zone for the proportionate share of licenses, frequencies, time of operation, or station power to which such zone is entitled, the Commission may issue licenses for the balance of the proportion not applied for from any zone, to applicants from other zones for a temporary period of 90 days each, and shall specifically designate that said apportionment is only for said temporary period. Allocations shall be charged to the State or District wherein the studio of the station is located and not where the transmitter is located: Provided further, That the Commission may also grant applications for additional licenses for stations not exceeding 100 watts of power if the Commission finds that such stations will serve the public convenience, interest, or necessity, and that their operation will not interfere with the fair and efficient radio service of stations licensed under the provisions of this section.

"(c) The Commission shall study the proposal that Congress by statute allocate fixed percentages of radio broadcasting facilities to particular types or kinds of nonprofit radio programs or to persons identified with particular types or kinds of nonprofit activities, and shall report to Congress, not later than February 1, 1935, its recommendations together with the reasons for the same.

"(d) No license granted for the operation of a broadcasting station shall be for a longer term than 3 years and no license so granted for any other class of station shall be for a longer term than 5 years, and any license granted may be revoked as hereinafter provided. Upon the expiration of any license, upon application therefor, a renewal of such license may be granted from time to time for a term of not to exceed 3 years in the case of broadcasting licenses and not to exceed 5 years in the case of other licenses, but action of the Commission with reference to the granting of such application for the renewal of a license shall be limited to and governed by the same considerations and practice which affect the granting of original applications.

"(e) No renewal of an existing station license shall be granted more than 30 days prior to the expiration of the original license.

"APPLICATIONS FOR LICENSES; CONDITIONS IN LICENSE FOR FOREIGN COMMUNICATION

"SEC. 308. (a) The Commission may grant licenses, renewal of licenses, and modification of licenses only upon written application therefor received by it: Provided, however, That in cases of emergency found by the Commission, licenses, renewals of licenses, and modifications of licenses, for stations on vessels or aircraft of the United States, may be issued under such conditions as the Commission may impose, without such formal application. Such licenses, however, shall in no case be for a longer term than 3 months: Provided further, That the Commission may issue by cable, telegraph, or radio a permit for the operation of a station on a vessel of the United States at sea, effective in lieu of a license until said vessel shall return to a port of the continental United States.

"(b) All such applications shall set forth such facts as the Commission by regulation may prescribe as to the citizenship, character, and financial, technical, and other qualifications of the applicant to operate the station; the ownership and location of the proposed station and of the stations, if any, with which it is proposed to communicate; the frequencies and the power desired to be used; the hours of the day or other periods of time during which it is proposed to operate the station; the purposes for which the station is to be used; and such other information as it may require. The Commission, at any time after the filing of such original application and during the term of any such license, may require from an applicant or licensee further written statements of fact to enable it to determine whether such original application should be granted or denied or such license revoked. Such application and/or such statement of fact shall be signed by the applicant and/or licensee under oath or affirmation.

"(c) The Commission in granting any license for a station intended or used for commercial communication between the United States or any Territory or possession, continental or insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and any foreign country, may impose any terms, conditions, or restrictions authorized to be imposed with respect to submarine-cable licenses by section 2 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the landing and the operation of submarine cables in the United States', approved May 24, 1921.

"HEARINGS ON APPLICATIONS FOR LICENSES; FORM OF LICENSES; CONDITIONS ATTACHED TO LICENSES

"SEC. 309. (a) If upon examination of any application for a station license or for the renewal or modification of a station license the Commission shall determine that public interest, convenience, or necessity would be served by the granting thereof, it shall authorize the issuance, renewal, or modification thereof in accordance with said finding. In the event the Commission upon examination of any such application does not reach such decision with respect thereto, it shall notify the applicant thereof, shall fix and give notice of a time and place for hearing thereon, and shall afford such applicant an opportunity to be heard under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe.

"(b) Such station licenses as the Commission may grant shall be in such general form as it may prescribe, but each license shall contain, in addition to other provisions, a statement of the following conditions to which such license shall be subject:

"(1) The station license shall not vest in the licensee any right to operate the station nor any right in the use of the frequencies designated in the license beyond the term thereof nor in any other manner than authorized therein.

"(2) Neither the license nor the right granted thereunder shall be assigned or otherwise transferred in violation of this act.

"(3) Every license issued under this act shall be subject in terms to the right of use or control conferred by section 606 hereof.

"LIMITATION ON HOLDING AND TRANSFER OF LICENSES

"SEC. 310. (a) The station license required hereby shall not be granted to or held by—

"(1) Any alien or the representative of any alien;

"(2) Any foreign government or the representative thereof;

"(3) Any corporation organized under the laws of any foreign government;

"(4) Any corporation of which any officer or director is an alien or of which more than one-fifth of the capital stock is owned of record or voted by aliens or their representatives or by a foreign government or representative thereof, or by any corporation organized under the laws of a foreign country;

"(5) Any corporation directly or indirectly controlled by any other corporation of which any officer or more than one-fourth of the directors are aliens, or of which more than one-fourth of the capital stock is owned of record or voted, after June 1, 1935, by aliens, their representatives, or by a foreign government or representative thereof, or by any corporation organized under the laws of a foreign country, if the Commission finds that the public interest will be served by the refusal or the revocation of such license.

"Nothing in this subsection shall prevent the licensing of radio apparatus on board any vessel, aircraft, or other mobile station of the United States when the installation and use of such apparatus is required by act of Congress or any treaty to which the United States is a party.

"(b) The station license required hereby, the frequencies authorized to be used by the licensee, and the rights therein granted shall not be transferred, assigned, or in any manner either voluntarily or involuntarily disposed of, or indirectly by transfer of control of any corporation holding such license, to any person, unless the Commission shall, after securing full information, decide that said transfer is in the public interest, and shall give its consent in writing.

"REFUSAL OF LICENSES AND PERMITS IN CERTAIN CASES

"SEC. 311. The Commission is hereby directed to refuse a station license and/or the permit hereinafter required for the construction of a station to any person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) whose license has been revoked by a court under section 313, and is hereby authorized to refuse such station license and/or permit to any other person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) which has been finally adjudged guilty by a Federal court of unlawfully monopolizing or attempting unlawfully to monopolize, radio communication, directly or indirectly, through the control of the manufacture or sale of radio apparatus, through exclusive traffic arrangements, or by any other means, or to have been using unfair methods of competition. The granting of a license shall not estop the United States or any person aggrieved from proceeding against such person for violating the law against unfair methods of competition or for a violation of the law against unlawful restraints and monopolies and/or combinations, contracts, or agreements in restraint of trade, or from instituting proceedings for the dissolution of such corporation.

"REVOCATION OF LICENSES

"SEC. 312. (a) Any station license may be revoked for false statements either in the application or in the statement of fact which may be required by section 308 hereof, or because of conditions revealed by such statements of fact as may be required from time to time which would warrant the Commission in refusing to grant a license on an original application, or for failure to operate substantially as set forth in the license, or for violation of or failure to observe any of the restrictions and conditions of this act or of any regulation of the Commission authorized by this act or by a treaty ratified by the United States: Provided, however, That no such order of revocation shall take effect until 15 days' notice in writing thereof, stating the cause for the proposed revocation, has been given to the licensee. Such licensee may make written application to the Commission at any time within said 15 days for a hearing upon such order, and upon the filing of such written application said order of revocation shall stand suspended until the conclusion of the hearing conducted under such rules as the Commission may prescribe. Upon the conclusion of said hearing the Commission may affirm, modify, or revoke said order of revocation.

"(b) Any station license hereafter granted under the provisions of this act or the construction permit required hereby and hereafter issued, may be modified by the Commission either for a limited time or for the duration of the term thereof, if in the judgment of the Commission such action will promote the public interest, convenience, and necessity, or the provisions of this act or of any treaty ratified by the United States will be more fully complied with: Provided, however, That no such order of modification shall become final until the holder of such outstanding license or permit shall have been notified in writing of the proposed action and the grounds or reasons therefor and shall have been given reasonable opportunity to show cause why such an order of modification should not issue.

"APPLICATION OF ANTITRUST LAWS

"SEC. 313. All laws of the United States relating to unlawful restraints and monopolies and to combinations, contracts, or agreements in restraint of trade are hereby declared to be applicable to the manufacture and sale of and to trade in radio apparatus and devices entering into or affecting interstate or foreign commerce and to interstate or foreign radio communications. Whenever in any suit, action, or proceeding, civil or criminal, brought under the provisions of any of said laws or in any proceedings brought to enforce or to review findings and orders of the Federal Trade Commission or other governmental agency in respect of any matters as to which said Commission or other governmental agency is by law authorized to act, any licensee shall be found guilty of the violation of the provisions of such laws or any of them, the court, in addition to the penalties imposed by said laws, may adjudge, order, and/or decree that the license of such licensee shall, as of the date the decree or judgment becomes finally effective or as of such other date as the said decree shall fix, be revoked and that all rights under such license shall thereupon cease: Provided, however, That such licensee shall have the same right of appeal or review as is provided by law in respect of other decrees and judgments of said court.

"PRESERVATION OF COMPETITION IN COMMERCE

"SEC. 314. After the effective date of this act no person engaged directly, or indirectly through any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, such person, or through an agent, or otherwise, in the business of transmitting and/or receiving for hire energy, communications, or signals by radio in accordance with the terms of the license issued under this act, shall by purchase, lease, construction, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, acquire, own, control, or operate any cable or wire telegraph or telephone line or system between any place in any State, Territory, or possession of the United States or in the District of Columbia, and any place in any foreign country, or shall acquire, own, or control any part of the stock or other capital share or any interest in the physical property and/or other assets of any such cable, wire, telegraph, or telephone line or system, if in either case the purpose is and/or the effect thereof may be to substantially lessen competition or to restrain commerce between any place in any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or in the District of Columbia, and any place in any foreign country, or unlawfully to create monopoly in any line of commerce; or shall any person engaged directly, or indirectly through any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, such person, or through an agent, or otherwise, in the business of transmitting and/or receiving for hire messages by any cable, wire, telegraph, or telephone line or system (a) between any place in any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or in the District of Columbia, and any place in any other State, Territory, or possession of the United States; or (b) between any place in any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or the District of Columbia, and any place in any foreign country, by purchase, lease, construction, or otherwise, directly or indirectly acquire, own, control, or operate any station or the apparatus therein, or any system for transmitting and/or receiving radio communications or signals between any place in any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or in the District of Columbia, and any place in any foreign country, or shall acquire, own, or control any part of the stock or other capital share or any interest in the physical property and/or other assets of any such radio station, apparatus, or system, if in either case the purpose is and/or the effect thereof may be to substantially lessen competition or to restrain commerce between any place in any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or in the District of Columbia, and any place in any foreign country, or unlawfully to create monopoly in any line of commerce.

"FACILITIES FOR CANDIDATES FOR PUBLIC OFFICE

"SEC. 315. If any licensee shall permit any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office to use a broadcasting station, he shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office in the use of such broadcasting station, and the Commission shall make rules and regulations to carry this provision into effect: Provided, That such licensee shall have no power of censorship over the material broadcast under the provisions of this section. No obligation is hereby imposed upon any licensee to allow the use of its station by any such candidate.

"LOTTERIES AND OTHER SIMILAR SCHEMES

"SEC. 316. No person shall broadcast by means of any radio station for which a license is required by any law of the United States, and no person operating any such station shall knowingly permit the broadcasting of, any advertisement of or information concerning any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme, offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or any list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme, whether said list contains any part or all of such prizes. Any person violating any provision of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both, for each and every day during which such offense occurs.

"ANNOUNCEMENT THAT MATTER IS PAID FOR

"SEC. 317. All matter broadcast by any radio station for which service, money, or any other valuable consideration is directly or indirectly paid, or promised to or charged or accepted by, the station so broadcasting, from any person, shall, at the time the same is so broadcast, be announced as paid for or furnished, as the case may be, by such person.

"OPERATION OF TRANSMITTING APPARATUS

"SEC. 318. The actual operation of all transmitting apparatus in any radio station for which a station license is required by this act shall be carried on only by a person holding an operator's license issued hereunder. No person shall operate any such apparatus in such station except under and in accordance with an operator's license issued to him by the Commission.

"CONSTRUCTION PERMITS

"SEC. 319. (a) No license shall be issued under the authority of this act for the operation of any station the construction of which is begun or is continued after this act takes effect, unless a permit for its construction has been granted by the Commission upon written application therefor. The Commission may grant such permit if public convenience, interest, or necessity will be served by the construction of the station. This application shall set forth such facts as the Commission by regulation may prescribe as to the citizenship, character, and the financial, technical, and other ability of the applicant to construct and operate the station, the ownership and location of the proposed station and of the station or stations with which it is proposed to communicate, the frequencies desired to be used, the hours of the day or other periods of time during which it is proposed to operate the station, the purpose for which the station is to be used, the type of transmitting apparatus to be used, the power to be used, the date upon which the station is expected to be completed and in operation, and such other information as the Commission may require. Such application shall be signed by the applicant under oath or affirmation.

"(b) Such permit for construction shall show specifically the earliest and latest dates between which the actual operation of such station is expected to begin, and shall provide that said permit will be automatically forfeited if the station is not ready for operation within the time specified or within such further time as the Commission may allow, unless prevented by causes not under the control of the grantee. The rights under any such permit shall not be assigned or otherwise transferred to any person without the approval of the Commission. A permit for construction shall not be required for Government stations, amateur stations, or stations upon mobile vessels, railroad rolling stock, or aircraft. Upon the completion of any station for the construction or continued construction of which a permit has been granted, and upon it being made to appear to the Commission that all the terms, conditions, and obligations set forth in the application and permit have been fully met, and that no cause or circumstance arising or first coming to the knowledge of the Commission since the granting of the permit would, in the judgment of the Commission, make the operation of such station against the public interest, the Commission shall issue a license to the lawful holder of said permit for the operation of said station. Said license shall conform generally to the terms of said permit.

"DESIGNATION OF STATIONS LIABLE TO INTERFERE WITH DISTRESS SIGNALS

"SEC. 320. The Commission is authorized to designate from time to time radio stations the communications or signals of which, in its opinion, are liable to interfere with the transmission or reception of distress signals of ships. Such stations are required to keep a licensed radio operator listening in on the frequencies designated for signals of distress and radio communications relating thereto during the entire period the transmitter of such station is in operation.

"DISTRESS SIGNALS AND COMMUNICATIONS

"SEC. 321. (a) Every radio station on shipboard shall be equipped to transmit radio communications or signals of distress on the frequency specified by the Commission, with apparatus capable of transmitting and receiving messages over a distance of at least 100 miles by day or night. When sending radio communications or signals of distress and radio communications relating thereto the transmitting set may be adjusted in such a manner as to produce a maximum of radiation irrespective of the amount of interference which may thus be caused.

"(b) All radio stations, including Government stations and stations on board foreign vessels when within the territorial waters of the United States, shall give absolute priority to radio communications or signals relating to ships in distress; shall cease all sending on frequencies which will interfere with hearing a radio communication or signal of distress, and, except when engaged in answering or aiding the ship in distress, shall refrain from sending any radio communications or signals until there is assurance that no interference will be caused with the radio communications or signals relating thereto, and shall assist the vessel in distress, so far as possible, by complying with its instructions.

"INTERCOMMUNICATION IN MOBILE SERVICE

"SEC. 322. Every land station open to general public service between the coast and vessels at sea shall be bound to exchange radio communications or signals with any ship station without distinction as to radio systems or instruments adopted by such stations, respectively, and each station on shipboard shall be bound to exchange radio communications or signals with any other station on shipboard without distinction as to radio systems or instruments adopted by each station.

"INTERFERENCE BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND COMMERCIAL STATIONS

"SEC. 323. (a) At all places where Government and private or commercial radio stations on land operate in such close proximity that interference with the work of Government stations cannot be avoided when they are operating simultaneously, such private or commercial stations as do interfere with the transmission or reception of radio communications or signals by the Government stations concerned shall not use their transmitters during the first 15 minutes of each hour, local standard time.

"(b) The Government stations for which the above-mentioned division of time is established shall transmit radio communications or signals only during the first 15 minutes of each hour, local standard time, except in case of signals or radio communications relating to vessels in distress and vessel requests for information as to course, location, or compass direction.

"USE OF MINIMUM POWER

"SEC. 324. In all circumstances, except in case of radio communications or signals relating to vessels in distress, all radio stations, including those owned and operated by the United States, shall use the minimum amount of power necessary to carry out the communication desired.

"FALSE DISTRESS SIGNALS; REBROADCASTING; STUDIOS OF FOREIGN STATIONS

"SEC. 325. (a) No person within the jurisdiction of the United States shall knowingly utter or transmit, or cause to be uttered or transmitted, any false or fraudulent signal of distress, or communication relating thereto, nor shall any broadcasting station rebroadcast the program or any part thereof of another broadcasting station without the express authority of the originating station.

"(b) No person shall be permitted to locate, use, or maintain a radio broadcast studio or other place or apparatus from which or whereby sound waves are converted into electrical energy, or mechanical or physical reproduction of sound waves produced, and caused to be transmitted or delivered to a radio station in a foreign country for the purpose of being broadcast from any radio station there having a power output of sufficient intensity and/or being so located geographically that its emissions may be received consistently in the United States, without first obtaining a permit from the Commission upon proper application therefor.

"(c) Such application shall contain such information as the Commission may by regulation prescribe, and the granting or refusal thereof shall be subject to the requirements of section 309 hereof with respect to applications for station licenses or renewal or modification thereof, and the license or permission so granted shall be revocable for false statements in the application so required or when the Commission, after hearings, shall find its continuation no longer in the public interest.

"CENSORSHIP; INDECENT LANGUAGE

"SEC. 326. Nothing in this act shall be understood or construed to give the Commission the power of censorship over the radio communications or signals transmitted by any radio station, and no regulation or condition shall be promulgated or fixed by the Commission which shall interfere with the right of free speech by means of radio communication. No person within the jurisdiction of the United States shall utter any obscene, indecent, or profane language by means of radio communication.

"USE OF NAVAL STATIONS FOR COMMERCIAL MESSAGES

"SEC. 327. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, unless restrained by international agreement, under the terms and conditions and at rates prescribed by him, which rates shall be just and reasonable, and which, upon complaint, shall be subject to review and revision by the Commission, to use all radio stations and apparatus, wherever located, owned by the United States and under the control of the Navy Department, (a) for the reception and transmission of press messages offered by any newspaper published in the United States, its Territories or possessions, or published by citizens of the United States in foreign countries, or by any press association of the United States, and (b) for the reception and transmission of private commercial messages between ships, between ship and shore, between localities in Alaska, and between Alaska and the continental United States: Provided, That the rates fixed for the reception and transmission of all such messages, other than press messages between the Pacific coast of the United States, Hawaii, Alaska, Guam, American Samoa, the Philippine Islands, and the Orient, and between the United States and the Virgin Islands, shall not be less than the rates charged by privately owned and operated stations for like messages and service: Provided further, That the right to use such stations for any of the purposes named in this section shall terminate and cease as between any countries or localities or between any locality and privately operated ships whenever privately owned and operated stations are capable of meeting the normal communication requirements between such countries or localities or between any locality and privately operated ships, and the Commission shall have notified the Secretary of the Navy thereof.

"SPECIAL PROVISION AS TO PHILIPPINE ISLANDS AND CANAL ZONE

"SEC. 328. This title shall not apply to the Philippine Islands or to the Canal Zone. In international radio matters the Philippine Islands and the Canal Zone shall be represented by the Secretary of State.

"ADMINISTRATION OF RADIO LAWS IN TERRITORIES AND POSSESSIONS

"SEC. 329. The Commission is authorized to designate any officer or employee of any other department of the Government on duty in any Territory or possession of the United States other than the Philippine Islands and the Canal Zone, to render therein such services in connection with the administration of the radio laws of the United States as the Commission may prescribe: Provided, That such designation shall be approved by the head of the department in which such person is employed.

"TITLE IV—PROCEDURAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

"JURISDICTION TO ENFORCE ACT AND ORDERS OF COMMISSION

"SEC. 401. (a) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction, upon application of the Attorney General of the United States at the request of the Commission, alleging a failure to comply with or a violation of any of the provisions of this act by any person, to issue a writ or writs of mandamus commanding such person to comply with the provisions of this act.

"(b) If any person fails or neglects to obey any order of the Commission other than for the payment of money, while the same is in effect, the Commission or any party injured thereby, or the United States, by its Attorney General, may apply to the appropriate district court of the United States for the enforcement of such order. If, after hearing, that court determines that the order was regularly made and duly served, and that the person is in disobedience of the same, the court shall enforce obedience to such order by a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such person or the officers, agents, or representatives of such person, from further disobedience of such order, or to enjoin upon it or them obedience to the same.

"(c) Upon the request of the Commission it shall be the duty of any district attorney of the United States to whom the Commission may apply to institute in the proper court and to prosecute under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States all necessary proceedings for the enforcement of the provisions of this act and for the punishment of all violations thereof, and the costs and expenses of such prosecutions shall be paid out of the appropriations for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

"(d) The provisions of the Expediting Act, approved February 11, 1903, as amended, and of section 238 (1) of the Judicial Code, as amended, shall be held to apply to any suit in equity arising under title II of this act, wherein the United States is complainant.

"PROCEEDINGS TO ENFORCE OR SET ASIDE THE COMMISSION'S ORDERS—APPEAL IN CERTAIN CASES

"SEC. 402. (a) The provisions of the act of October 22, 1913 (38 Stat. 219), relating to the enforcing or setting aside of the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, are hereby made applicable to suits to enforce, enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend any order of the Commission under this act (except any order of the Commission granting or refusing an application for a construction permit for a radio station, or for a radio station license, or for renewal of an existing radio station license, or for modification of an existing radio station license), and such suits are hereby authorized to be brought as provided in that act.

"(b) An appeal may be taken, in the manner hereinafter provided, from decisions of the Commission to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in any of the following cases:

"(1) By any applicant for a construction permit for a radio station, or for a radio station license, or for renewal of an existing radio station license, or for modification of an existing radio station license, whose application is refused by the Commission.

"(2) By any other person aggrieved or whose interests are adversely affected by any decision of the Commission granting or refusing any such application.

"(c) Such appeal shall be taken by filing with said court within 20 days after the decision complained of is effective, notice in writing of said appeal and a statement of the reasons therefor, together with proof of service of a true copy of said notice and statement upon the Commission. Unless a later date is specified by the Commission as part of its decision, the decision complained of shall be considered to be effective as of the date on which public announcement of the decision is made at the office of the Commission in the city of Washington. The Commission shall thereupon immediately, and in any event not later than 5 days from the date of such service upon it, mail or otherwise deliver a copy of said notice of appeal to each person shown by the records of the Commission to be interested in such appeal and to have a right to intervene therein under the provisions of this section, and shall at all times thereafter permit any such person to inspect and make copies of the appellant's statement of reasons for said appeal at the office of the Commission in the city of Washington. Within 30 days after the filing of said appeal the Commission shall file with the court the originals or certified copies of all papers and evidence presented to it upon the application involved, and also a like copy of its decision thereon, and shall within 30 days thereafter file a full statement in writing of the facts and grounds for its decision as found and given by it, and a list of all interested persons to whom it has mailed or otherwise delivered a copy of said notice of appeal.

"(d) Within 30 days after the filing of said appeal any interested person may intervene and participate in the proceedings had upon said appeal by filing with the court a notice of intention to intervene and a verified statement showing the nature of the interest of such party, together with proof of service of true copies of said notice and statement, both upon appellant and upon the Commission. Any person who would be aggrieved or whose interests would be adversely affected by a reversal or modification of the decision of the Commission complained of shall be considered an interested party.

"(e) At the earliest convenient time the court shall hear and determine the appeal upon the record before it, and shall have power, upon such record, to enter a judgment affirming or reversing the decision of the Commission, and in event the court shall render a decision and enter an order reversing the decision of the Commission, it shall remand the case to the Commission to carry out the judgment of the court: Provided, however, That the review by the court shall be limited to questions of law and that findings of fact by the Commission, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive unless it shall clearly appear that the findings of the Commission are arbitrary or capricious. The court's judgment shall be final, subject, however, to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of certiorari on petition therefor under section 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended, by appellant, by the Commission, or by any interested party intervening in the appeal.

"(f) The court may, in its discretion, enter judgment for costs in favor of or against an appellant, and/or other interested parties intervening in said appeal, but not against the Commission, depending upon the nature of the issues involved upon said appeal and the outcome thereof.

"INQUIRY BY COMMISSION ON ITS OWN MOTION

"SEC. 403. The Commission shall have full authority and power at any time to institute an inquiry, on its own motion, in any case and as to any matter or thing concerning which complaint is authorized to be made, to or before the Commission by any provision of this act, or concerning which any question may arise under any of the provisions of this act, or relating to the enforcement of any of the provisions of this act. The Commission shall have the same powers and authority to proceed with any inquiry instituted on its own motion as though it had been appealed to by complaint or petition under any of the provisions of this act, including the power to make and enforce any order or orders in the case, or relating to the matter or thing concerning which the inquiry is had, excepting orders for the payment of money.

"REPORTS OF INVESTIGATIONS

"SEC. 404. Whenever an investigation shall be made by the Commission it shall be its duty to make a report in writing in respect thereto, which shall state the conclusions of the Commission, together with its decision, order, or requirement in the premises; and in case damages are awarded such report shall include the findings of fact on which the award is made.

"REHEARING BEFORE COMMISSION

"SEC. 405. After a decision, order, or requirement has been made by the Commission in any proceeding, any party thereto may at any time make application for rehearing of the same, or any matter determined therein, and it shall be lawful for the Commission in its discretion to grant such a rehearing if sufficient reason therefor be made to appear: Provided, however, That in the case of a decision, order, or requirement made under title III, the time within which application for rehearing may be made shall be limited to 20 days after the effective date thereof, and such application may be made by any party or any person aggrieved or whose interests are adversely affected thereby. Applications for rehearing shall be governed by such general rules as the Commission may establish. No such application shall excuse any person from complying with or obeying any decision, order, or requirement of the Commission, or operate in any manner to stay or postpone the enforcement thereof, without the special order of the Commission. In case a rehearing is granted, the proceedings thereupon shall conform as nearly as may be to the proceedings in an original hearing, except as the Commission may otherwise direct; and if, in its judgment, after such rehearing and the consideration of all the facts, including those arising since the former hearing, it shall appear that the original decision, order, or requirement is in any respect unjust or unwarranted, the Commission may reverse, change, or modify the same accordingly. Any decision, order, or requirement made after such rehearing, reversing, changing, or modifying the original determination, shall be subject to the same provisions as an original order.

"MANDAMUS TO COMPEL FURNISHING OF FACILITIES

"SEC. 406. The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction upon the relation of any person alleging any violation, by a carrier subject to this act, of any of the provisions of this act which prevent the relator from receiving service in interstate or foreign communication by wire or radio, or in interstate or foreign transmission of energy by radio, from said carrier at the same charges, or upon terms or conditions as favorable as those given by said carrier for like communication or transmission under similar conditions to any other person, to issue a writ or writs of mandamus against said carrier commanding such carrier to furnish facilities for such communication or transmission to the party applying for the writ: Provided, That if any question of fact as to the proper compensation to the carrier for the service to be enforced by the writ is raised by the pleadings, the writ of peremptory mandamus may issue, notwithstanding such question of fact is undetermined, upon such terms as to security, payment of money into the court, or otherwise, as the court may think proper pending the determination of the question of fact: Provided further, That the remedy hereby given by writ of mandamus shall be cumulative and shall not be held to exclude or interfere with other remedies provided by this act.

"PETITION FOR ENFORCEMENT OF ORDER FOR PAYMENT OF MONEY

"SEC. 407. If a carrier does not comply with an order for the payment of money within the time limit in such order, the complainant, or any person for whose benefit such order was made, may file in the district court of the United States for the district in which he resides or in which is located the principal operating office of the carrier, or through which the line of the carrier runs, or in any State court of general jurisdiction having jurisdiction of the parties, a petition setting forth briefly the causes for which he claims damages, and the order of the Commission in the premises. Such suit in the district court of the United States shall proceed in all respects like other civil suits for damages, except that on the trial of such suits the findings and order of the Commission shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, except that the petitioner shall not be liable for costs in the district court nor for costs at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless they accrue upon his appeal. If the petitioner shall finally prevail, he shall be allowed a reasonable attorney's fee, to be taxed and collected as a part of the costs of the suit.

"ORDERS NOT FOR PAYMENT OF MONEY—WHEN EFFECTIVE

"SEC. 408. Except as otherwise provided in this act, all orders of the Commission, other than orders for the payment of money, shall take effect within such reasonable time, not less than 30 days after service of the order, and shall continue in force until its further order, or for a specified period of time, according as shall be prescribed in the order, unless the same shall be suspended or modified or set aside by the Commission, or be suspended or set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO PROCEEDINGS—WITNESSES AND DEPOSITIONS

"SEC. 409. (a) Any member or examiner of the Commission, or the director of any division, when duly designated by the Commission for such purpose, may hold hearings, sign and issue subpenas, administer oaths, examine witnesses, and receive evidence at any place in the United States designated by the Commission; except that in the administration of title III an examiner may not be authorized to exercise such powers with respect to a matter involving (1) a change of policy by the Commission, (2) the revocation of a station license, (3) new devices or developments in radio, or (4) a new kind of use of frequencies. In all cases heard by an examiner the Commission shall hear oral arguments on request of either party.

"(b) For the purposes of this act the Commission shall have the power to require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, schedules of charges, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter under investigation. Witnesses summoned before the Commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

"(c) Such attendance of witnesses, and the production of such documentary evidence, may be required from any place in the United States, at any designated place of hearing. And in case of disobedience to a subpena the Commission, or any party to a proceeding before the Commission, may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section.

"(d) Any of the district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any common carrier or licensee or other person, issue an order requiring such common carrier, licensee, or other person to appear before the Commission (and produce books and papers if so ordered) and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

"(e) The testimony of any witness may be taken, at the instance of a party, in any proceeding or investigation pending before the Commission, by deposition, at any time after a cause or proceeding is at issue on petition and answer. The Commission may also order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation pending before it, at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such depositions may be taken before any judge of any court of the United States, or any United States commissioner, or any clerk of a district court, or any chancellor, justice, or judge of a supreme or superior court, mayor, or chief magistrate of a city, judge of a county court, or court of common pleas of any of the United States, or any notary public, not being of counsel or attorney to either of the parties, nor interested in the event of the proceeding or investigation. Reasonable notice must first be given in writing by the party or his attorney proposing to take such deposition to the opposite party or his attorney of record, as either may be nearest, which notice shall state the name of the witness and the time and place of the taking of his deposition. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose, and to produce documentary evidence, in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence before the Commission, as hereinbefore provided.

"(f) Every person deposing as herein provided shall be cautioned and sworn (or affirm, if he so request) to testify the whole truth, and shall be carefully examined. His testimony shall be reduced to writing by the magistrate taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall, after it has been reduced to writing, be subscribed by the deponent.

"(g) If a witness whose testimony may be desired to be taken by deposition be in a foreign country, the deposition may be taken before an officer or person designated by the Commission, or agreed upon by the parties by stipulation in writing to be filed with the Commission. All depositions must be promptly filed with the Commission.

"(h) Witnesses whose depositions are taken as authorized in this act, and the magistrate or other officer taking the same, shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like services in the courts of the United States.

"(i) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, schedules of charges, contracts, agreements, and documents before the Commission, or in obedience to the subpena of the Commission, whether such subpena be signed or issued by one or more commissioners, or in any cause or proceeding, criminal or otherwise, based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this act, or of any amendments thereto, on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that any individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"(j) Any person who shall neglect or refuse to attend and testify, or to answer any lawful inquiry, or to produce books, papers, schedules of charges, contracts, agreements, and documents, if in his power to do so, in obedience to the subpena or lawful requirement of the Commission, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof by a court of competent jurisdiction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"USE OF JOINT BOARDS—COOPERATION WITH STATE COMMISSIONS

"SEC. 410. (a) The Commission may refer any matter arising in the administration of this act to a joint board to be composed of a member, or of an equal number of members, as determined by the Commission, from each of the States in which the wire or radio communication affected by or involved in the proceeding takes place or is proposed, and any such board shall be vested with the same powers and be subject to the same duties and liabilities as in the case of a member of the Commission when designated by the Commission to hold a hearing as hereinbefore authorized. The action of a joint board shall have such force and effect and its proceedings shall be conducted in such manner as the Commission shall by regulations prescribe. The joint board member or members for each State shall be nominated by the State commission of the State or by the Governor if there is no State commission, and appointed by the Federal Communications Commission. The Commission shall have discretion to reject any nominee. Joint board members shall receive such allowances for expenses as the Commission shall provide.

"(b) The Commission may confer with any State commission having regulatory jurisdiction with respect to carriers, regarding the relationship between rate structures, accounts, charges, practices, classifications, and regulations of carriers subject to the jurisdiction of such State commission and of the Commission; and the Commission is authorized under such rules and regulations as it shall prescribe to hold joint hearings with any State commission in connection with any matter with respect to which the Commission is authorized to act. The Commission is authorized in the administration of this act to avail itself of such cooperation, services, records, and facilities as may be afforded by any State commission.

"JOINDER OF PARTIES

"SEC. 411. (a) In any proceeding for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, whether such proceeding be instituted before the Commission or be begun originally in any district court of the United States, it shall be lawful to include as parties, in addition to the carrier, all persons interested in or affected by the charge, regulation, or practice under consideration, and inquiries, investigations, orders, and decrees may be made with reference to and against such additional parties in the same manner, to the same extent, and subject to the same provisions as are or shall be authorized by law with respect to carriers.

"(b) In any suit for the enforcement of an order for the payment of money all parties in whose favor the Commission may have made an award for damages by a single order may be joined as plaintiffs, and all of the carriers parties to such order awarding such damages may be joined as defendants, and such suit may be maintained by such joint plaintiffs and against such joint defendants in any district where any one of such joint plaintiffs could maintain such suit against any one of such joint defendants; and service of process against any one of such defendants as may not be found in the district where the suit is brought may be made in any district where such defendant carrier has its principal operating office. In case of such joint suit, the recovery, if any, may be by judgment in favor of any one of such plaintiffs, against the defendant found to be liable to such plaintiff.

"DOCUMENTS FILED TO BE PUBLIC RECORDS—USE IN PROCEEDINGS

"SEC. 412. The copies of schedules of charges, classifications, and of all contracts, agreements, and arrangements between common carriers filed with the Commission as herein provided, and the statistics, tables, and figures contained in the annual or other reports of carriers and other persons made to the Commission as required under the provisions of this act shall be preserved as public records in the custody of the secretary of the Commission, and shall be received as prima facie evidence of what they purport to be for the purpose of investigations by the Commission and in all judicial proceedings; and copies of and extracts from any of said schedules, classifications, contracts, agreements, arrangements, or reports, made public records as aforesaid, certified by the secretary, under the Commission's seal, shall be received in evidence with like effect as the originals: Provided, That the Commission may, if the public interest will be served thereby, keep confidential any contract, agreement, or arrangement relating to foreign wire or radio communication when the publication of such contract, agreement, or arrangement would place American communication companies at a disadvantage in meeting the competition of foreign communication companies.

"DESIGNATION OF AGENT FOR SERVICE

"SEC. 413. It shall be the duty of every carrier subject to this act, within 60 days after the taking effect of this act, to designate in writing an agent in the District of Columbia, upon whom service of all notices and process and all orders, decisions, and requirements of the Commission may be made for and on behalf of said carrier in any proceeding or suit pending before the Commission, and to file such designation in the office of the secretary of the Commission, which designation may from time to time be changed by like writing similarly filed; and thereupon service of all notices and process and orders, decisions, and requirements of the Commission may be made upon such carrier by leaving a copy thereof with such designated agent at his office or usual place of residence in the District of Columbia, with like effect as if made personally upon such carrier, and in default of such designation of such agent, service of any notice or other process in any proceeding before said Commission, or of any order, decision, or requirement of the Commission, may be made by posting such notice, process, order, requirement, or decision in the office of the secretary of the Commission.

"REMEDIES IN THIS ACT NOT EXCLUSIVE

"SEC. 414. Nothing in this act contained shall in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute, but the provisions of this act are in addition to such remedies.

"LIMITATIONS AS TO ACTIONS

"SEC. 415. (a) All actions at law by carriers for recovery of their lawful charges, or any part thereof, shall be begun within 1 year from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after.

"(b) All complaints against carriers for the recovery of damages not based on overcharges shall be filed with the Commission within 1 year from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after, subject to subsection (d) of this section.

"(c) For recovery of overcharges action at law shall be begun or complaint filed with the Commission against carriers within 1 year from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after, subject to subsection (d) of this section, except that if claim for the overcharge has been presented in writing to the carrier within the 1-year period of limitation said period shall be extended to include 1 year from the time notice in writing is given by the carrier to the claimant of disallowance of the claim, or any part or parts thereof, specified in the notice.

"(d) If on or before expiration of the period of limitation in subsection (b) or (c) a carrier begins action under subsection (a) for recovery of lawful charges in respect of the same service, or, without beginning action, collects charges in respect of that service, said period of limitation shall be extended to include 90 days from the time such action is begun or such charges are collected by the carrier.

"(e) The cause of action in respect of the transmission of a message shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to accrue upon delivery or tender of delivery thereof by the carrier, and not after.

"(f) A petition for the enforcement of an order of the Commission for the payment of money shall be filed in the district court or the State court within 1 year from the date of the order, and not after.

"(g) The term 'overcharges' as used in this section shall be deemed to mean charges for services in excess of those applicable thereto under the schedules of charges lawfully on file with the Commission.

"PROVISIONS RELATING TO ORDERS

"SEC. 416. (a) Every order of the Commission shall be forthwith served upon the designated agent of the carrier in the city of Washington or in such other manner as may be provided by law.

"(b) Except as otherwise provided in this act, the Commission is hereby authorized to suspend or modify its orders upon such notice and in such manner as it shall deem proper.

"(c) It shall be the duty of every person, its agents and employees, and any receiver or trustee thereof, to observe and comply with such orders so long as the same shall remain in effect.

"TITLE V—PENAL PROVISIONS—FORFEITURES

"GENERAL PENALTY

"SECTION 501. Any person who willfully and knowingly does or causes or suffers to be done any act, matter, or thing, in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who willfully and knowingly omits or fails to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or willfully and knowingly causes or suffers such omission or failure, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for such offense, for which no penalty (other than a forfeiture) is provided herein, by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for a term of not more than 2 years, or both.

"VIOLATIONS OF RULES, REGULATIONS, ETC.

"SEC. 502. Any person who willfully and knowingly violates any rule, regulation, restriction, or condition made or imposed by the Commission under authority of this act, or any rule, regulation, restriction, or condition made or imposed by any international radio or wire communications treaty or convention, or regulations annexed thereto, to which the United States is or may hereafter become a party, shall, in addition to any other penalties provided by law, be punished, upon conviction thereof, by a fine of not more than $500 for each and every day during which such offense occurs.

"FORFEITURE IN CASES OF REBATES AND OFFSETS

"SEC. 503. Any person who shall deliver messages for interstate or foreign transmission to any carrier or for whom as sender or receiver, any such carrier shall transmit any interstate or foreign wire or radio communication, who shall knowingly by employee, agent, officer, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, by or through any means or device whatsoever, receive or accept from such common carrier any sum of money or any other valuable consideration as a rebate or offset against the regular charges for transmission of such messages as fixed by the schedules of charges provided for in this act, shall in addition to any other penalty provided by this act forfeit to the United States a sum of money three times the amount of money so received or accepted and three times the value of any other consideration so received or accepted, to be ascertained by the trial court; and in the trial of said action all such rebates or other considerations so received or accepted for a period of 6 years prior to the commencement of the action, may be included therein, and the amount recovered shall be three times the total amount of money, or three times the total value of such consideration, so received or accepted, or both, as the case may be.

"PROVISIONS RELATING TO FORFEITURES

"SEC. 504. The forfeitures provided for in this act shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States, and shall be recoverable in a civil suit in the name of the United States, brought in the district where the person or carrier has its principal operating office, or in any district through which the line or system of the carrier runs. Such forfeitures shall be in addition to any other general or specific penalties herein provided. It shall be the duty of the various district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, to prosecute for the recovery of forfeitures under this act. The costs and expenses of such prosecutions shall be paid from the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

"VENUE OF OFFENSES

"SEC. 505. The trial of any offense under this act shall be in the district in which it is committed; or if the offense is committed upon the high seas, or out of the jurisdiction of any particular State or district, the trial shall be in the district where the offender may be found or into which he shall be first brought. Whenever the offense is begun in one jurisdiction and completed in another it may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in either jurisdiction in the same manner as if the offense had been actually and wholly committed therein.

"TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

"TRANSFER TO COMMISSION OF DUTIES, POWERS, AND FUNCTIONS UNDER EXISTING LAW

"SEC. 601. (a) All duties, powers, and functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the act of August 7, 1888 (25 Stat. 382), relating to operation of telegraph lines by railroad and telegraph companies granted Government aid in the construction of their lines, are hereby imposed upon and vested in the Commission: Provided, That such transfer of duties, powers, and functions shall not be construed to affect the duties, powers, functions, or jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission under, or to interfere with or prevent the enforcement of, the Interstate Commerce Act and all acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto.

"(b) All duties, powers, and functions of the Postmaster General with respect to telegraph companies and telegraph lines under any existing provision of law are hereby imposed upon and vested in the Commission.

"REPEALS AND AMENDMENTS

"SEC. 602. (a) The Radio Act of 1927, as amended, is hereby repealed.

"(b) The provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, insofar as they relate to communication by wire or wireless, or to telegraph, telephone, or cable companies operating by wire or wireless, except the last provision of section 1 (5) and the provisions of section 1 (7) are hereby repealed.

"(c) The last sentence of section 2 of the act entitled 'An act relating to the landing and operation of submarine cables in the United States', approved May 27, 1921, is amended to read as follows: 'Nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the power and jurisdiction of the Federal Communications Commission with respect to the transmission of messages.'

"(d) The first paragraph of section 11 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes', approved October 15, 1914, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 11. That authority to enforce compliance with sections 2, 3, 7, and 8 of this act by the persons respectively subject thereto is hereby vested: In the Interstate Commerce Commission where applicable to common carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended; in the Federal Communications Commission where applicable to common carriers engaged in wire or radio communication or radio transmission of energy; in the Federal Reserve Board where applicable to banks, banking associations, and trust companies; and in the Federal Trade Commission where applicable to all other character of commerce, to be exercised as follows: '.

"TRANSFER OF EMPLOYEES, RECORDS, PROPERTY, AND APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 603. (a) All officers and employees of the Federal Radio Commission (except the members thereof, whose offices are hereby abolished) whose services in the judgment of the Commission are necessary to the efficient operation of the Commission are hereby transferred to the Commission, without change in classification or compensation; except that the Commission may provide for the adjustment of such classification or compensation to conform to the duties to which such officers and employees may be assigned.

"(b) There are hereby transferred to the jurisdiction and control of the Commission (1) all records and property (including office furniture and equipment, and including monitoring radio stations) under the jurisdiction of the Federal Radio Commission, and (2) all records under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the Postmaster General relating to the duties, powers, and functions imposed upon and vested in the Commission by this act.

"(c) All appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations available for expenditure by the Federal Radio Commission shall be available for expenditure by the Commission for any and all objects of expenditure authorized by this act in the discretion of the Commission, without regard to the requirement of apportionment under the Antideficiency Act of February 27, 1906.

"EFFECT OF TRANSFERS, REPEALS, AND AMENDMENTS

"SEC. 604. (a) All orders, determinations, rules, regulations, permits, contracts, licenses, and privileges which have been issued, made, or granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Radio Commission, or the Postmaster General, under any provision of law repealed or amended by this act or in the exercise of duties, powers, or functions transferred to the Commission by this act, and which are in effect at the time this section takes effect, shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, or repealed by the Commission or by operation of law.

"(b) Any proceeding, hearing, or investigation commenced or pending before the Federal Radio Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, or the Postmaster General, at the time of the organization of the Commission, shall be continued by the Commission in the same manner as though originally commenced before the Commission, if such proceeding, hearing, or investigation (1) involves the administration of duties, powers, and functions transferred to the Commission by this act, or (2) involves the exercise of jurisdiction similar to that granted to the Commission under the provisions of this act.

"(c) All records transferred to the Commission under this act shall be available for use by the Commission to the same extent as if such records were originally records of the Commission. All final valuations and determinations of depreciation charges by the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to common carriers engaged in radio or wire communication, and all orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to such valuations and determinations, shall have the same force and effect as though made by the Commission under this act.

"(d) The provisions of this Act shall not affect suits commenced prior to the date of the organization of the Commission; and all such suits shall be continued, proceedings therein had, appeals therein taken and judgments therein rendered, in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed. No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against any agency or officer of the United States, in relation to the discharge of official duties, shall abate by reason of any transfer of authority, power, and duties from such agency or officer to the Commission under the provisions of this act, but the court, upon motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after such transfer, showing the necessity for a survival of such suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, may allow the same to be maintained by or against the Commission.

"UNAUTHORIZED PUBLICATION OF COMMUNICATIONS

"SEC. 605. No person receiving or assisting in receiving, or transmitting, or assisting in transmitting, any interstate or foreign communication by wire or radio shall divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purpose, effect, or meaning thereof, except through authorized channels of transmission or reception, to any person other than the addressee, his agent, or attorney, or to a person employed or authorized to forward such communication to its destination, or to proper accounting or distributing officers of the various communicating centers over which the communication may be passed, or to the master of a ship under whom he is serving, or in response to a subpena issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, or on demand of other lawful authority; and no person not being authorized by the sender shall intercept any communication and divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning of such intercepted communication to any person; and no person not being entitled thereto shall receive or assist in receiving any interstate or foreign communication by wire or radio and use the same or any information therein contained for his own benefit or for the benefit of another not entitled thereto; and no person having received such intercepted communication or having become acquainted with the contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning of the same or any part thereof, knowing that such information was so obtained, shall divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning of the same or any part thereof, or use the same or any information therein contained for his own benefit or for the benefit of another not entitled thereto: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the receiving, divulging, publishing, or utilizing the contents of any radio communication broadcast, or transmitted by amateurs or others for the use of the general public, or relating to ships in distress.

"WAR EMERGENCY—POWERS OF PRESIDENT

"SEC. 606. (a) During the continuance of a war in which the United States is engaged, the President is authorized, if he finds it necessary for the national defense and security, to direct that such communications as in his judgment may be essential to the national defense and security shall have preference or priority with any carrier subject to this act. He may give these directions at and for such times as he may determine, and may modify, change, suspend, or annul them and for any such purpose he is hereby authorized to issue orders directly, or through such person or persons as he designates for the purpose, or through the Commission. Any carrier complying with any such order or direction for preference or priority herein authorized shall be exempt from any and all provisions in existing law imposing civil or criminal penalties, obligations, or liabilities upon carriers by reason of giving preference or priority in compliance with such order or direction.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person during any war in which the United States is engaged to knowingly or willfully, by physical force or intimidation by threats of physical force, obstruct or retard or aid in obstructing or retarding interstate or foreign communication by radio or wire.

The President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment the public interest requires, to employ the armed forces of the United States to prevent any such obstruction or retardation of communication: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to repeal, modify, or affect either section 6 or section 20 of an act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes', approved October 15, 1914.

"(c) Upon proclamation by the President that there exists war or a threat of war of a state of public peril or disaster or other national emergency, or in order to preserve the neutrality of the United States, the President may suspend or amend, for such time as he may see fit, the rules and regulations applicable to any or all stations within the jurisdiction of the United States as prescribed by the Commission, and may cause the closing of any station for radio communication and the removal therefrom of its apparatus and equipment, or he may authorize the use or control of any such station and/or its apparatus and equipment by any department of the Government under such regulations as he may prescribe, upon just compensation to the owners.

"(d) The President shall ascertain the just compensation for such use or control and certify the amount ascertained to Congress for appropriation and payment to the person entitled thereto. If the amount so certified is unsatisfactory to the person entitled thereto, such person shall be paid only 75 percent of the amount and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as added to such payment of 75 percent will make such amount as will be just compensation for the use and control. Such suit shall be brought in the manner provided by paragraph 20 of section 24, or by section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

"EFFECTIVE DATE OF ACT

"SEC. 607. This act shall take effect upon the organization of the Commission, except that this section and sections 1 and 4 shall take effect on July 1, 1934. The Commission shall be deemed to be organized upon such date as four members of the Commission have taken office.

"SEPARABILITY CLAUSE

"SEC. 608. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

"SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 609. This act may be cited as the 'Communications Act of 1934.'"

And the House agree to the same.

That the title of the bill be amended to read as follows: "An act to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communication by wire or radio, and for other purposes."

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3285) to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communications by wire or radio, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment strikes out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the House amendment with an amendment which is a substitute for both the Senate bill and the House amendment. The differences between the House amendment and the substitute agreed upon by the conferees are noted in the following outline, except for incidental changes made necessary by reason of the action of the conferees and minor and clarifying changes.

The Senate bill provides in section 2 for the application of the act to the licensing and regulating of all radio stations as provided in the act. The House amendment omits this provision. In view of the action taken by the conferees in respect of title III of the bill, the substitute retains the provision of the Senate bill.

Section 3 (e) of the Senate bill defines "interstate communication" and "interstate transmission." The House amendment contains a corresponding definition but differs from the Senate bill in certain respects. The Senate bill includes communication or transmission from or to the United States to or from the Philippine Islands or the Canal Zone only insofar as it takes place within the United States. The House amendment includes such communication or transmission in its entirety. The Senate bill excludes wire communication between points within the same State which passes through another State or a foreign country, when such communication is regulated by a State commission. The House amendment includes communication or transmission between points within the same State which passes through another State, but does not include such communication or transmission which passes through a foreign country, irrespective of regulation by a State commission. The Senate bill does not include communication or transmission wholly within the same Territory or possession or the District of Columbia. The House amendment includes such communication and transmission, except in the case of the Philippine Islands and the Canal Zone. The substitute adopts the provisions of the Senate definition.

The Senate amendment defines "common carrier" or "carrier" to mean any person engaged as a common carrier for hire in interstate or foreign communication by wire or radio or in interstate or foreign radio transmission of energy. In the House amendment the terms are defined to mean any person engaged in communication by wire or radio as a common carrier for hire. The substitute (sec. 3 (h)) adopts the Senate provision. It is to be noted that the definition does not include any person if not a common carrier in the ordinary sense of the term, and therefore does not include press associations or other organizations engaged in the business of collecting and distributing news services which may refuse to furnish to any person service which they are capable of furnishing, and may furnish service under varying arrangements, establishing the service to be rendered, the terms under which rendered, and the charges therefor.

The Senate bill provides for a Federal Communications Commission of five commissions with terms of 6 years. The House amendment provides for 7 commissioners with terms of 7 years. The substitute adopts the House provision.

Section 4 (f) of the Senate bill provides for appointment and salaries of officers and employees of the Commission. The House amendment contains a somewhat similar provision, which is retained in the substitute, except that it reduces the maxima of the salaries of the chief counsel and chief engineer from $10,000 to $9,000 per annum and of the directors of divisions from $8,000 to $7,500 per annum, following the Senate bill in both cases. It also fixes the salary of the secretary of the Commission at a maximum of $7,500, as provided in the Senate bill.

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment provide for publication of the Commission's records and proceedings, but the Senate bill authorizes the Commission to withhold publication of such records or proceedings as contain secret information affecting the national defense. The House amendment omits this authorization. The substitute adopts the Senate provision.

The Senate bill provides for two designated divisions of the Commission and fixes the jurisdiction of these divisions and of the Commission over the various subjects of the bill. The House amendment follows the provisions of section 17 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and provides that the Commission may fix its own divisions (not in excess of three) and make its own assignment of work thereto, and may assign certain of its work to individual commissioners or boards of employees. The substitute adopts the House provision.

Title II of the Senate bill and of the House amendment relate to the regulation of common carriers. The only substantial differences between the House amendment and the substitute are found in sections 214 and 220.

Section 214 of the Senate bill (requiring a certificate of public convenience and necessity for construction, operation, or extension of lines) exempts from the requirements of the section lines within a single State unless such lines constitute part of an interstate line. The House amendment qualifies the words "interstate line" by the word "additional." The substitute adopts the Senate provision. The Senate bill also exempts local, branch, or terminal lines not exceeding 10 miles in length. The House amendment omits the 10-mile limitation. The substitute restores the limitation. The House amendment adds an exemption of wires or cables added to existing pole lines or conduits or other structures constituting established routes. In view of the provision in both the Senate bill and the House amendment, under which the Commission, upon request, may authorize the supplementing of existing facilities without regard to the provisions of section 214, the substitute omits the House provision. The House amendment also excepts lines acquired under section 221 (relating to consolidation of telephone companies). The substitute retains this provision.

Section 220 (j) of the Senate bill (relating to accounts and depreciation charges) authorizes the Commission to investigate and report to Congress upon the desirability of legislation authorizing the Commission to except the carriers of any particular class or classes in any State from the requirements of the section and permitting State commissions to prescribe their own percentage rates of depreciation and systems of accounts for carriers. The House amendment (sec. 220 (h)) specifically authorizes the Commission to except carriers of any particular class or classes in any State and provides (in sec. 220 (j)) that the section shall not limit the power of the State commissions to prescribe percentage rates of depreciation or to require the keeping of accounts. The substitute adopts the House provision as to exception of particular classes of carriers and a modified provision for investigation and report to Congress as to the need for defining or harmonizing Federal and State authority in respect of other matters to which the section relates.

The Senate bill abolishes the Federal Radio Commission and repeals the Radio Act of 1927, but in effect reenacts it in title III, eliminating certain matter no longer effective, and adding certain provisions, most of which are taken from H.R. 7716, Seventy-second Congress, which passed both Houses but was pocket vetoed. Title III of the House bill abolishes the Federal Radio Commission but transfers its functions under the Radio Act of 1927 to the new Commission. Title III of the substitute adopts the provisions of the Senate bill, except that most of the changes from existing law which were not contained in H.R. 7716 have been omitted.

The provisions of the Radio Act of 1927 relating to judicial review have been included in title IV, with certain changes, and those for taking over stations in time of war are in title VI, and so far as they change existing law will be explained below. The other differences between the substitute and the Radio Act of 1927, except where the changes are insubstantial or are for purposes of clarification or of elimination of temporary provisions which no longer serve any purpose, are listed below.

Sections 301, 302 (a), 304, 306, 309, 313, 314, 315, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325 (a), 326, 327, 328, and 329 are, respectively, substantially identical with the following sections of the Radio Act of 1927: 1, 2, 5, 8, 11, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 35, and 36.

Section 302 (a) follows closely section 2 of the Radio Act, Section 302 (b) follows H.R. 7716 in removing the Territories and possessions from the zones for which equality of broadcasting facilities is prescribed.

Section 303 combines sections 4 and 5 of the Radio Act with the additions hereafter noted. Section 303 (f) adds the requirement of a public hearing in cases involving changes in the frequency, authorized power, or times of operation of any station. This was contained in H.R. 7716. Section 303 (g) directs the Commission to study new uses for radio and to encourage the more effective use of radio in the public interest. Section 303 (q) requires the painting or illumination of radio towers which constitute a menace to air navigation. This was contained in H.R. 7716.

Section 305 is copied from section 6 of the Radio Act, except that the provision for taking over a station in time of war is transferred to section 606 (c).

Section 307 (a) and (b) through the first proviso are taken from section 9 of the Radio Act, as amended. The second proviso authorizing additional licenses for stations not exceeding 100 watts of power when they will not interfere with the efficient service of other licensed stations, was taken from H.R. 7716. This proviso is substituted for that in the Senate bill which would permit additional noninterfering stations regardless of power.

Section 307 (c) directs the Commission to study the proposal that Congress by statute allocate fixed percentages of broadcasting facilities to particular types of nonprofit programs or to persons identified with particular kinds of nonprofit activities.

Section 307 (d) follows part of section 9 of the Radio Act with the addition taken from H.R. 7716, that the Commission in granting an application for the renewal of a license shall be governed by the same considerations which affect the granting of original applications. The provision of the Senate bill which reduces the maximum terms of broadcasting licenses from 3 years to 1 year, and the maximum for other licenses from 5 years to 3 years, is not included.

The substitute bill agreed to in conference omits the paragraph of the Senate bill no. 307 (f), which carried a new provision requiring the Commission to distribute broadcasting licenses so that no one licensee or organization of licensees should exercise dominant control over the broadcasting facilities of any locality.

Section 308 follows section 10 of the Radio Act as proposed to be modified by H.R. 7716, which added the requirement that modifications and renewals of licenses may be granted only upon written application. This is the present practice of the Radio Commission. The two provisos in subsection (a) permit the Commission to issue temporary licenses for stations on vessels or aircraft in cases of emergency.

Section 310 (a), dealing with limitation on foreign holdings and transfer of licenses, is adapted from section 12 of the Radio Act as proposed to be modified by H.R. 7716, with additional limitations as to foreign ownership.

Section 12 of the Radio Act provides that radio station licenses may not be granted or transferred to any corporation of which any officer or director is an alien or of which more than one-fifth of the capital stock may be voted by aliens, their representatives, a foreign government, or a company organized under the laws of a foreign country. The Senate bill changes this provision by making the restriction apply also where one-fifth of the capital stock is owned of record by the designated persons and altering the words "may be voted" to "is voted." The substitute (sec. 310 (a) (4)) adopts the language of the Senate bill.

Section 12 of the Radio Act, restricting alien control of radio station licenses does not apply to holding companies.

The Senate bill, adapted from H.R. 7716, provides that such licenses might not be granted to or held by any corporation controlled by another corporation of which any officer or more than one-fourth of the directors are aliens or of which more than one-fourth of the capital stock is owned of record or voted, after June 1, 1935, by aliens, their representatives, a foreign government, or a corporation organized under the laws of a foreign country. The substitute (sec. 310 (a) (5)) adopts the Senate provision with an addition stating that the license may not be granted to or held by such a corporatoin if the Commission finds that the public interest will be served by the refusal or the revocation of such license.

Section 310 (b) is substantially section 12 of the Radio Act modified as proposed by H.R. 7716. The section relates to transfer of radio licenses. As in H.R. 7716 the authority to approve or disapprove such transfers is extended to cover transfer of stock control in a licensee corporation. The present law is also modified to require the Commission to secure full information before reaching decision on such transfers.

Section 311 is based upon section 13 of the Radio Act, modified to leave the Commission discretion in refusing licenses where the applicant has been adjudged by a court to be guilty of a violation of the antitrust laws but where the judgment has not extended to the revocation of existing licenses.

Section 312 (a) is based on section 14 of the Radio Act modified as proposed by H.R. 7716 to reduce from 30 to 15 days the period within which a licensee may take exception to the Commission's action in revoking his license. The Senate provision authorizing the Commission to suspend licenses is omitted from the substitute.

Section 312 (b) amplifies the Radio Act along the lines proposed by H.R. 7716 by providing for the modification of station licenses and construction permits in cases where the Commission finds such action in the public interest.

Section 315 on facilities for candidates for public office is the same as section 18 of the Radio Act. The Senate provisions, which would have modified and extended the present law, is not included in the substitute.

Section 316 provides that no person shall broadcast by means of any radio station any information concerning any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance. This is not in the present law, but was included in H.R. 7716.

Section 325 (b) and (c) are designed to give the Commission control of all studios or apparatus in the United States used in connection with a broadcasting station in a foreign country for the purpose of furnishing programs to be transmitted back into the United States. The House Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries has, during the present session, favorably reported a bill, S. 2660, containing provisions similar to these two paragraphs.

Section 326 prohibits censorship, and is the same as section 29 of the Radio Act.

The Senate bill—section 402—for the purposes of cases involving carriers, carries forward the existing method of review of orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, in the main, for "radio" cases carries forward the existing method of review of orders of the Federal Radio Commission; but in "radio" cases involving affirmative orders of the Commission entered in proceedings initiated upon the Commission's own motion in revocation, modification, and suspension matters, review is to be by the method applicable in the case of orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The House provision contains a similar provision as to cases involving carriers, but leaves the present section 16 of the Radio Act of 1927, as amended, applicable in all radio cases. The substitute adopts the Senate provision.

Section 405 of the Senate bill, relating to rehearings by the Commission, contained a proviso limiting to 20 days the time within which applications for rehearing of radio cases under title III may be made and providing that such application may be made by any party or any person aggrieved or whose interests are adversely affected. The House amendment omitted the proviso. The substitute adopts the provision of the Senate bill.

Section 410 (a) of the Senate bill provides for joint boards of members of commissions of States affected by or involved in a particular proceeding, to which the Commission may refer such proceedings. The House amendment omits this provision. It is retained in the substitute.

The House amendment contains a provision, similar to one contained in the Senate bill, transferring all appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations available for expenditure by the Federal Radio Commission to the Federal Communications Commission. The substitute retains the House provision modified to insure that such appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations will be available for expenditure by the Federal Communications Commission for any and all objects of expenditure authorized by the bill, in the discretion of the Commission and without regard to the requirement of apportionment of the Anti-Deficiency Act of February 27, 1906.

Section 606 (c) and (d) of the Senate bill authorizes the President in time of war or public peril to take over wire and radio offices and stations and to give just compensation therefor to persons entitled thereto. The House amendment omits these provisions. The substitute conforms to the House bill by adopting the present provisions of sections 6 and 7 of the Radio Act of 1927, as amended, which do not apply to wire communications.

The committee of conference recommends that the title of the bill read as follows: "An act to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communication by wire or radio, and for other purposes."

SAM RAYBURN,
CLARENCE LEA,
CARL E. MAPES,
CHAS. A. WOLVERTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, it is not customary for me to ask for the rejection of a conference report, I do so very reluctantly on this occasion, particularly, as this report comes from a committee presided over by such a distinguished friend of mine as the gentleman from Texas; but I believe the situation that presents itself on this conference report is one that deserves serious consideration.

The Senate has undertaken to repeal the Radio Act of 1927, which was framed with the greatest care, most meticulous attention being given to every word and every expression that is contained in that act. They do the useless or futile thing, so far as radio is concerned, of repealing the law and then reenacting the same law.

Now, the question might arise, What difference does it make? It may make a most material difference in a new set-up.

Under the Radio Act of 1927 there have been handed down judicial decisions, there have been interpretations, and there has been a coordinating of radio. If we repeal this act, with a new set-up, without a study by the Communications Commission, there is no man on this floor who can tell what the effect of this repeal is.

In order to secure the continuance of this act you have to vote down this conference report.

Has the matter been considered by a committee of this House? I mean no reflection on the distinguished gentlemen of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, but they conceded themselves upon this floor 1 week ago that they knew nothing about radio, and they said that they believed the wise thing to do—and it was a wise judgment on their part—was to set up a communications commission which could study the law and find out just what ought to be done. They thought it wise then to continue the law as it is at the present time, simply transferring the powers and functions of the Radio Commission to the communications commission; but under the dulcet persuasion of the Senate committee, which is the only committee that has considered this particular legislation, and surrendering to the charm which has been exercised by the distinguished Members of the Senate who are on that committee, our friends, who are usually so very persistent, found themselves writing into the law provisions that they, themselves, had conceded they knew nothing about.

I submit that in as delicate an art as the radio art, and with its effect upon the public and the public interests involved, the conference report ought to be rejected. The result would simply be that the committee would go back, these new provisions would be struck out out, and the bill would be returned as it was written by the House. The bill then would set up the communications commission and permit the communications commission to study this most delicate art. That commission would report to what extent the Radio Act of 1927 should be amended.

I mean no reflection upon my friends on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

They did not have the time to go to the bottom of this matter; they had most important matters to consider. Radio has always been in the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries, and, as I said some time ago, why should this one ewe lamb be taken away? Leave it where it can be studied by that committee; and, gentlemen, do not repeal an act that may materially affect your interests.

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, we have a situation where we are passing most important legislation on the say-so of the Senate which has never been considered by the House of Representatives. We have been called rubber stamps of the Government, but we have never passed 20 pages of a radio act, repealing the existing radio law on the recommendation of the Senate without a single Member of the House who knows anything about radio giving the slightest consideration to it. Why should we be errand boys for the Senate Committee on Commerce to wipe out the old Radio Act and enact a brandnew radio act, a very important measure, without the slightest consideration by any committee or any individual in the House of Representatives.

When this bill was introduced here there was not a change made in the radio law. It merely created a commission and vested the control and administration of the radio law in a communications commission instead of the Radio Commission.

At that time the question was raised whether the jurisdiction over that bill, the communications bill, belonged to the Radio Committee or the Interstate Commerce Committee. It was asserted and emphasized by the Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that there was no change in the bill with respect to the substantive radio law, and that seemed to be the compelling reason why the bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce rather than to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

Now, the conferees have written into the bill at the behest of the Senate a radio law consisting of 20 pages—page 20 to page 38 in the conference report.

Why is the House asked to accept the Senate say-so in this radio legislation? Why should not the House in the preservation of its dignity send back the conference report and eliminate the substantive radio act; as my chairman from Virginia says, let the Communications Committee study the law and recommend changes in the law that are desirable to be made, and let the House committee having jurisdiction consider that question and report with respect thereto and, after debate on the floor, enact the law as the House in its dignity ought to do? [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this legislation comes as the result of a message by the President to the Congress. Simultaneously with the delivery of that message there was delivered to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of the House, and a similar committee of the Senate, a draft of the particular legislation which was recommended in the message. The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House had never had jurisdiction over the question of radio. The Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries Committee had, and has grown up with the growth of radio in the United States. Under this direction in the message of the President, jurisdiction for the consideration of this message was transferred to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, who were engaged to the full limit in the consideration of other measures that were being forced through the House under great pressure—the securities bill, railroad legislation, and stock-exchange control legislation. It is only fair to say that which we all know, and the members of that committee know, that they did not have time to fairly consider this bill. Apparently it was not thought necessary that we should carefully consider it, because it was generally understood that this bill was going to be written and perfected in conference, which has been done; and notwithstanding the assurance of the chairman, Mr. RAYBURN, that was given to this House, that there was nothing in the House bill that affected the present radio law—and by that statement he was giving the House assurances that nothing in this bill was to change existing law——

Mr. RAYBURN. O Mr. Speaker, the gentleman does not undertake to say that I said there would not be anything in the conference report.

Mr. MCFADDEN. No; I did not say that, but the gentleman was in close enough touch with this general situation to know in advance practically what was to be done in conference. So here we find ourselves in the predicament of considering one of the most important bills that could possibly come before this House, without any consideration on the part of the House, putting it through here in a few minutes. It is a fair example of what we may expect under the administration of this communications law, where we have consolidated all matters of communication in one commission. That applies to telephone and telegraph, radio, national and international, one of the most important parts of government. I say to the House that which I believe: That this bill was written, or at least the controlling and important part of it, in conformity with the wishes of the people who control this industry, and propose to control it as a monopoly, to control public sentiment in the United States, to control it now immediately for political purposes as part of the administration in control, and eventually use it as an international control for the dissemination of information leading toward the destruction of constitutional government in the United States. The passage of this bill is quite in harmony with the regulation that is taking place in Canada, with the regulations of communications that is taking place in Great Britain. It is all tied in together. We have as much of an international finger in this as we have in our financial affairs. I point out to the Membership of the House that this bill is being jammed through under the authority of the administration for these very purposes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to detain the House at all, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] as usual has his alarmer at work. In answer to his statement about this bill being put through under the spur of the administration, I remind him that the minority members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, who I think are as wise and patriotic as he or any other Member of the House, signed this report, and that the report is a unanimous report from that conference committee. Also, practically every change in the Radio Act made by this bill was passed in a bill through both the House and the Senate, which went to President Hoover and there met with a pocket veto. As far as jamming legislation through the House is concerned, I introduced a bill to create this commission in the early part of 1933, and the question has been up before the committee and the country ever since. This bill has been in the committee for several weeks. We took it up and had thorough hearings, we had thorough consideration of the bill that passed the House. The Senate and the House in a former Congress considered title III of this bill, and we were assured by the Senate conferees that these amendments were practically every one contained in that bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlemen yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The communications bill introduced by the gentleman or drafted by the gentleman in 1933, and the bill that was reported from the committee unanimously in this session of Congress, did not contain substantive radio legislation.

Mr. RAYBURN. No.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is what we are complaining about. We are enacting a law dictated by the chairman which we have never considered.

Mr. RAYBURN. And we claim that this legislation has already been passed by both the House and the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleague from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] and my colleague from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] in opposition to this conference report. Every Member of this House, perhaps, has in his district a radio station or several of them. Millions of dollars have been invested in those plants, and we are proposing here in this conference report to wipe out the law under which those stations have been established, or to wipe out everything that has gone heretofore and reenact it under an act which we are asked to pass here in a few minutes and which we have had no opportunity to examine. No committee of the House which has given study or thought to radio legislation has had an opportunity to consider this matter.

It seems to me it is unwise, it is unjust to our people back home, to enact legislation of such far-reaching effect in this manner. Radio stations, under the best conditions, lead a very uncertain life. The Commission has authority to take them off of the air on very short notice. I do not think we ought to place in jeopardy the investments of our people back home by enacting legislation in this manner. I think if we are going to reenact the radio law, which I think is unnecessary, it ought to be considered by the committee of this House which has jurisdiction of it, upon which committee there are Members who have given years of study to that subject.

For that reason I expect to vote against the adoption of the conference report, and I hope it will be rejected. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I see nothing unusual in this situation. Of course there are always differences between the Senate and the House to be ironed out in every conference. Otherwise, there would be no occasion for the appointment of a conference committee. The Senate bill referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, repealed, in effect, the existing radio law, and at the same time it reenacted all of the material provisions of that act.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. Has the House had an opportunity to consider what are the material provisions of that act that are repealed?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; it did when the bill was in the House. Instead of following the action of the Senate in that respect, the House did this: It left the existing law intact but established a new communications commission. It does not seem to me there was any great difference in principle in the action of the two bodies in that respect. The Senate specifically repealed the Radio Act, but reenacted it, or the pertinent part of it, in express terms. The House, instead of reenacting it, left it as it was and created this new commission.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. Does not this new bill give the right to radio companies to sell power? I see in two of these sections where it gives the radio company the right to sell and transmit power. Does the gentleman know whether the conferees ever took up that subject?

Mr. MAPES. To what language does the gentleman refer?

Mr. BLOOM. If the gentleman will turn to page 109–A.

Mr. MAPES. I should like to complete my general statement first. If the gentleman will withhold that question for a moment, I would appreciate it. I should like to complete my general statement, and then we can come back to his question.

Mr. BLOOM. I shall be pleased to do that.

Mr. MAPES. As I was saying there was not such a material difference between the action of the House and the Senate as some would be led to believe from the discussion this afternoon. In conference the Senate conferees accepted the House provision for a new commission, and the House conferees accepted the work of the Senate on this radio provision or made it the basis upon which an agreement was reached. There is nothing in this bill under the radio title of importance which has not been considered by the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries of the House of Representatives, and which has not passed both the House and Senate at different times.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. MAPES. Just let me proceed a little further, if you please.

The whole matter is set up in the report of the conference on page 47, in the paragraph at about the middle of the page:

> The Senate bill abolishes the Federal Radio Commission and repeals the Radio Act of 1927, but in effect reenacts it in title III, eliminating certain matter no longer effective and adding certain provisions, most of which are taken from H.R. 7716, Seventy-second Congress, which passed both Houses but was pocket vetoed. Title III of the House bill abolishes the Federal Radio Commission, but transfers its functions under the Radio Act of 1927 to the new commission. Title III of the substitute adopts the provisions of the Senate bill, except that most of the changes from existing law which were not contained in H.R. 7716 have been omitted.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman give the gentleman another minute so that I may ask him a question?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The statement which has just been read says it reenacts, in effect, leaving out certain matters that are no longer necessary and putting in some other general provisions. Has any Member of the House conference committee examined the old law and the new law that is proposed in order to ascertain just what differences there may be, and if they have not, has any other Member of the House who knows anything about it had that opportunity?

Mr. MAPES. Of course, the conferees went over every provision of this new matter and passed upon it, exercising their best judgment in regard to it. Our judgment may not have been as good as the judgment of the members of the Radio Committee would have been, but we were confronted with this legislation and had to exercise such judgment as we had.

Mr. LEHLBACH. How could reading a new bill give you any idea how it changed the old law that you did not know and had not read?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] has again expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, in some not distant Congress social legislation will hold first place on the calendar. I have hastily thrown together some thoughts on social legislation which reflect the experiences and observations of a good many years, the benefits of which, if any, I desire to pass on to Members of the House.

Congress lacks a social consciousness. Congress lacks a social consciousness because the country lacks it. The country lacks it because conditions did not call for it. Pioneering does not produce social consciousness.

Now the pioneer has passed from the picture. All frontiers have been taken. Development and exploitation of seemingly inexhaustible natural resources are at an end. The hard lessons of necessity, being ground in by permanently changed conditions, will inculcate a social consciousness. The day of every fellow for himself, the devil take the hindmost, is gone.

I was struck by the statement of British delegates to an American Federation of Labor convention at Cincinnati some 3 years ago, that England was 40 years ahead of the United States in social legislation. England was 40 years ahead of the United States in social legislation because it was 140 years ahead of it in the development of the conditions which make social legislation necessary.

Dubbing the rugged individualist a ragged individualist is more than a wisecrack. If I were a cartoonist, I have in mind some sketches of present-day rugged individualism. In industry the rugged individual is a man with cap in hand standing before a steel-barred gate on which is the sign "No Men Wanted." The rugged individual in agriculture may be expressed by a sheriff's sale in the barnyard. Rugged individualism in business shows the corner grocer being swept into the gutter by a chain-store janitor. The series might be completed by a birdseye view of the greatest armies in history—the armies of unemployment and relief.

The workers are clamoring for social legislation. They are clamoring for it because the great change struck them first. I have seen this movement grow. I remember when the locomotive engineer looked down upon the fireman at his side and the conductor upon the brakeman, and all of them upon the humble worker on the track, and all of these upon the miner as a man of another world, and all of these upon the underpaid, overworked white-collar man in the office and the store as a man who did not enter into their lives at all. I have seen all of this change. I have seen a growing solidarity, the development of a State of consciousness I hesitate to name, class consciousness. The rail workers no longer pick up their daily papers and note with indifference the troubles in the steel industry or the mining industry or that the garment workers or the clerks are having clashes in the struggle for economic existence. Each class has come to realize, has been made to realize, that the interest of each is the concern of all.

I remember when there was no demand for unemployment insurance and old-age pensions because there was no unemployment and no old age in industry. Now unemployment is chronic, wide-spread, and permanent, and a man at 45 is too old to get a job. Think of that, you comparatively young Members of Congress sitting here, you are too old to get a job. We have had that issue right here in Government, the throwing out of experienced workers in the prime of life to make place for boys and girls. Government is just as merciless as private industry. Only the fear of the ballot and political influence prevent it from just as ruthlessly discarding gray hair.

I had to get gray myself before I made a very important discovery. It was the discovery that there is only one kind of human nature in the world, that there is not one kind of human nature owning railroads and another kind operating them, that there is not one kind of human nature owning mines and another kind digging in them, that there is not one kind of human nature on Wall Street and another kind on Main Street. There is only one kind of human nature and it is a pretty ornery kind, a pretty selfish kind, a not too honest kind. There is an old saying that you cannot change human nature. It will do what is permitted it. You can only change systems. You can only make new rules of the game.

In America the time for change has come, the day of reckoning has come. Half the people live in want and the other half live in fear. There is no assurance for the morrow anywhere. If you lose your job, you are the crippled wolf in the pack. If your hair turns gray, you are one mouth too many at the table. Even if you are young and strong and willing, you must wait until another falls in the ranks and you can tear him from his place. It is a terrible picture, and it is called civilization.

The purely political-minded statesman is just as antiquated as the worker with gray hair. If it is too late for him to become social-minded, he must be replaced by the statesman who is social-minded. There is nothing spectacular about social legislation. It is lacking in the dramatic qualities of party politics and party issues. You are merely disturbed by the thought that it is here. You wish every man had a job at good wages, and that if he was thrown out of it he would get unemployment insurance, and that if he got too old to work at it he would be pensioned off. But you do not know what to do about it. So the days go by with the labor bills and the insurance bills and the pension bills lagging on the calendar, genuine disturbances to the congressional mind, but no action.

As sure as I stand here and utter these words, this social legislation will be first on the calendar. This has just been forecast in the greatest message which the President has thus far sent to Congress. Two short paragraphs in this great message stand out above all the utterances which have ever come from the White House bearing upon the social and economic lives of the people of this country. I quote them here:

> Among our objectives I place the security of the men, women, and children of the Nation first.
> This security for the individual and for the family concerns itself primarily with three factors: People want decent homes to live in; they want to locate them where they can engage in productive work; and they want some safeguard against misfortunes which cannot be wholly eliminated in this man-made world of ours.

The President promises a program now in preparation for presentation to the next Congress to start the Nation on the road to these great objectives. These objectives must be reached if our civilization is to be worthy of the name. If every deserving man and woman could be made secure against a sense of actual want, it would be an achievement exceeding the sum of all other achievements in government. Just the assurance that there was no poorhouse over the hill. Just the assurance that they would not some day be dependent upon the cold charity of the world. This is what social legislation means, and the statesman of tomorrow must be a man who has the mind to comprehend and the heart to execute this program.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILLFORD].

Mr. WILLFORD. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries, I have listened while this bill has been both cussed and discussed over quite a period of time. We have listened attentively to the explanation of this bill by the chairman of this great committee, the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. BLAND; we have taken the concensus of opinion of the members of this committee and have arrived at the conclusion expressed in the House bill. I believe, however, that more time should be given to a thorough study and consideration of this subject. We had before the committee men who had spent their entire time since its discovery in the study of radio.

I recognize the fact of controversial theory of freedom of speech. However, I believe that a more general version should be given this meaning; and a right to give our views in speech on radio or in the press should be more liberal, as I believe is the right that we are all entitled to and a liberty guaranteed by our Constitution in amendment no. 1, passed during the first session of Congress, September 25, 1789. My attempt is not to make a judicial basis on which to judge freedom of speech, but I wish to apply it to our modern life, in which views, regardless of their nature, should have the right to be brought before our people for their judgment and opinion. As a member of the House Radio Committee, this freedom of speech is a serious consideration. In a news periodical in which the Radio Commission intimated it was not unlawful to allow liquor advertisements to be put on the air but that if any of the stations did advertise liquor they would have difficulty in renewing their licenses, as radio stations must make application for a new one every 6 months—this, in my opinion, is unfair. The Commission, in my judgment, should either state it is unlawful for such advertising or it is lawful. I believe the individual station owners and their respective communities are much concerned over the morals of their people, and, as a matter of fact, it is the listeners and the public themselves that will primarily make the rule by which radio stations and press will follow. This happens to be just one example that has clearly struck me as not being fair. All of us, as individuals, are much concerned with the welfare of our own country and our own communities, but a small percent would attempt to bring before its listeners or readers anything with the intention of degrading our morals. I believe, however, there are subjects, regardless of nature, which should be reviewed by the people and their opinion expressed, as knowledge prevents disaster.

It is unfortunately true that the lack of knowledge on subjects leads us into despair and discouragement. We can guide ourselves only by facts and our collective opinions. The people of this country and of the world are privileged to listen to all problems by the wonderful systems of communications, radios, periodicals, and newspapers. The United States, especially, can proudly say that nearly every home in this country has either radio, newspapers, or magazines for their enjoyment and education. By this means of communication, problems of a nation can be quickly presented to them for their opinion and consideration. The press fortunately has enjoyed a broad freedom in which they can advocate or bring to the people their views in editorials and in columns, by various writers. I believe this same privilege should be extended to the radio stations of these United States without any political hatchet ready to sacrifice them if their principles are not pleasing. I do believe that regulation is necessary in all things. However, mere words written or spoken must be judged from several angles and especially from a point of view as to who makes these statements and for what purpose. The right of free speech and printed words can hardly exist without mechanical facilities, whether it is writing a letter, newspapers, publications, or radio. Therefore, I deem it necessary to liberalize the scope in which newspapers, magazines, and radio deal without political curtailment or foreign pressure brought to bear to print or broadcast the opinions expressed by individuals. It might be well to bear in mind the Virginia declaration made in 1786, which was several years before the first amendment to the Federal Constitution. The declaration was—

> The State of Virginia had no right or authority over the opinion of any source and should not be involved in any manner or interfere until actual injury had resulted.

This significant amendment has a great bearing in favor of liberalized freedom of speech and press. And if you will recall when the Federalist Party was defeated and Thomas Jefferson became President of the United States he pardoned every man convicted under the alien and sedition law, as he believed that any person had a right to his own opinion and expression. It is my opinion that the radio and newspapers are two of the greatest mediums that the human race has ever had an opportunity of availing themselves of for an interchange of opinion and expression of thought. Therefore, the radio and press should be protected from any interference for our own welfare and education. Fortunately, the value of press and radio are as informatives of the Nation, as has been demonstrated by our President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who has taken his problems, his plans for the present and future, before the people by personally talking over the radio and interviewing the press reporters who give the American people the information as to the progress of our Government.

I do not personally believe there should be any rivalry between radio broadcasting and the newspapers of this country. They are both serving the people in their respective ways, and I truly believe that they themselves realize they can work hand in hand with a profit to themselves and a direct benefit to this Nation. As a member of the Radio Committee, I am vitally interested in the future of our radio broadcasts, and with this I have in mind the relationship of the newspapers of this country. These two cannot ever be replaced by any substitute. I do not for one moment uphold any unscrupulous broadcaster or newspaperman who deliberately, by direct intent, incites trouble or maliciously attacks a principle or person without foundation of facts; but the truth should never be suppressed, as by that we can best see our mistakes. With what little knowledge and experience I have had in the world I shall always be the defender of free speech of the radio and newspaper. I do not believe that the system of the Radio Commission of a 6-month license is adequate protection or encouraging to the present-day broadcaster. I believe these licenses should be issued for 3 to 5 years and should be inviolable except where charges of malicious intent or violation of such rules that are equitable in fairness of radio broadcasters is violated. I believe radio broadcasters should have the privilege of expressing their views editorially, as newspapers do, and they should not be suppressed by quiet threats or the impossibility of renewal of licenses or any other way that is used against an unfriendly or disliked broadcaster. I am positive in my statement when I say I do not believe that our Radio Commission is responsible for even intent upon this procedure. However, I believe their rules and regulations could be changed for better protection in the interest of radio. In my opinion, the suppression of radio broadcasters as has been used in the past is not fair and equitable. About 4 years ago the Radio Commission issued licenses for 90 days only, and then, on January 1, 1931, Congress allowed the Commission to issue licenses for a 3-year limit. However, the Radio Commission only raised their license limit from 90 days to 6 months, and then every broadcaster had to make application for a renewal. The sad part of this, in my estimation, is that there has been some unscrupulous dealings in the matter of applications, as it is the privilege of any station to make application for a frequency held by another station every 6 months, which would cause an expensive hearing and would cost the broadcaster whose license had been asked for from $500 to $2,000, and if someone with malicious intent and sufficient money should make application every 6 months to someone in the industry that he did not like, it would finally wear him out. This has been done, and I shall do everything I can do to correct this evil.

The radio broadcaster today must be extremely careful in his statements, he must be generous and diplomatic, because if he should say something that was distasteful to authority, he would be censured. He also must be careful not to express any pointed opinion of his own, as the public would quickly take it up, and radio, like no other field, is either praised or condemned instantly. The speaker must present his problem in a generous and even temper. He must present the problem and let the audience be the judge. The listening public will not tolerate continuous propaganda, and even sponsors of programs have found it advisable to be very brief and make simple statements regarding their products—yet they have found that the greatest results have been in these simple statements. There is no doubt, in my mind, that discrimination has taken place when opposite views were presented. This evil should be corrected and freedom of the air should be available to anyone. We must have, if you please, rules and regulations governing our methods and procedure. Let us not, however, put strict censorship on the press or radio. Let us be generous and restrict censorship so that freedom of opinion can be expressed without punishment. It is my purpose as a member of the Radio Committee to acquaint myself with as many facts as possible and at all times work in the interest of our system of education by radio and newspaper.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. I wish someone would answer the question I asked the gentleman from Michigan with reference to the term "energy" as it is used throughout this bill, particularly on pages 109 and 111 where the specific language is carried—

Communication by wire, or radio, or in radio transmission of energy.

Now, is not energy power? And if energy be power, are owners of stations to be permitted to transmit power without further regulation?

Mr. RAYBURN. This is the definition used by people who know something about the business, and they say it must be in the act in order to make the act effective.

Mr. BLOOM. I have studied this question for 20 years; I know something about it.

Mr. RAYBURN. I shall be pleased to yield the gentleman some time if he wishes to explain it.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I am not asking the gentleman to yield me time; I am asking only that the gentleman answer the question or have someone else answer it.

Mr. RAYBURN. There must be some energy or there could not be transmission of radio programs. Certainly it does not involve the question of the transmission of power as such.

Mr. BLOOM. I understand that; but the language specifically includes the transmission of energy, and energy is power. There is no getting away from that. Now, I do not object to transmitting power, but how is that power going to be regulated and sold, where is it to come from, and where is it to go?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not think the gentleman need have any fear of this definition.

Mr. BLOOM. My question is prompted out of 20 years' experience with the subject.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we have not been able to do it in this session, but I am hopeful that the next Congress will fairly and justly reallocate wave lengths, channels, and power so that broadcasting stations may be granted to and equitably distributed throughout the various districts of the United States. Due consideration must be given to each congressional district. Under the present system the big cities have gobbled up all of the important stations, wave lengths, channels, and power.

Mr. WILLFORD. I thought Dr. Brinkley had all the power.

Mr. BLANTON. He has more than 15 congressional districts in Texas all put together. But his station is just across the Rio Grande River in Mexico.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am in sympathy with the gentleman. Will he yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Does not the gentleman realize that a revision of existing radio laws in the next Congress, desirable as it may be, will be precluded if we enact a new radio law by accepting this conference report?

Mr. BLANTON. Nothing will be precluded, and everything will be possible, if a majority of the Members of this House in the next Congress set their heads and concertedly work together, with a determined purpose to fairly and justly distribute and reallocate stations, wave lengths, channels, and power. All obstacles can be overcome, and anything they want done can be done by a determined majority.

KFYO MOVED FROM BRECKENRIDGE TO ABILENE

In an article criticizing the Radio Board, written by Arthur Sears Henning, dated May 11, 1934, he said:

KFYO, a Lubbock, Tex., broadcasting station, became involved in some unpleasantness with its radio audience. There was complaint of the character of its programs, emanating chiefly from churchmen, it appears. An application for its facilities was made by interests desiring to establish a station at Abilene, Tex.

This application was about to be granted by the Commission when Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON (Democrat), of Texas, intervened to save KFYO from being put off the air. BLANTON marshaled an array of Methodist and Baptist Church pastors to repudiate the complaints against KFYO. Mr. BLANTON asserted that the whole complaint when boiled down was that T. E. Kirksey, owner of KFYO, had permitted a singer to broadcast the Volga Boatman song.

Congressman BLANTON won out, and KFYO still is on the air. The Texas Congressman stated that he was representing Mr. Kirksey merely in the relationship of Congressman and constituent and without pay.

In his article Mr. Henning got woefully mixed up on his facts. KFYO first was located at Breckenridge, owned by T. E. Kirksey. He unfortunately made many enemies, and he was besieged from all sides in efforts to run him out of business. Being my constituent, I helped him procure the necessary permit, and he moved KFYO to Abilene. He continued to make enemies. He was harassed in and out of court. Civil suits were brought against him, some for money he did not owe. Criminal charges were preferred against him. My son, a practicing lawyer, represented Kirksey and KFYO as attorney in all their trials and tribulations, devoting much time and attention to Kirksey's legal business covering a period of several years. He has not yet received any pay. All he has to show for his hard work is an unpaid note and mortgage.

Attempt after attempt was made by several parties to take Kirksey's KFYO away from him. Charge after charge was preferred against him at Washington. On several occasions Kirksey was forced to come to Washington at great expense and bring witnesses with him to save his plant. I protected him because he was my constituent, and I could not escape the conclusion that he was being persecuted. I helped him produce sufficient evidence before the Radio Commission to convince them that the charges against him were unjust, and they refused to cancel his permit. On account of his enemies Mr. Kirksey was forced to move his KFYO station to Lubbock, which is not in my district, and it is now no longer my duty to look after him as my constituent, he now being in the Lubbock district. Two well-known Baptist ministers came all the way to Washington to testify for Kirksey, and to refute the charges made against him and his KFYO station.

ALL HONEST MEN HATE INJUSTICE

Some of the big monopoly-controlled radio stations persecute men in public life, whose actions they cannot control, just as monopoly-controlled newspapers persecute them. If it were not for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the big radio and the big press could ruin any man in Congress. They could misrepresent his every act. Were it not for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the big press would defeat and put out of Congress every man it could not control, and you would then have a Congress of serfs, irresponsive in every way to the interests of the people.

MILLARD COPE AND HIS SWEETWATER REPORTER

In my speech on April 17, 1934, I called attention to the very unfair and malicious attacks Millard Cope carried in his Sweetwater Reporter against me. Cope is a mere hireling employed to edit and run the paper. It is owned by Houston Harte, of San Angelo, and his associates. Harte is a fine fellow, a good citizen, and a first-class newspaperman, but his time is taken up in running his San Angelo Standard, a reputable daily. He sent Cope to Sweetwater, depending on his running a creditable paper, fair and just to everybody. When Houston Harte becomes convinced that Cope is allowing personal prejudice and spleen to control him, and that it is bringing the Reporter into disrepute, he is going to require a change in policy.

COPE'S UTTER DISREGARD OF TRUTH

Sweetwater friends have sent me a copy of the Reporter for Sunday, May 20, 1934, and from Cope's unreliable editorial in it. I quote:

The same Congressmen who a few weeks ago voted successfully to raise their own salaries $1,000 a year have now voted to cut down the taxes on their own incomes.

The Congressman from our own district voted for the measure, passed over the President's veto, under the title of a bill to restore compensation to disabled veterans; massing selfish interest of increasing own salaries under the label of veterans' legislation.

If Millard Cope has one spark of manhood left in his breast, he will publicly apologize to me in his paper, for broadcasting the above malicious lies, after I produce the proof that both of his statements are unquestionably false.

PRESIDENT'S RIGHT-HAND BOWER

As Chairman of the great Ways and Means Committee, which handles all revenue matters, Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON is the President's right-hand bower in the House on all taxation. I wrote him the following letter on June 6, 1934:

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 6, 1934.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON, M.C.,
Chairman Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives.

DEAR BOB: As your position makes you in my judgment the real administration leader of President Roosevelt in this Congress, I would highly appreciate it if you would kindly give me a definite answer to the following questions:

(1) Is it not a fact that the law making a 15-percent cut in the salary of Government employees, including Congressmen, expires on July 1, 1934, and that it required a new act of Congress to prevent full restoration of all salaries on that date?

(2) Is it not a fact that by the passage of the independent offices appropriation bill, over the President's veto, Congress prevented the full restoration of salaries on July 1, 1934?

(3) Is it not a fact that had Congress not passed such act over the President's veto, the salaries of all Congressmen would be fully restored on July 1, 1934, and that by passing such act over the President's veto, we prevented our salaries from being fully restored on July 1, 1934?

(4) Is it not a fact that the new revenue act you recently passed reduces the income tax that all citizens in the United States with incomes up to $20,000 pay? And that there was no discrimination made for or against any citizens in that class, but all were treated alike? Please answer the above categorically.

With kind regards, I am
Your friend,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

The following day, he wrote me this reply:

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., June 7, 1934.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.
Washington, D.C.

DEAR TOM: I answer the questions asked in your letter of June 6 as follows:

(1) Yes.
(2) Yes.
(3) Yes.
(4) Yes; the income tax is slightly lower on net incomes not in excess of $20,000, where the income is principally earned income or interest income. In the case of individuals having the greater part of their income from dividends and partially tax-exempt interest, the income tax is somewhat higher.

With my best wishes, I am
Yours very sincerely,

R. L. DOUGHTON.

In order that the answer may follow each question, and be better understood, I will now quote them in proper place:

BLANTON'S QUESTIONS AS ANSWERED BY CHAIRMAN DOUGHTON

Question 1. Is it not a fact that the law making a 15-percent cut in the salary of Government employees, including Congressmen, expires on July 1, 1934, and that it required a new act of Congress to prevent full restoration of all salaries on that date?

Answer 1. Yes.

Question 2. Is it not a fact that by the passage of the independent offices appropriation bill, over the President's veto, Congress prevented the full restoration of salaries on July 1, 1934?

Answer 2. Yes.

Question 3. Is it not a fact that had Congress not passed such act over the President's veto, the salaries of all Congressmen would be fully restored on July 1, 1934, and that by passing such act over the President's veto, we prevented our salaries from being fully restored on July 1, 1934?

Answer 3. Yes.

Question 4. Is it not a fact that the new revenue act you recently passed reduces the income tax that all citizens in the United States with incomes up to $20,000 pay? And that there was no discrimination made for or against any citizen in that class, but all were treated alike? Please answer the above categorically.

Answer 4. Yes; the income tax is slightly lower on net incomes not in excess of $20,000, where the income is principally earned income or interest income. In the case of individuals having the greater part of their income from dividends and partially tax-exempt interest, the income tax is somewhat higher.

PASSING BILL OVER VETO PREVENTED RESTORATION OF PAY CUTS

Every posted person in the United States knows that all cuts in Government salaries, both for Senators and Congressmen, as well as for the other 800,000 Government employees, expires by law July 1, 1934. To prevent the full salaries from being restored, it required a law to be passed by Congress before July 1, 1934, continuing the cuts that the President did not want restored. And, as stated by Chairman DOUGHTON, if Congress had not passed said bill over the President's veto, all salaries would be restored in full on July 1, 1934. Therefore, Millard Cope and his Sweetwater Reporter owe an apology for misrepresenting Congress.

The Washington Herald for Tuesday, October 17, 1933, carried the following front-page item:

BLANTON IS OPPOSED

Representative BLANTON, of Texas, declared his opposition to restoring full salaries. His reply follows:

"It is my belief that Government salaries have been entirely out of proportion to salaries received for like work in private positions.

"American citizens are tired of being taxed to pay Government employees $3,000 to $10,000 a year, some of whom until recently were granted 30 days' vacation on full pay, no work on Sundays, numerous holidays, and generous retirement pay."

The Washington papers and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from that day to the passage of said bill over the President's veto show that I maintained that same position in all debates and interviews, and by my vote on all issues.

By passing said bill over the President's veto we restored to the rolls 29,000 tubercular and insane veterans whose condition was undoubtedly the result of their service, and who would have been thrown upon charity had we not cared for them. And we also did justice to Spanish American veterans, their widows, and to our World War veterans, all of whom otherwise would have been done a grave injustice.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to incorporate therein some documents and excerpts I should like to include.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY].

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill contains a section the provisions of which prohibit the broadcasting of the advertisement of any lottery or information regarding the drawing or awarding of any prizes of a lottery. I am in accord with this section of the bill because I believe that radio announcers should not be permitted to advertise the lotteries of other countries which already drain the United States of hundreds of millions of dollars, sent yearly by our citizens to other nations.

Yet this section of the bill presents a situation which may be regarded as an oddity. Indeed, while it may not give rise to a conflict of laws, it does, nevertheless, appear to result in an inconsistency of laws. The newspapers are large users of the radio. They broadcast their news over the radio not only every day but many times during each day. Under this bill they may not give information in reference to lotteries, and yet a bill was passed by the House the other day, sponsored by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MUSSELWHITE], which permits newspapers to announce in their columns the results of drawings and lotteries conducted by fraternal, benevolent, charitable, and similar organizations.

A noted Frenchman has said that the Americans are the most inconsistent people in the world. He said: "They take a little whisky to make it strong; a little water to make it weak; a little lemon to make it sour; a little sugar to make it sweet; then they say, 'Here's to you', and they drink it themselves."

We may be inconsistent, but we are true Americans, and as true Americans, I reiterate that sometime soon, we in this body shall pass my bill authorizing a national lottery. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAMSPECK and Mr. LEHLBACH) there were—ayes 58, noes 40.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present, and I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I ask the majority leader if this is the last bill we are to take up today?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FEDERAL STOCK EXCHANGE LEGISLATION

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, the Congress has now acted with finality on the bill providing for the regulation of stock exchanges through a Federal agency to be set up for that purpose. As the bill has received the President's approval, it is appropriate and pertinent that a few remarks should be made with respect to the all-important basic principle involved in the legislation.

It is likely that the debate here and the discussions elsewhere as well have centered more largely on matters of detail than they have on the prime object which is sought by the legislation. This was natural, and it was necessary in a sense, for all of us here are human; otherwise this would not be a representative body. The result is that out of a great amount of hard work and considerable turmoil there emerges a measure that attains an unusual degree of perfection in form without sacrifice of principle.

There is a saying—perhaps trite, but true—that all legislation is the result of compromise; and we have discovered that often the essential paths of compromise are tortuous and difficult of understanding. If my experience of 13 years in the House of Representatives has brought me anything in the way of legislative or parliamentary wisdom, it goes naturally and quickly to the proposition that in the absence of the spirit of compromise our work here, that which we produce here, becomes faulty and futile and misses the spirit of democracy. The stock-exchange regulation bill exemplifies this point.

The bill has undergone many changes since it was first laid before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. But the changes, may I say, have been such as not to hamper legitimate business transactions. From the main purpose behind the legislation, there has been no swerving and no temporizing. It is a good bill. The country is to be congratulated. The committee, especially its accomplished chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], and the House are entitled to all the encomium which comes with the successful culmination of a very important public service.

It was inevitable that the Congress should take up and legislate upon the question of stock-exchange regulation at the present session. The imperativeness of this manifested itself with great clearness on March 4, 1933, when the President in his inaugural address declared that in America "there must be an end to speculation with other people's money." I have a vivid recollection of that moment. It was historic. The vast assemblage in front of the Capitol, quiet to the point of solemnity in its eagerness to miss not a single word of the impressive utterances of the new Chief Executive, suddenly burst into a roar of applause and acclaim that was carried to every nook and corner of the land. The incident was one of reassurance to a people on the ragged edge of despair; everywhere in the Nation there was a renewal of courage; and there was a renewal, too, of faith in the Government at Washington.

The bill which just now has been approved finally by the two branches of Congress is a practical fulfillment of the promise made by Mr. Roosevelt that there must be an end to speculation with other people's money—an end to Wall Street gambling with the capital and credit of the country.

How many of us, I wonder, in the mass of detail, in the bombardment of an organized propaganda unprecedented in its magnitude and influence—how many of us lost at times the true perspective, the true significance of what it all was about?

Speculating with other people's money! Who were the "other people" in this respect? They were all the people of the Nation. For it is so obvious that it hardly requires mentioning that in the 1929 debacle in the New York stock market there was not a single person among our population whose fortunes were not adversely affected by what a comparative few were permitted to do with the capital and credit of the entire country.

In the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee we worked on this legislation for 9 weeks before it was brought to the floor of the House. We learned many things during those weeks. We learned, for instance, that the constantly increasing aggregate of demand loans, or loans to brokers trading in the stock market, had reached the monstrous total of more than $7,500,000,000 during the months leading up to the crash in October 1929, which resulted in the economic structure of the country crumbling to the earth.

That is a large aggregation of wealth, whether represented by actual capital or by credit, or by both capital and credit. The entire issuance of money in the United States is but $13,452,311,018, according to a Treasury Department statement of March 31, 1934, and of this amount only $5,393,689,530, inclusive of amounts held in bank vaults of member banks of the Federal Reserve System, is in circulation. The amount actually in circulation, of course, is much less, probably being not more than $3,000,000,000. Yet brokers were permitted to utilize as much as $7,500,000,000 in credit based upon this circulation in their stock-market operations during the so-called "golden era" of the Coolidge and Hoover administrations.

But that is not all. If $7,500,000,000 were actually loaned to brokers, at exorbitant rates of interest of course, how much more capital and credit were there being held in New York and elsewhere against possible further demands of the speculators, if their requirements and their powers of absorption and the wheels of fortune should give them opportunity to continue availing themselves of other people's money?

This question probably never will be satisfactorily answered. One thing we do know, however, is that the country was practically drained dry of its financial resources. The suction was so great, as I have indicated, that it took its toll from the pockets of every man, woman, and child in the country, no matter how high or low their station, and no matter whether they were conscious or not of the disaster which was being heaped upon them.

We know that the money was taken out of agriculture. We know that it was taken out of commerce. We know that it was taken out of industry. Upon the country was laid an economic waste. Generations yet to come will still be suffering before the wreckage can be entirely cleared away. We were told during the hearings that $50,000,000,000 is a conservative estimate of the loss alone in the value of corporate securities.

We are approaching another of our biennial seasons of politics in the United States. A congressional campaign is near at hand. Already we are hearing the argument made by those who are opposed to the Democratic administration that what the country needs is a return to the halcyon days of 1921 to 1931—the reputed golden era. Well, perhaps there was prosperity of a kind during that period; but it was prosperity with tinsel trappings. It was built upon nothing that was substantial. Eventually it collapsed, as all things must collapse which are upon insecure foundations.

The late Paul Warburg was one of America's greatest financiers. His reputation as a far-seeing banker and patriot was world-wide. In 1928, while Mr. Coolidge was President and Mr. Hoover was Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Warburg solemnly warned the Government at Washington that the boom—" the prosperity ", so called—was unsound and unsafe. About this time Senator GLASS, of Virginia, considered by many the ablest authority on finance in our public life, severely criticized the administration of the Federal Reserve Board, which he had helped to create, for its failure to take a hand in the situation and curb the flow of the financial strength of the country to the channels of Wall Street speculation. None of us will ever forget the statements repeated over and over again by our now Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, as a Member of the House and later as a Member of the Senate, to the effect that the foundations of the whole business were rotten. Mr. Hull was then and is now one of the most thorough student of economics in the public life of this or any other nation.

Those in control of our Government at that critical period paid no attention to these eminent authorities. Had they done so, the serious consequences of the cataclysmic crash of 1929 might have been in a measure averted.

After he had left the White House in 1929, Mr. Coolidge, in an article which he prepared for the Saturday Evening Post, said that toward the end of his administration, in 1927 and 1928, he had felt that the diversion of the financial strength of the country from the usual channels of business had reached an alarming stage. But President Coolidge did nothing about it. Mr. Hoover, as a member of the Coolidge Cabinet, must have shared in this feeling of alarm, but neither did he do anything to stem the tide before or after his induction into the Presidency on March 4, 1929.

Later on, however, Mr. Hoover, as President, did take cognizance of the situation. The crash, it will be recalled, occurred in October 1929. On December 2, 1930, more than a year afterward, the President transmitted his second annual message to the Congress in which he spoke of " a speculative period which diverted capital and energy into speculation rather than constructive enterprise " and said that " these particular dislocations have generally readjusted themselves."

In the early 1850's there was a Know-Nothing Political Party in this country, and it called itself by its right name; from 1921 to 1931 there was again a Know-Nothing Party, which was also a do-nothing party, and it called itself Republican.

Please get this: Addressing themselves to the identical proposition, Mr. Hoover said that " these particular dislocations have generally readjusted themselves " and did nothing; while Mr. Roosevelt, at the moment of his inaugural, declared in tones that penetrated to the far corners of the country, that " there must be an end to speculation with other people's money " and set himself and his administration and the Congress resolutely to the accomplishment of that purpose.

Only a few days ago Arthur M. Hyde, of my State, who was Mr. Hoover's Secretary of Agriculture, spoke before the Missouri Republican Club of Kansas City. It was a long speech, filled with many lamentations. Mr. Hyde resents very bitterly the action of the voters when, in 1932, they declared themselves for a new deal.

Starting his speech, Mr. Hyde remarked: " This is not a new era; it is only another depression." One hundred percent wrong on his first two statements of fact was Mr. Hyde. Two times at bat, two times struck out.

This is a new era, only Mr. Hyde does not recognize it yet. He is sour on the subject, like Jeremiah of old. Why fool yourself, Mr. Hyde? It is the beginning of a new era, but it is the same old depression—the one you should know a great deal about, for you were a member of the do-nothing administration that added to its momentum by taking the stand that " these particular dislocations have generally readjusted themselves."

Mr. Hyde set up quite a few straw men, which he fought furiously in his speech. Here is an example:

Is liberty safe—

He asked—

when $3,000,000,000 deftly extracted from the savings of the people * * * is set up in the hands of an appointed official to be used, without accounting until after the next Presidential election, to speculate in the market for bonds and foreign exchange?

Of course, there is no situation or condition in the governmental operations at this time which would warrant an interrogation or statement so utterly assinine as that one. However, granting for sake of argument that the former Secretary of Agriculture has precariously hit a nail on the head, I submit that it would still be better to turn $3,000,000,000 over to an official, a sworn representative of the people, for the purposes mentioned than it was to turn over practically the entire credit of the Nation to a group of Wall Street speculators to make merry with while the rest of the country was plunged into an economic abyss.

There are in the United States approximately 130,000,000 people. At the time the speculative orgy was at its height, there were only 1,300,000 separate trading accounts in the establishments of the broker-members of the New York Stock Exchange. Do you realize what that means? It means that 0.01 part of the population of the country was permitted to use at least $7,500,000,000 of the capital and credit of the people of the United States for gambling purposes in the stock market.

I agree heartily with Mr. Hyde when he says that—

Any program which takes half of the value of the widow's insurance policy, of the worker's wage, of the small investments of the thrifty, is a dishonest program.

I agree with him when he says that. It is a pity he didn't think of it 5 or 6 or 7 years ago.

And I agree with him, too, when he says " there are only a few millionaires." If I recall the figure correctly, and I am sure I do, in the days of Coolidge and Hoover 15 percent of the country's population controlled 90 percent of the country's wealth, while 85 percent of the population controlled only 10 percent of the country's wealth. Truly it is a sad contemplation.

Let me paint a graphic picture of our country as it was turned over to the Democrats on March 4, 1933, a year and three months ago. I shall do this in the words of President Roosevelt, who in his inaugural address said:

Values have sunk to fantastic levels; taxes have risen; our ability to pay has fallen; government of all kinds is faced by serious curtailment of income; the means of exchange are frozen in the currents of trade; the withered leaves of industrial enterprise lie at every side; farmers find no markets for their produce; the savings of many years in thousands of families are gone. More important, a host of unemployed citizens face the grim problem of existence, and an equally great number toil with little return. Only a foolish optimist can deny the dark realities of the moment.

There is the picture truthfully portrayed as it existed a little more than a year ago. Mr. Hyde calls it " only another depression."

Mr. Roosevelt went on to say that—

The rulers of the exchange of mankind's goods have failed through their own stubbornness and their own incompetence, have admitted their failure and abdicated.

True, they have tried—

Continued the President—

but their efforts have been cast in the pattern of an outworn tradition * * *. They know only the rules of a generation of self-seekers * * * they have no vision, and when there is no vision the people perish.

It is unthinkable that a people would go back to the conditions which produced the situation described in the President's words. Yet that is what the Republican Party is asking them to do.

NECESSITY FOR THE ENACTMENT OF THE FRAZIER-LEMKE BILL

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, 145 Members of this House, conforming to the rules for discharging a committee from further consideration of a bill and to bring the measure to the floor for consideration and passage, have signed the petition to bring in the Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage bill. This bill is the most important and constructive piece of legislation that has been introduced at this session of Congress. The legislatures of 24 States, half of the Union, have asked Congress to pass this legislation. As one of the signers of the petition to bring this bill before the House, I ask for its consideration.

Much legislation designed to relieve the depressed financial condition of the country has been passed by the House at this session. In the Public Works bill we have provided for outright grants of 30 percent to communities for the construction of Public Works projects. We have passed the law guaranteeing bank deposits, with all the uncertainty and risk connected with bank management. We have passed a law that permits banks to create—print—money by depositing Government bonds as security under this arrangement. This new bank money is loaned to the public at current rates of interest at the same time the bank is collecting interest on the deposited bonds. The Government is loaning its credit to the banks free. It is financing other industries, including railroads, steamship companies, and financial institutions, at rates of interest in many cases no higher than the rates proposed under this bill. These measures, we are told, are necessary in the recovery program which is designed to restore prosperity.

Let me point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that any permanent prosperity in this country must rest upon the prosperity of our basic industries. Price is the index to prosperity. Good prices bring good times for the farmers. Good times for the farmers bring good times for business and the country everywhere.

Our problem is to create and put a volume of money, cash, in circulation sufficient to the needs of business and as a means to raise the price of commodities above the cost of production and at the same time devise and put a plan into operation that will relieve the farmer of the impossible burden of mortgage under which he is struggling and waging a losing fight, seeing the homes and the accumulations of a lifetime swept away by bankruptcy in every community.

If our business structure and our institutions are to endure, relief from this impossible condition must come quickly. Mr. Speaker, this problem is met and can be solved by the passage of the Frazier-Lemke bill. Every farm organization in this country—including those of Idaho—the State and local granges, have petitioned Congress, and the petitions have been placed upon the Speaker's desk, for the passage of this legislation.

Let us take up this bill and give careful consideration to its provisions, amending it if necessary to make it practicable, feasible, and workable. Let us give the country this constructive piece of legislation, so that the farmers may be relieved of their desperate situation, their homes and farms safeguarded, and the prosperity of the country restored.

LIFE INSURANCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 9178) to regulate the business of life insurance in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman for that purpose. The Chair understood the gentleman had a unanimous-consent request to submit.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 9178) to regulate the business of life insurance in the District of Columbia and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. ZIONCHECK and Mr. O'MALLEY objected.

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION ACT

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 2347, to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, and ask unanimous consent that it may be immediately considered by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Was there an objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE]?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes; I objected.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes; I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, there are rather distressing circumstances in connection with the request of the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I know the circumstances.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This is a bill for the consideration of which the Committee on Rules has granted a rule. It is a very short bill, and the matter can be disposed of in a few minutes. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE] has been waiting day after day to have the rule called up. The House knows of the unfortunate and tragic death of his colleague Mr. Coffin. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE] will be appointed on the committee to attend the funeral, which will probably necessitate his absence for the remainder of the session. I hope under the circumstances no objection will be made. This is a very minor matter and we can dispose of it in a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the inland-waterways bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It covers the issuance of a certificate of convenience and necessity.

Mr. O'MALLEY. This is a bill which was on the Consent Calendar, and I objected to it about a month and a half ago.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my objection so that the gentleman may explain the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I also reserve my objection for the same purpose.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, what is proposed to be done by this bill is to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act by simply adding two words. After the word "warrior" we add the words "Columbia" and "Snake." This will include the Columbia and Snake Rivers within the provisions of the act, which will permit the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant joint rail and water rates to apply to navigation upon the Columbia and Snake Rivers.

These rates will benefit the shippers and communities of the large country tributary to this great river system of the Northwest, particularly the people of Idaho, Washington, and Oregon, where much of the freight tonnage destined for joint water and rail shipment will originate.

The Columbia and its tributary, the Snake River, constitute the third greatest waterway in the United States. Navigation upon these rivers dates back to 1861, during the gold rush to Idaho. Improvements began at tidewater many years ago. Later, when the country tributary to these rivers became settled and the wonderfully fertile farms began to produce an abundance of wheat, steamboats were placed on the river to handle this business. Soon the needs of this transportation and the improvement of the river was recognized. As a result, canals and locks were built by the Government at Cascade and Celilo Falls. Steamboats now navigate the river as far as Lewiston, Idaho.

Water transportation on this great river system is only in its infancy. More than 6,000 grain growers of the interior Northwest are in need of cheap and economical water transportation to tidewater markets. They realize that unless they are supplied with cheaper freight transportation rates to place their products at shipside, they cannot continue to produce. When we consider that normally 60 percent of the grain production of the Pacific Northwest must move to export to find a market, it is easy to understand how vital it is that our grain growers have a reasonable charge for moving their product to shipside.

Besides the product of the immense farming territory already developed, tributary to this river system, we have the timber and mining resources of one of the greatest undeveloped areas of the United States comprised in Idaho and eastern Washington and Oregon. On both sides of the Snake River is located what is considered one of the richest mineral districts of the North American continent. Because of inadequate transportation facilities and excessive freight charges this area is largely dormant until our rivers can handle this traffic to tidewater cheaply.

In this area there are known deposits of cinnabar, antimony, iron ore, arsenic, tungsten, vanadium, beryllium, tin, coal, phosphate rock, gypsum, parite salt, talc, sulphur, alum, copper ore, lead, zinc, gold, and silver, all awaiting development and low-cost transportation.

In timber resources alone we have in the Government-owned national forest, tributary to the lower Snake River, 34,033,476,000 feet of merchantable grades of timber, other than white pine, that has no market value because of prohibitive cost of transporting this timber to market. There is also standing on the Clearwater and Selway National Forest 1,458,000,000 feet of white-pine timber and 2,024,521 cedar poles, also Federal owned. In addition to this, there is eighteen and one-half billion feet of State and privately owned timber of the same specie and on the same watershed, all making a grand total of 55,000,000,000 feet of timber. Without considering future growth, this great reserve of timber will supply 1,500,000 tons of traffic annually for the next 50 years. The existing all-rail rate on lumber to eastern markets from this area is 87 cents a hundred pounds, about $20 per thousand feet. The rate by all-water route would be about $10.50.

The excessive charge which our producers and shippers are forced to pay to reach market with their products is only a part of the problem. These excessive freight rates tend to dam back and restrict the free movement of commerce. In the eastern part of the United States, where a very large and ever-increasing volume of traffic is moving over joint rail-water and rail-water-rail routes, worth-while savings are passed on to shippers far removed from water carriers. The importance of this proposed development is not to divert traffic from rail lines—traffic which they are now moving—but to move the timber, lime rock, granite, clays, and minerals and other dormant resources that cannot be processed and marketed profitably with existing transportation and facilities and charges.

As early as 1920 Congress recognized the necessity of coordinating rail-water and other mediums of transportation.

In the Transportation Act of 1920 they established a definite policy "to foster and preserve in full vigor both rail and water transportation." At the same time they set up machinery to bring about closer cooperation and coordination of rail and water carriers.

In 1928 the Dennison Act was passed. This was a long forward step in forcing coordination of rail and water movement of our national internal commerce. This has resulted in the establishment of many joint rail-water and rail-water-rail routes in the eastern part of the United States and a very large freight over these routes.

It has been amply demonstrated that waterways are the only competing medium which return more revenue to the railroads than it takes away from them by furnishing a medium by which raw material may be collected cheaply. Waterways develop a large demand for transport of high-tariff freight which the railroads handle. We need coordination of rail and water carriers. The building up of the great New York Central Railway system, between New York City and Chicago, which has always been subject to the closest possible competition from water carriers on the Hudson River-Erie Canal-Great Lakes, is a striking example that waterways do not hurt the railroads. Many other similar examples could be cited.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I am wondering if there is any commerce now on the Snake River.

Mr. WHITE. In certain stages of water the boats ply between Lewiston and on out to Portland.

Mr. McDUFFIE. How many miles is that?

Mr. WHITE. One hundred and fifty miles or more.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is a seasonal movement entirely, is it not?

Mr. WHITE. On part of the river, but on the lower part of the river it is open to navigation at all times.

Mr. McDUFFIE. For how many miles?

Mr. WHITE. For over 100 miles. The Celilo Canal has been built by the Government to accommodate water transportation on that river at a cost of several million dollars.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The lower part of the river is more than 100 miles.

Mr. WHITE. My understanding from the records I have consulted is that the Celilo Canal is a little more than 100 miles from Portland up the river.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Is there navigation above that canal?

Mr. WHITE. There is navigation all the way up to Lewiston, Idaho.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I have not read the bill, and the question I wanted to ask the gentleman is this: This legislation is simply permissive, is it not?

Mr. WHITE. Permissive, and does not do a thing but broaden the Waterways Act to include these two rivers. We do not change the law otherwise.

Mr. McDUFFIE. But it costs a lot of money to provide equipment to operate on these rivers, and I am wondering where the money is coming from in order to provide the equipment necessary for the Government to extend its activities on these rivers.

Mr. WHITE. We are not putting the Government into the business at all. This is a rate-making proposition, and is intended to improve the status of these rivers.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The Government is already in the business, for that matter, on the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers.

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The Government has spent vast sums of money in providing its own equipment to operate on those rivers, and I am wondering where the equipment is coming from and whether or not this legislation proposes that the Government buy equipment to operate boats on these two rivers.

Mr. WHITE. Not at all.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. It does not do that. Great improvements are now being made on the Columbia River at the Bonneville Dam.

Mr. McDUFFIE. But you cannot have any commerce until you have these improvements.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. This bill is simply permissive. Right now, for 50 miles above the Celilo Canal, there are enormous quantities of wheat being shipped out by boats to the elevators in Portland.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does the gentleman object to that?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. That is what we are in favor of. We want to reduce the cost on the shipment of every bushel of wheat in the inland empire of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho by reducing freight rates.

Mr. McDUFFIE. If the gentleman will yield just a moment, as I understand, you cannot obtain joint water and rail rates without having the Government put its boats on this river. Is that the point?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. No; not at all. We do not want a cent of appropriation. We simply want permission, if conditions justify it, or when they do justify it, so that if the Inland Waterways Corporation wants to go on this river, just as it did on the Warrior River, it may do so. This is simply permissive and there is no compulsion in the matter.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. A certificate of convenience and necessity will be required to operate on the river under this act.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. It will require that.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. In order that no one else may operate on the river, they would have to show a public necessity, just as they do upon roads for stage lines and things of that nature.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Would it be for the benefit of the farmers if there were not ample competition between the boat companies or the barge lines?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. There will be that competition.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I do not see that in the bill, and the practice has not shown it.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I think the bill does show it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Idaho yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. This bill was up for consideration when we were considering the Consent Calendar and I objected to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. You did not understand it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman from Idaho has the floor.

This provides for a certificate of convenience which is an absolute monopoly, as it has worked out before with the Inland Waterways Corporation, for shipping on this river; and is not the object of this bill not to get the Inland Waterways Corporation to operate on the river but to provide the people in that section with an excuse for coming to the Government to get the Government to develop this river?

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TO REGULATE THE BUSINESS OF LIFE INSURANCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H.R. 9178) to regulate the business of life insurance in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that the only thing there is in this bill is to give to the people of the District of Columbia the protection, with the same laws that they have in New York, Ohio, New Jersey——

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want to say to the gentleman that this bill consists of 133 pages, and I am not going to let it go through at this late hour of the day. I object.

ONE YEAR OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address by the Speaker of the House on June 9, 1934, over the National Broadcasting hook-up on the Farm and Home hour.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address of Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, Speaker of the House of Representatives, on June 9, 1934:

Fortunately for the country we have had 1 year of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. On the 4th day of March in 1933 farm conditions were proceeding rapidly toward chaos. Farmers were losing their farms. All the way from Pennsylvania to Utah an agrarian revolution was in progress. Wherever sheriffs' sales were advertised, or sales under foreclosure, or chattel-mortgage sales, grim-faced farmers assembled and said, "No man will buy here today", and usually these statements were effective. We were proceeding rapidly toward chaos.

The perpetuity of a republic depends, first of all, upon the approval of the people who live on the land, and the approval of this class of the population is of prime importance.

In the restoration of agriculture to its proper position we have been compelled to resort to new and unusual and drastic remedies for the reason that the situation was new and unusual and required the application of remedies of this character. The program has just now commenced to work.

In all the cotton-growing States there is marked improvement. In all the tobacco sections there is marked improvement, and in those States which are fortunate enough today to be both cotton- and tobacco-producing States people have commenced to forget the depression and to look forward with renewed confidence and hope.

In the corn-hog States payments to corn-hog farmers who have adjusted their production are now commencing and will proceed with rapidity, and we can soon expect, also, a marked improvement in the corn-hog States. The unprecedented drought has been broken, and out in the drought sections farmers look forward with greater hope than they had a few days ago.

Rental and benefit payments to cotton and tobacco producers and corn and hog producers now total over $19,000,000. Six hundred and twenty thousand contracts from cotton growers have been received and are recorded, and of this large number over 211,000 have been approved and released for disbursement. The distribution of checks for cotton contracts has proceeded rapidly in Alabama, Arkansas, Arizona, California, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, and in all the cotton States, totaling, up until the present time, over $9,000,000. Checks have been written for over 18,000 cotton producers, and the distribution proceeds now rapidly.

Growers of tobacco in the tobacco States are now receiving their checks which will amount on the 91,000 contracts now completed to over $7,000,000.

Already over 13,000 checks, representing a total of over $2,000,000, have gone out to contracting corn and hog producers in Iowa, Michigan, and Minnesota, and in the other corn-hog States a distribution will soon commence. There has already been a partial release of corn upon which 45 cents per bushel has been loaned, and this policy has had the effect of insuring for the corn farmers a proper price for the corn they produced last year.

In the drought-stricken areas a purchase of surplus cattle by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has already been started, and 134 counties in 4 States have been named as being in the emergency area and additions to this area will be made as rapidly as necessary. The condition of the drought-stricken areas of the country would have been desperate indeed without the Agricultural Adjustment Administration program.

The drought has given for wheat producers a new meaning to the cash payments made by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. These payments were primarily intended as a reward to farmers who voluntarily reduced their wheat acreage. They are now serving throughout the drought stricken areas as a crop insurance. Fortunately, payments are made on the basis of past averages of production, and those farmers who have signed contracts with the Government will receive the amounts due them under their contracts even though their crops are absolutely destroyed. This feature of the recovery program has been given outstanding importance. As Mr. Davis, the Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, stated, and I quote from his statement, "the feature of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration as applied to farmers in the drought stricken areas has given them a hitherto unattainable degree of protection from misfortune on a higher and juster plane than that of charity."

Under our program we are taking out of cultivation rapidly marginal farm land in order to better balance production and demand, but the primary purpose as defined in the act itself is to restore the pre-war parity of 1909–14, between the goods the farmer is compelled to buy and the prices he receives for his commodities, and already we are approaching that much-desired goal. Prices of industrial goods affected by the National Recovery Administration have moved forward more rapidly than farm prices have moved forward, but with the present acreage-reduction program in operation and with the other relief measures in operation which have already been started, farm prices ought to move forward more rapidly than they have in the past.

The farmers of the country have been patient and patriotic. The condition which confronts farmers today requires an exercise of real patriotism. The fight against depression is difficult indeed. The battles in which we are engaged now are more important even than the battles of the World War and they are harder to fight.

There are no khaki-clad soldiers marching now, no bands playing. Flags are not flying as they were during war times, and this makes the present warfare against depression more difficult than a war which can be fought out on battlefields. We have won our wars always. The war against the depression which has been prevailing for years we will win also, and the farmers are contributing and will continue to contribute their full share.

In all the corn-hog States the payment of the premiums made possible by the processing taxes will soon commence. The increased prices the corn-hog signers get in the open market represent a part only of the total income which they will receive from their 1934 hog production. If the market price of a hog that will weigh 225 pounds should be around $10 a head when a contract signer disposes of his spring pigs, this will represent only about two-thirds of his actual gross returns. By February he will have received $5 a head in additional returns, less the local administrative costs. The benefit payments he receives under the adjustment plan are just as real as if it were all paid out directly to the farmer at the time of sale and expressed in a higher price for his hogs as the Agricultural Extension Service of the University of Illinois makes plain.

The processing tax produces the funds for the benefit payments. The Illinois University Agricultural Extension Service, in the studies it has made, points out that the processing tax which has been in effect since November 5 has had the result that the packers in Chicago have actually paid from $1.06 to $2.83 per hundredweight more from week to week from November 5, 1933, to April 21, 1934, than was paid during the corresponding weeks of 1932–33. When the processing tax was being gradually stepped up from 50 cents to $2.25 per hundredweight during the winter a more moderate increase was registered than for the corresponding weeks a year earlier.

The extension service of the University of Illinois has rendered most valuable service. In this connection they say, "Farmers, however, should not conclude from these facts that the price of hogs today would be higher by the amount of the tax, if no tax had been levied. On the contrary, the sum of the open-market price of hogs, plus the tax now, undoubtedly exceeds substantially what the open-market price of hogs would have been had no tax been levied."

We are face to face, however, with the fact that in levying processing taxes upon hogs we are up against the Chicago packers, a conscienceless trust, and held to be that kind of an organization by the Supreme Court of the United States. They now have in operation a direct-marketing plan which enables them to fix the price of hogs. They are operating now on a cost plus basis and are making money while the farmers are selling their hogs at less than cost. The reimbursements the contract hog-corn farmers will soon receive will overcome their losses, but that amount added to the cash price they are receiving will not equal the amount they ought to have received. Thousands of farmers have signed contracts agreeing to refrain from direct marketing.

At some future time, when I have the opportunity, I may go on the radio to discuss direct marketing. There can be no permanent recovery of hog prices until direct marketing is abolished or substantially modified. We are trying to get through Congress now market propositions which will give to the Secretary of Agriculture more power than he now possesses to regulate and control direct marketing. It will add to the powers he now has the injunction power which is important indeed.

This bill is being held up by the cattlemen who do not really market direct, but who hope to do it in the future. Whenever they commence to market direct to the extent that hog farmers are marketing direct they will find, I predict, that it will not work, but that is really too long to wait. I am hoping that in the days immediately ahead of us we will get more assistance from the Department of Agriculture than we have been getting in forcing through the Congress of the United States these direct marketing regulations.

THE TARIFF BILL

We have just passed through Congress a nonpartisan tariff bill, a bill which provides for lowering of tariffs by reciprocal arrangements, in order to again restore international trade and give back to farmers a part of the markets they have lost for wheat and for pork products. This plan has been considered for a long time. It was first suggested by a Republican President. It is being put in operation now during the administration of a Democratic President.

During the three administrations preceding the present administration our tariffs were unconscionably increased. We expected to continue selling farm products and manufactured products abroad, while we refused to accept in return the products of other countries. Practically all American economists warned against these policies. The nations of Europe protested most vigorously and called our attention to the fact that they could pay for our products only by sending us in exchange their own products. We ignored the warning.

As a result retaliatory tariffs were established against us. This country, mechanized as no other country ever was mechanized before, was compelled to transfer a part of its capital to other countries and to build their branch plants and manufacture in other countries, using their raw material and their labor, the goods we had been manufacturing here in mass production, using our own labor and our own raw material, and the flight of American capital still continues. Tariffs of other countries have been raised until they are now higher than ours, and the first effect of these policies was to exclude from foreign markets the products of our farms.

Foreign trade has practically vanished from the seas. We always produced enormous farm surpluses which we were compelled to market abroad. That market has now been destroyed. It will be difficult indeed to restore it, even in part, but under this bill which has now passed we propose to attempt to restore it, and we hope that some success will accompany our efforts.

In the meanwhile, we must content ourselves with being a smaller America. For a time we must produce less on our farms, and we are now taking land out of cultivation. During the World War we increased our cultivated acreage by forty or fifty million acres. We are now planning to take that much out of cultivation by methods which are now in operation. For a time we must produce principally for ourselves. It is much more difficult by tariff adjustments to build up a lost market than it is by tariff increases to destroy it.

The benefit payments which are being made now to farmers, and will be made in increasing amounts, are not charged against the Treasury of the United States. They are financed by processing taxes. Already the increased buying power of producers of farm products has had a splendid result and is reflected in industrial recovery throughout the country.

We have started in the right direction. A splendid beginning has been made. The program has commenced to work out. Already 3,000,000 farmers have joined production-control associations and as a voluntary experiment this action of the farmers is historic and dramatic. There is nothing in history which will compare with the planned farm production now started. A patriotic cooperation on the part of farmers will bring about the anticipated results. Failure to cooperate and the defeat of the present plans would take us back to where we were on the 4th day of March 1933 and this must not happen.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE COFFIN

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad duty to announce to the Members of the House that my colleague, TOM C. COFFIN, from the Second District of Idaho, passed away yesterday at 5 o'clock as the result of an accident which happened on the Capitol Grounds.

By the death of Mr. COFFIN we have lost one of our valuable Members in the House of Representatives. As a new Member, he has made an enviable record for effective work in support of the great recovery program formulated and being carried into operation by the present administration. By his devotion to the interests of our people and by his industry and application to his duties at the Capitol he has made a record which will endear him to the people of Idaho and will be cherished with increasing appreciation as time passes.

I desire further to announce to the House that there will be funeral services at the Lee Funeral Home, Stanton Park, tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk the following resolution:

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

House Resolution 427

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Honorable THOMAS C. COFFIN, a Representative from the State of Idaho.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following committee: Mr. WHITE, Mr. MOTT, Mr. SCRUGHAM, and Mr. HARTER.

The Clerk read the further resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 9 minutes p.m.) the House, as a further mark of respect, adjourned until Monday, June 11, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

498. The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Provincial Board of Agusan, P.I., protesting against the imposition of an excise tax on coconut oil imported to the United States from the Philippine Islands, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the New York Plate Printers Union, Local No. 58, signed by its secretary, O. Ernest Knoblock, of Brooklyn, N. Y., remonstrating against the printing of bank notes for the Government of Cuba by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also laid before the Senate the memorial of the Committee of Three, elected by the recent Veterans National Rank and File Convention assembled at Fort Hunt, Va., and Washington, D.C., remonstrating against the alleged action on the part of officials at the Capitol in escorting J. R. Wholley, a member of the above-mentioned committee, from the Capitol Building, which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from Amon G. Carter, of Forth Worth, Tex., praying for the prompt enactment of pending oil-control legislation providing regulation for the petroleum industry, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate letters from officers of the Southern Pecan Shelling Co., Erler Manufacturing Co., and San Antonio Broom Factory, all of San Antonio, Tex., remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 2926) to equalize the bargaining power of employers and employees, to encourage the amicable settlement of disputes between employers and employees, to create a National Labor Board, and for other purposes, and also the enactment of proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Topeka, Kans., praying for the enactment of old-age pension legislation, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Twenty-ninth Ward Cooperative Savings & Loan Association, Brooklyn, N.Y., protesting against the formation or establishment of competitive savings and loan associations authorized and sanctioned by the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Immigration Restriction League, Inc., of New York City, N.Y., protesting against the enactment of legislation loosening immigration restrictions, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a council meeting of the chiefs of the Six Nations of the Iroquois Confederacy, assembled at the Onondaga Indian Reservation, N.Y., protesting against the passage of the so-called "Wheeler-Howard Indian welfare bill", on the alleged ground that the said bill impairs and violates the treaties of the United States with the Six Nations, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Ithaca, N.Y., favoring the passage of House bill 6097, providing higher moral standards for films entering interstate and foreign commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the convention of the National Women's Trade Union League of America, favoring the passage of the bill (S. 1842) to amend sections 211, 245, and 312 of the Criminal Code, as amended, relating to birth control, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Central Delegate Committee of the Nassau County (N.Y.) Socialist Party, favoring the passage of the so-called "Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Port Byron, N.Y., praying for the passage of Senate bill 3231, providing for the pensioning of railroad employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of New York City, N.Y., remonstrating against the adoption of certain paragraphs of Senate bill 3266, proposing to amend the Railway Labor Act, approved May 20, 1926, etc., which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Parent-Teacher Association of the Seaman Avenue School, Freeport, N.Y., endorsing the investigation by a Senate committee of the activities of manufacturers of arms and munitions, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Central Delegate Committee of Nassau County, N.Y., endorsing the investigation by a Senate committee of the activities of arms and munitions manufacturers, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Architectural Sculptors and Carvers' Association of New York City, N.Y., favoring the passage of the so-called "Connery bill", providing a 30-hour work week, which was ordered to lie on the table.

SURVEY OF NATIONAL CONDITIONS

Mr. FLETCHER presented a letter from John Carey, assistant to the vice president of the Church Life Insurance Corporation, New York City, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION,
New York, June 6, 1934.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SIR: You will, I think, be interested in the enclosed pamphlet which sets forth the results of a recent survey of national conditions made by this corporation.

The questionnaires were sent to leading clerical and lay officials throughout the Protestant Episcopal Church. Among those who replied are many of the Nation's leaders in business, industry, and transportation. Ninety-two percent of the questionnaires returned report that general business conditions are on the upward trend, while 74 percent of those reporting improvement pronounce the trend a decided one.

I hope that this survey may be of interest to you. If you would like to have other copies I should be glad to send them to you.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN CAREY,
Assistant to the Vice President.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 8544) making receivers appointed by any United States courts and authorized to conduct any business, or conducting any business, subject to taxes levied by the State the same as if such business were conducted by private individuals or corporations, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1372) thereon.

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 9404) to authorize the formation of a body corporate to insure the more effective diversification of prison industries, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1377) thereon.

Mr. BACHMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 3084) authorizing the sale of portions of the Pueblo lands of San Diego to the city of San Diego, Calif., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1373) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H.R. 9645. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Washington, Mo. (Rept. No. 1374); and

H.R. 9721. An act authorizing the Spencer County Bridge Commission, of Spencer County, Ind., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River between Rockport, Ind., and Owensboro, Ky. (Rept. No. 1375).

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 135) to amend the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1376) thereon.

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (S.Con.Res. 21) establishing a joint committee to investigate the question of participation by the Government in the Centennial of the Independence of the Republic of Texas, reported it without amendment.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 9th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 1358. An act to provide for the improvement of approaches to the National Cemetery and the Confederate Cemetery at Fayetteville, Ark.;

S. 3041. An act to effectuate the purpose of certain statutes concerning rates of pay for labor, by making it unlawful to prevent anyone from receiving the compensation contracted for thereunder, and for other purposes;

S. 3211. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Chesapeake Bay between Baltimore and Kent Counties, Md.;

S. 3540. An act to amend section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933; and

S. 3640. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Tensas Basin Levee Board of the State of Louisiana to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Bayou Bartholomew at or near its mouth in Morehouse Parish, La.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3775) to credit the tribal funds of the Indians of the Uintah and Ouray Reservation with certain amounts heretofore expended from tribal funds on irrigation works of the Uintah and Ouray Reservation, Utah; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 3776) granting a pension to Jacob R. Stiltner; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 3777) to correct the military record of William Grubbs; and

A bill (S. 3778) to correct the military record of Lowell Ostrander; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McCARRAN:

A bill (S. 3779) to amend section 4 of "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto", approved June 7, 1934; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WHITE:

A bill (S. 3780) for the relief of persons engaged in the fishing industry; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FRAZIER:

A bill (S. 3781) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California", approved May 18, 1928 (45 Stat.L. 602), by adding a new section thereto, to be known and designated as "section 8"; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENT OF BANKING ACT OF 1933—AMENDMENT

Mr. WALCOTT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3748) to amend certain sections of the Banking Act of 1933 and the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. THOMAS C. COFFIN, late a Representative from the State of Idaho, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

THE TARIFF—ADDRESS BY SENATOR HARRISON

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address delivered on Friday last over the radio on a Nation-wide network by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] on the subject of the tariff.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ADMINISTRATION'S NEW TARIFF POLICY

As is quite well understood by everyone, partisans all too often play politics in an election year with important administration proposals. A party candidate must have some issues, some platform on which to run; and if he is not big enough to be constructive, then he may well be destructive. If he cannot praise, he presumes to condemn; if he cannot build, he connives to tear down; if he lacks a message of hope, he delivers one of fear; if he cannot advocate a program of national and international cooperation, he seeks to promote national and international discord, distrust, and hostility.

In the recent consideration of the administration's tariff policy no exception was made. But a large majority of the Congress this week brushed aside politics and passed through both the Senate and the House legislation providing for reciprocal tariff agreements. The bill in all probability will be signed by the President tomorrow, thus completing another step in his program.

Since the inauguration of President Roosevelt the people of the United States have demonstrated a keen and ever-increasing interest in the affairs of Government. This interest is more than a mere awakening of public consciousness; it is a realization of public participation, public responsibility, and public power. The average American citizen is no longer content to follow blindly; he wants to know where he is going.

For these reasons—believing as I do that the American public not only desires but demands information on matters of national policy—I readily accepted the gracious invitation of the Columbia Broadcasting Co. to undertake a brief analysis of the President's tariff program. We need go no further back than the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act of 1930 to sketch the background for the present pitiful picture of our foreign trade. That act, the epitome of selfishness and greed, the perfection of political philandering, the sacrificial altar upon which the unprotected many were offered up for the appeasement of the false god of the fanatical few—that act, I say, was one of economic slaughter. By that act our Government established such inordinately high and inexcusable tariff duties upon many products that our markets were in effect closed. Stated in another way, we notified the world of our willingness to sell and our refusal to buy. And the notice was accepted with a vengeance.

Almost overnight the nations of the world began to shift their tariff rates, to enact new tariff restrictions, and to enter into reciprocal trade agreements. So swift and so devastating was the retaliation against us, so ruthlessly established were the trade quotas, cartels, and other restrictions to commerce that the United States toppled from its dominating position in international trade and in the fall disrupted and shattered her entire economic machinery.

The trade war against us has not abated, but, rather, seems to be waging with added force. In 1933, 150 of these trade agreements were consummated, and at this time in 1934 they are still being made.

It is true, of course, that since 1929 world trade generally has declined. But proportionately our loss last year was greater than that of any other one of the 11 leading commercial countries. Last year, in fact, the trade of Germany, France, and Great Britain showed an increase in exports. But the loss to the United States continued, so that in 1933, for the first time since the World War, Great Britain's foreign trade exceeded our own.

So far as our Government is concerned, the startling story of our international trade is told in the figures, which show that it dropped from more than nine and one-half billion dollars in 1929 to a trifle more than $3,000,000,000 last year. We have, in effect, lost just two-thirds of our foreign trade. And yet the do-nothings express amazement and condemnation at the thought of any effort by a Democratic administration to get back some part of a six and one-half billion dollar loss!

They say, for instance, that since our foreign trade in recent years has accounted for the sale of only about 10 percent of our total production, while the domestic markets have absorbed 90 percent, we are fighting for a niggardly fraction—a mere drop in the bucket. Let us briefly examine this contention. How does it stand up as applied to specific commodities like wheat, lard, cotton, tobacco, petroleum, automobiles, and machinery? These are among our principal export products, and the 10-percent average loss becomes a 40-, a 50-, or a 75-percent actual loss to them. Destroy the export market for automobiles and you destroy millions of workers dependent on that industry. Or, to view this contention from another angle: What 10 percent of the income of a farmer or a business man represents production costs and what 10 percent represents profit? It makes a vast lot of difference whether the 10 percent is at the bottom or at the top. If the salable output of every ranch, farm, mine, and factory could be increased by 10 percent, what a blessing it would be for every person in this country. It would mean increased employment, increased returns, and would find its repercussions in a more prosperous condition in every trade and counting center in the country. Everyone who is doing me the honor to listen in appreciates that a 10-percent increase in sales—not just in production, mind you—may mean the difference between profit and loss, between operating and closing down, between prosperity and bankruptcy.

And now, permit me to summarize the method by which we seek to restore the United States to its proud position in world commerce. The legislation just passed by the Congress has as its purposes to assist in the restoration of the American standards of living, in overcoming domestic unemployment, and in increasing the purchasing power of the American public, by expanding foreign markets for our surplus products.

With these objects in mind the President is authorized to enter into reciprocal trade agreements with any other nation. In such agreements the President is authorized to raise or lower existing tariff duties by as much as 50 percent. The power to enter into these agreements expires after 3 years. However, it is possible, by mutual consent, to prolong or extend the period of operation, so that a satisfactory agreement might be continued indefinitely.

There is nothing radical or particularly new in this plan. Reciprocal trade agreements have been advantageously used, under various congressional acts, almost from the beginning of our history as a nation. In more modern times, powers similar to that conferred in the present legislation were given to President Harrison in 1890 and to President McKinley in 1897. Changing conditions have, of course, required changing legislation. Under recent acts, particularly those of 1922 and 1930, the President was given broad power over tariff rates, but he could act only after investigations and reports by the Tariff Commission. These investigations have been so prolonged that often the conclusions were out-of-date by the time they were arrived at. Of eight reports made in April of this year, for instance, the time consumed averaged about 19 months. Obviously, some speedier method had to be devised, and that has been taken care of. The President must, before acting, consult the Tariff Commission, the Department of State, the Department of Commerce, and may avail himself of any other government agency or department. But he is not required to sit with folded hands for month after month, awaiting a report which may be out-of-date when it reaches him.

Interested parties will be publicly notified of the intention upon the part of our Government to negotiate any such trade agreement and may present their views, protests, objections, or approval. Counsel, advice, and cooperation are desired.

In the consideration of this legislation in the Senate the two hardest drives against the proposal were on amendments which would have, first, excluded agricultural products, and, second, required that these agreements be submitted by the President for congressional ratification. Both of these propositions were decisively defeated. To remove agricultural and horticultural products from consideration by the President in negotiating these reciprocal trade agreements would be, in the first place, gross discrimination between agriculture and industry generally. Secondly, because of the very character of our country and the genius of our people, we produce more surplus agricultural products than we do industrial products. When markets abroad cannot be obtained for the sale of our surplus agricultural products, the effect is felt, not only by every other industry in America but by every person in the country. It so happens that there are innumerable paper tariffs on agricultural products which are wholly ineffective. Authority to negotiate concessions from foreign countries to the advantage of our country in these ineffective paper tariff duties should not be denied. Above all else, I would point out that the strongest and most persistent efforts made by this administration have been in behalf of agriculture; and it is unreasonable to imagine that this administration, so bent upon aiding agriculture, would use its power to injuriously affect it.

There is not an effective tariff duty on a single agricultural product that will be reduced by the President in any reciprocal trade agreement that he might conclude with any foreign country. President Roosevelt, in his Baltimore speech during the Presidential campaign of 1932, said:

"I know of no effective excessively high tariff duties on farm products. I do not intend that such duties shall be lowered. To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program, and every farmer knows it and will not be deceived."

If the contention had prevailed in the Senate that these agreements, having been concluded, should be approved by the Congress, the delay that necessarily would have been occasioned and the uncertainty that would then have attached would have precluded us from obtaining worth-while concessions and advantages. If we are to win back our strong position in international trade, we must employ the same weapons that other governments are employing and must be in a position to wield them as swiftly and as effectively as do our competitors.

The reciprocal trade policy is one among the many great and constructive moves of this administration. It deserves the cooperation of every interest and industry in this country. If it is successful, which is our dream and hope, it will prove to be one of the great factors in our economic recovery.

THE FLETCHER-RAYBURN ACT

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I present a radio address of Charles H. Meyer, of the New York bar, entitled "The Fletcher-Rayburn Act", which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FLETCHER-RAYBURN ACT

By Charles H. Meyer, of the New York Bar

One day in the year 1790, in the old city of New York, a group of 10 or 12 business men met under a large buttonwood tree in Wall Street to make the first public market for securities in the United States. There weren't many securities in which they could trade—a small issue of Government bonds, the stocks of two or three newly organized banks—and that was all.

Others soon joined these brokers in their daily meetings, and after some 27 years of outdoor trading, indoor space was rented to house their activities.

Thus was born the New York Stock Exchange. Today, with its 1,375 members, who trade in hundreds of different issues, it is the nerve center of a vast system which makes it possible almost instantly to buy or sell a security any place in the land.

The growth of the New York Stock Exchange and of other stock exchanges has been enormously valuable in the development of the Nation's resources and industries. Nevertheless, along with the growth of these exchanges certain conditions have arisen which, in the interests of the public as a whole and of investors in particular, seem to require corrective regulation. To regulate these conditions Congress has passed the Fletcher-Rayburn Act, technically known as the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

The principal objects of the act are threefold: First, to prevent excessive speculation; second, to prevent market manipulation and other improper practices; and third, to prevent undue secrecy in the affairs of corporations whose securities are publicly owned. I shall discuss briefly how the act seeks to achieve each of these objects.

First, as to excessive speculation. Let us recall the hectic years ending in the crash of 1929, when every butcher, baker, and candlestick maker put every penny he could beg or borrow in the stock market. Not satisfied with buying stocks he had the money to pay for, he bought on margin. If he had $1,000, he would buy $5,000 worth of stock, paying his broker the $1,000 and borrowing from the broker the remaining $4,000. The broker, in turn, would borrow part or all of the $4,000 from his bank. The bank was glad to lend it, because interest rates on money loaned for stock-market speculation was much higher than on money loaned for use in business. Everybody wanted to speculate, and the plentiful supply of funds for that purpose made it easy for them to do so. The result was that prices of securities were bid up far beyond their true worth—and then came the crash.

The Fletcher-Rayburn Act seeks to prevent a repetition of that era of speculation by limiting the money available for trading on margin. The act authorizes the Federal Reserve Board, a Government agency, to restrict the amount of credit which a broker may extend to a customer. For the guidance of the Board, the act provides that under normal circumstances a broker may not lend a customer more than certain specified percentages of the cost of the stock. These percentages vary from a maximum of 75 percent to a minimum of 55 percent, and are so worked out that when stock prices are high the requirements are more rigid than when prices are low. The percentages specified in the act, however, are not inflexible, but may be increased or decreased by the Board as the public interest may demand. Moreover, in order to avoid any possibility of deflation at the present time, the margin requirements have been made inapplicable to existing margin accounts, if not used to evade the act, until July 1, 1937.

With the idea of further limiting the funds available for speculation, the act prohibits brokers, with certain exceptions, from borrowing money except from banks which are members of the Federal Reserve System. In this way the Federal Reserve Board is given control of the funds which can be loaned for stock-market operations. In the exceptional cases where, for the sake of convenience, brokers are allowed to borrow from others, safeguards are provided in order that the control of the Federal Reserve Board may not be impaired.

We come now to the question of market manipulation. It is the aim of the act to free security markets from artificial price fluctuations which have little relation to the true value of the security, but which are created by market operators for their personal profit. You have all heard of pools. They operate somethink like this: A group of men will acquire a large quantity of a particular stock, or, more frequently, they will acquire an option to buy a large quantity of the stock at around the prevailing price. They will then endeavor to enhance the price of the stock on the market in order that they may sell at a profit. This is sometimes done by large purchases and sales, principally between members of the pool themselves, at increasing prices, to create the impression in the public mind that a great demand for the stock is developing. These operations sometimes are accompanied by the circulation of rumors of various kinds which are calculated to arouse public appetite for the stock in question. In flagrant cases tipster sheets and other devices have been employed. The stock goes up. The public comes in and buys, and the pool sells. After its stock is completely sold, the pool discontinues its activities and divides its profits among its members. The public is left with the stock, which usually then recedes to its normal level.

These practices the stock exchanges have been unable adequately to curtail, largely because the principal offenders have not been exchange members but outside groups or operators. Now, however, market manipulation is banned by the act which specifically prohibits so-called "matched orders", fictitious or wash sales, the enhancing or depressing of prices to induce others to buy or sell, the spreading of false or misleading information, and the disseminating of information regarding pool activities.

Certain other practices, although frequently used in manipulation, have not been entirely forbidden because they often have legitimate uses, but have been subjected to regulation by the newly created Securities and Exchange Commission. These include the use of options, pegging or stabilizing prices, short sales, and stop-loss orders, all practices which are well understood in stock-market circles.

The act also subjects to regulation the activities of brokers who are engaged in the business of buying and selling securities both for customers and for themselves, in order that their conflicting interests may not injure the interests of their customers. Among other things, they must notify their customers of the particular capacity in which they are acting—that is, whether as brokers or as principals—and they may not carry on margin any new security in the distribution of which they participated for a period of 6 months. The Securities and Exchange Commission is authorized to make special rules limiting trading by stock-exchange members for their own account, whether on or off the floor of the exchange, by specialists, who specialize in transactions in a particular stock and make a market in that stock, and by dealers in odd lots, that is, in lots less than 100 shares.

Let us now consider the elimination of secrecy in the affairs of corporations whose securities are publicly held. The act endeavors to make available to all investors sufficient information to enable them to act intelligently in deciding what and when to buy and sell. For this purpose every corporation whose securities are listed on an exchange is required to file reasonably full information as to its affairs and keep the information up to date by annual and quarterly reports. In the filing of these reports due care is taken to protect trade secrets and processes. In order to discourage the improper use of confidential information by insiders for their own benefit, every officer and director and every stockholder who owns more than 10 percent of a company's stock is required to report his stock holdings and to keep the report of his holdings up to date. Furthermore, if any such officer, director, or 10-percent stockholder makes any profit by selling any stock of his company within 6 months of the time when he bought it, he is required to turn over the profit to the company.

These are some of the law's high spots. Several means have been devised to insure its enforcement. To violate it is a penal offense punishable by a maximum of $10,000 fine and 2 years' imprisonment, or, if the offender is a stock exchange, by a maximum fine of $500,000. There are also civil penalties. A person who illegally manipulates the market is liable for losses of investors who buy securities which are affected by the manipulation. A corporation filing a false or misleading report, as well as its officers, directors, and accountants who are responsible for filing it, may be liable for the losses of investors who purchase the corporation's securities in reliance on the report.

All stock exchanges, except small ones which may be exempted, are required to be registered. For violation of the act their registration may be revoked or suspended by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Their rules are subject to alteration at the Commission's instance. Securities which are listed on exchanges must likewise be registered. For violation of the act by listed corporations, or for failure to file required reports, the registration of a security may be revoked or suspended. Members of exchanges who violate the act are subject to expulsion, suspension, or other discipline.

Some have expressed the belief that the act may destroy the business of brokers and dealers in securities, and may detrimentally interfere with the business of corporations whose securities are publicly owned. This belief seems to me to be unwarranted, and to be founded largely on unfamiliarity with the act. Of course, much will depend on the rules which will be laid down by the Securities and Exchange Commission and by the Federal Reserve Board, which, between them, are vested with the administration of the act. I see no reason to fear, however, that anything in these rules or anything in the act will make it necessary for an honorably conducted business to be discontinued or radically curtailed. Nevertheless, it seems quite clear that every person whose business is in any way affected by the act can carry it on in safety only if he makes a thorough study and analysis of the act.

Investors, on the other hand, for whose protection the act was passed, should not feel that the act insures them against stock market losses. It does not even attempt to do this. It attempts merely to assure them an honest deal.

MONETARY USE AND PURCHASE OF SILVER

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H.R. 9745) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is an agreement for an equal division of time between the two sides of the Chamber between now and 3 o'clock. I ask unanimous consent that the time of this side of the Chamber be controlled by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and the time on the other side of the aisle be controlled by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. How much time does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has announced that he will take an hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the measure before us is an important monetary-reform measure. Devout followers of monometallism confess to disappointment over the result of the efforts to force the gold standard upon the world. There is almost universal feeling that the present monetary and fiscal policies of governments have failed to meet their demands or the needs of the people themselves. Many who were apostles of the gold standard have abandoned their faith in its monetary competency and are searching for some financial and monetary system that will aid in relieving the world from economic, industrial, and financial collapse.

The students of finance and monetary questions seem to be groping in the dark as to the course to be pursued in order that stable monetary policies may be devised and maintained.

Repeating, it is manifest that an attempt to chain the world to the gold standard has brought disaster to nations and ruin to hundreds of millions of people.

The world has made great progress in science, and the forces of nature have been made the servants of the people for their advancement and profit in multitudinous ways. But with all these developments there has been unsatisfactory progress in meeting the fiscal and monetary needs of the people. Much has been written about money and the science of money, but there is still bewilderment and confusion, if not profound ignorance, in regard to this important question, so vital to the welfare of the people and the integrity of governments.

The age of barter belonged to primitive peoples, but even they learned that if progress were to be made, some system of exchange, some standard of value, some circulating medium must be found; and little by little instruments to facilitate trade and commerce were devised, and higher forms of civilization were assured. It has become axiomatic that money in the broad sense in which it is usually applied is a powerful factor in the progress and development of communities and nations. It is a civilizing agency, the importance of which has been demonstrated as the centuries have passed.

As an example of the importance of money one need only challenge attention to the rise and fall of nations. The Roman Empire is a classical example of this fact. It has been stated that Rome's advancement was in part measured by the gold and silver that came to her treasuries and were put into circulation among the people. The equivalent of nearly $2,000,000,000 of these precious metals were carried into trade and commerce, and met the monetary and financial needs of individuals, Provinces, and Rome itself, when the Empire was at its zenith. As the golden and silver treasures from within and without her borders were poured into her Provinces and into the seat of the Empire, trade and commerce were developed, industries were established, peoples of different races were brought into closer contact, a spirit of independence and courage and hope quickened the minds and hearts of the people, and life took on new meaning.

Later, however, when these monetary treasures were dissipated and lost, so that within the boundaries of the Empire there remained less than two hundred million, the intellectual, moral, and industrial gains of centuries were largely lost and millions of people were enveloped in darkness.

Historians, publicists, financial experts—all essay the task of exploring what many regard as the great mystery—money. Many thousands of volumes have been written to elucidate this subject and in advocacy of monetary and financial policies the various writers deemed important contributions to the solution of the problem which many regarded as insoluble. In our own day, we have financial experts, monetary reformers, professors of the science of money, theorists, pragmatists, and an unlimited number of pseudo-philosophers whose knowledge of the subject is as defective as was the chemical knowledge of the alchemists of old.

That the world today is sick from monetary maladies is conceded; and many nostrums have been administered which have aggravated the situation, if they did not speed the hour of dissolution of the patient. That the financial system of our own Government, since the demonetization of silver, has proven unsatisfactory, I think few will dispute.

The founders of the Republic wrote into the Constitution words indicating that gold and silver were to be the basic moneys of the new Republic. The Constitution takes cognizance of these metals. They were known to Washington, Hamilton, and Jefferson, as well as to the colonists. The Spanish silver dollar was a visitor in every home in the colonial period, as well as in the early days of the Republic. The relation between silver and gold, the ratio which they bore to each other for monetary purposes, the purchasing power of each, their importance as measures of value as stores of wealth—all these matters were understood by the founders from Hamilton and Robert Morris down to the humblest in the land. With the valuable lessons learned from the pages of experience, our fathers gave to the American people a sound and honest monetary system which was adequate for the young Republic and for succeeding generations.

But I shall recur to this matter later. For the present I desire to invite attention to the measure before us, and to the message of the President of the United States which accompanied its presentation to the Congress.

Preliminarily, may I say that various measures have been introduced in this and preceding Congresses upon the postulate that the gold-standard policy of our Government was inadequate to meet its requirements or the needs of the people. Since the demonetization or the destandardization of silver in 1873, there has been an almost unbroken volume of protest against gold monometallism and against financial policies written into the laws of our country. Political battles have been fought over the money question; but, notwithstanding the defeats of those who believed in a broader metallic base, and the restoration of silver to its proper monetary status, the question has not been regarded as settled by millions of American citizens.

In this Congress measures have been introduced in both branches, some calling for the remonetization of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1; some providing for the addition of silver to the monetary stocks of the country and making it coequal with gold.

Since the demonetization of silver by act of Congress in 1873 attempts have been made from time to time to have silver restored to its proper monetary status, but the single gold standard forces circumvented all efforts and united with the gold monometallists in all parts of the world to destroy silver as basic money and force the single gold standard upon the peoples of all countries.

With the defeat of the Democratic Party in 1896, it was believed that the single gold standard was forever riveted upon the American people, but there were millions of American citizens who were not satisfied with the monetary policy which then was adopted for this Republic and insisted that there should be a return to the bimetallic policy adopted by Hamilton and the founders of the Republic.

During the past 3 years, resolutions and measures have been offered in both Houses of Congress for the purpose of awakening the American people to the imperative necessity of broadening our metallic base by making silver basic money. Three years ago I offered a resolution challenging attention to the inadequacy of the gold standard, and requesting the President of the United States to call an international conference for the purpose of securing an international agreement looking to the remonetization of silver.

At a number of international conferences held during the past 3 years, the so-called "silver question" has been the subject of serious consideration. At the Economic Conference held in London in 1933, the silver question occupied an important place upon the agenda. I think it has been generally conceded that the gold standard was not meeting the monetary demands of the world and that steps must be taken to increase the use of silver for monetary purposes.

An agreement was entered into by some of the most important nations there participating, which called for an important change in their attitude toward silver for monetary purposes.

The Democratic Party at the convention which nominated Mr. Roosevelt for the Presidency declared in effect in favor of the rehabilitation of silver. Mr. Roosevelt during the campaign took cognizance of the growing demands for legislation looking to the restoration of silver to its former monetary status, and since his election he has given evidence of his belief in the importance of legislation looking to the attainment of that end.

By the act of May 12, 1933, the President was authorized by proclamation to fix the weight of the gold dollar in grains nine-tenths fine, and also to fix the weight of the silver dollar in grains nine-tenths fine, at a definite fixed ratio in relation to the gold dollar, at such amounts as he finds necessary from his investigation to stabilize domestic prices or to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of the depreciated foreign currencies; and he was also authorized by proclamation to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed. Not since silver was demonetized has a Chief Executive of the Nation evinced so sincere a desire for legislation for the rehabilitation of silver as has President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

In dealing with the so-called "silver question" he has exhibited that high quality of courage which has characterized his treatment of economic, industrial, and other questions which have engaged his attention. President Roosevelt has not been terrified by the threats of the gold monometallists, or frightened because of the menacing attitude of the reactionaries who have opposed his policies, and attempted to thwart the plans which he has formulated to lift our country out of the depression and to bring again prosperity to the American people. He found our financial system inadequate to meet the needs of the people, and he has inaugurated measures, the object of which has been to increase the purchasing power of the people and to aid them in escaping from the valley of darkness and depression into which they were plunged by unsound and, indeed, disastrous economic, industrial, and financial policies.

He found our own Nation overwhelmed with debt, and the world bowed beneath financial obligations which many believe will never be discharged.

During the past 2 or 3 months there have been frequent conferences by Members of the House and Senate looking to the enactment of legislation that would strengthen the metallic base upon which rests the currencies and credits of our country.

As might be expected, there were divergent views as to the kind of legislation to be enacted. It was found that with the entrenched forces battling for the gold standard, there would be difficulty in securing legislation which many desired. There were some sincere and ardent bimetallists who believed that an international agreement was necessary in order to secure the highest and best monetary results. Others believed that the United States alone could successfully maintain bimetallism. There were others who believed that the ultimate goal of genuine bimetallism could only be reached by progressive measures, including the addition of silver to the monetary stock of the Government. Several months ago, a number of Senators met for the purpose of discussing the so-called "silver question", and adopted a resolution which, in substance, declared in favor of bimetallism. Later, other conferences were held by these Senators, at one of which a committee of seven was selected, of which I had the honor to be chairman, to confer with the President and Treasury officials and Members of the House and the Senate with a view of agreeing upon some measure which might be enacted into law during the present session of Congress. This committee earnestly addressed itself to the task before it. I am betraying no confidence in stating that the President freely discussed with members of the committee the various suggestions and propositions submitted, and evinced a sincere desire to cooperate in securing legislation that would improve our monetary system and materially increase the monetary metallic stock of our country. At the final meeting between the committee and the President and the Secretary of the Treasury and Mr. Oliphant, the legal adviser of the Treasury Department, a proposed bill was presented and discussed, and an understanding reached that it would be submitted by the President for consideration by the Congress.

Within a few days thereafter the President sent to Congress a most important message accompanying the bill which passed the House and is now before the Senate for action. In the President's message, he refers to the London Conference and the approved agreement on silver which has been ratified by all governments party to the same. Under that agreement, a larger use of silver for monetary purposes is contemplated; and, as the President indicates, silver has assumed a more important place in the monetary structure of this and other countries. Following the London agreement, the President, as is stated in his message, adopted measures "which laid the foundation on which we are organizing a currency system that will be both sound and adequate. It is a long step forward, but only a step."

Mr. President, this statement by the President indicates that the administration is proceeding in the work of organizing a currency system that will be sound and adequate. It is apparent that the President does not consider our present monetary system adequate to meet the needs of the American people.

The President further adds in his message:

> As a part of the larger objectives, some things have been clear. One is that we should move forward as rapidly as conditions permit in broadening the metallic base of our monetary system and in stabilizing the purchasing and debt-paying power of our money on a more equitable level. Another is that we should not neglect the value of an increased use of silver in improving our monetary system. Since 1929, that has been obvious.

Permit me to add at this point that undoubtedly the President associates the debacle in 1929 with the inadequacy of the gold standard to meet the commercial demands of the people and the monetary requirements of both the Government and the people.

The President further adds that—

> Some measures for making a greater use of silver in the public interest are appropriate for independent action by us.

May I say to my friends who are insisting upon an immediate measure for bimetallism that the President obviously contemplates that this measure, when enacted, will be supplemented by others, either by the United States acting independently or by an international agreement with respect to the remonetization of silver.

He suggests increasing the proportion of silver in the abundant metallic reserves back of our paper money, and refers to the fact that this policy was initiated by the proclamation of December 21, 1933—> bringing our current domestic production of silver into the Treasury, as well as placing this Nation among the first to carry out the agreement on silver which we sought and secured at the London Conference.

He further adds:

> We have since acquired other silver in the interest of stabilization of foreign exchange and the development of a broader metallic base for our currency.

The President further suggests that it will be helpful to have legislation broadening the authority for the "further acquisition and monetary use of silver."

It is manifest that the President is not satisfied with the monetary or financial policy of the Government, and that he is desirous of giving to silver a more important position in our monetary system and of placing it alongside gold as a basis for the support of our currencies and credits. He is not seeking Executive authority for the acquisition of silver merely for use as subsidiary coin; but the message indicates his belief that it should be acquired to strengthen our metallic base, to increase the amount of our monetary stocks, and to augment our circulating medium, so important in commercial transactions and in all functions discharged by basic or standard money.

Mr. President, we are not engaged in a futile undertaking. Neither the President nor those supporting this measure are indulging in idle gestures. The question before us is one of profound significance. I might say that the policy with respect to silver, and which this measure is designed to carry into effect, inaugurated by President Roosevelt, is epochal, and the beneficent effects flowing therefrom will not be confined to this Nation, but will bear fruits throughout the world. The contribution of our Government to the establishment and maintenance of a better and more just financial and monetary system will also promote the welfare of all peoples. A sound financial policy in this or in any other great nation will have important repercussions in all nations. The effect of monetary policies of a nation cannot be restricted. They will reach and affect other countries. Notwithstanding the follies of peoples and nations, their selfishness and provincialism, their efforts to isolate themselves and to ignore the fact that humanity has interests in common, the moral, spiritual, and progressive forces operating in the world frustrate such purposes and make for increased cooperation among communities and nations. A wise and sound monetary system in the United States will have its effect throughout the world. Its example will influence other governments, and its successful efforts to devise and maintain sound financial policies will have a profound influence among all nations.

I stated that the policy of the President, as indicated by the message and the steps which he has taken as Chief Executive, were so important as to be denominated epochal. They are a challenge to the sufficiency of the monetary system of the world today. They are a plea for the reconstruction of these systems. They are an appeal to reason and are calculated to compel statesmen to reexamine the basis of their monetary and financial systems with a view to discovering their imperfections and weaknesses, in order that there may be developed and maintained sounder and more just systems which, in their operations, will not crush and devour individuals and communities as have financial systems of the past, and even of the present. With the peoples and governments of the world bowed beneath colossal debts, with increasing deficits and mounting burdens of taxation, with declining prices of commodities, with mortgages which are chains of bondage unpaid and unpayable, it is imperative that in this and other lands there should be a resolute purpose to meet this desperate and appalling situation by measures, national and international in their operations, that will not only ameliorate the situation but will also open the gates to individual, national, and international financial freedom.

I shall recur to this subject later in my remarks, however. For the moment, I desire briefly to consider the bill before us.

There has developed some opposition to the bill before us, but in the main it came from supporters of the single gold standard—the gold monometallists. Of course I make no criticism of those who are satisfied with the gold standard, although I invite their attention to the fact that it has been abandoned by nearly all nations of the world. Even Great Britain, supposed to have been the impregnable financial fortress of the world, with the foundations of the fortress laid deep in gold, was compelled to surrender, and to confess that gold was not sufficient to meet her monetary requirements. I may say in passing that Mr. Keynes, who a few years ago was a protagonist of the gold-standard fallacy, now confesses it is insufficient, and argues for a regulated currency. He recently wrote:

> The periods when the supply of gold was such as to make it capable of serving the needs of the world's principal medium of currency have been rare and intermittent. If any metal is to make this claim on the basis of long historical experience, it must be silver, not gold.

Our own Government, with the crashing of thousands of banks, and the sweep of financial distress carrying ruin and calamity to individuals and communities in every part of our land, was compelled to depart from the gold standard, and later it devaluated gold. Then followed the inauguration of a policy the objective of which is the broadening of the metallic base of our monetary system, and the stabilizing of the purchasing and debt-paying power of our money on a more equitable level, by restoring silver to the exalted station which it occupied until 1873.

Mr. President, this bill declares a national policy, and that declaration is a pledge that the policy will be executed. It is not a temporary measure; it is not a temporary policy, but a national policy, permanent in character.

Section 2 declares it to be the policy of the United States that a proportion of silver to gold in the monetary stocks of the United States should be increased with the ultimate objective of having and maintaining one-fourth of the monetary value of such stocks in silver.

I repeat, this is a declaration of a permanent policy—not an emergency or temporary undertaking. The policy declares that the objective is not merely to make but also to maintain silver as one-fourth of the monetary value of our stocks of precious metals. Past legislation robbed silver of its high position, and enthroned gold as the sole basic metal in the monetary stocks of the Government.

It may not be inappropriate to refer to the declaration of the policy declared by Congress on March 1, 1893, which is still a part of the law of the land. That law reads:

> It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money, and to coin both gold and silver into money of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, such equality to be secured through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as will insure the maintenance of the parity of value of the coins of the two metals, and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts. And it is hereby declared that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetallism as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States, in the markets and in the payment of debts.

This declaration of policy made in 1893 was reaffirmed by the unrepealed act of Congress on March 1, 1897, and again by the unrepealed act of Congress on March 14, 1900.

But the bill now before the Senate does not end, as these prior enactments have, with a mere declaration of policy, important as that may be. It proceeds in section 3, both to "authorize and direct" the Secretary of the Treasury to make the purchases of silver necessary to effectuate this policy. That is mandatory legislation.

I may say that in the discussions which culminated in the bill before us it was unanimously agreed that the provision for this purchase of silver should be mandatory in character, and I am privileged to state that, notwithstanding some of the newspaper reports to the contrary, the Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Oliphant, his assistant, were hospitable to suggestions made by the committee calling for a broad, comprehensive measure that would contain mandatory premium for the purchase of silver to be added to our monetary stock.

While the bill leaves some discretion in the executive branch of the Government as to the time at which, and the amounts of which silver shall be bought for the purpose of carrying out the declared policy of the Government to increase the use of silver, as a part of the reserves back of our currency, nevertheless the bill solemnly declares that it is a fixed policy of the United States to have and maintain one-fourth of the monetary value of its monetary stocks in silver. These provisions of the bill give silver the same status, prestige, monetary power, virtue, authority and validity as that possessed by gold. If gold (using the term employed by some Senators and others) is basic or primary money, then silver is also made primary money, and silver and gold linked together constitute the foundation or base upon which rests currencies, as well as the credits of the country.

Mr. President, this is a long step forward in the restoration of the monetary system which was established by Hamilton and maintained until 1873.

Section 3 not only authorizes but directs the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver at home or abroad for present or future delivery with any direct obligations, coins or currency of the United States authorized by law, or with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in order that the one-fourth of the monetary stocks of silver shall be secured.

There has been considerable discussion by Senators and others interested in monetary legislation, as to whether legislation for the purchase of silver should be directory or mandatory. The language of this section leaves no room for doubt. It is mandatory in character and is an obligation resting upon the Secretary which he may not escape.

It is true, as I have indicated that there is some limited discretion as to the times when silver is to be purchased, but it is mandatory that purchases shall be made, and that the declared policy of the Government shall be carried out. No one can doubt that if this bill shall be passed, solemnly declaring as a fixed policy of the United States, that the executive branch of the Government will fail to diligently and in all good faith carry out such policy so expressed.

Mr. President, I am privileged to state that not only the President of the United States has said that he will enthusiastically address himself to the execution of the terms of the bill, but the Secretary of the Treasury has stated that he, too, is enthusiastically supporting the bill, and in all of its implications will diligently and faithfully carry its terms into effect.

It is obvious that if the Treasury, in the acquisition of silver, were required to purchase certain quantities of silver at certain times and in definite amounts, the Government would be at the mercy of speculators, not only here, but in London and in the Orient. We know that there have been gold speculators and persons who have speculated in silver. There have also been speculators in agricultural commodities; and not infrequently the public has been the victim of unscrupulous individuals who have made enormous profits in their immoral and illegal operations. During the Civil War there were speculators and gamblers in gold, and there were individuals so unpatriotic that when Lincoln and others were trying to save the Union, they conspired and confederated to make profits by speculating in the Treasury notes which Congress had issued. The low price to which the so-called "greenbacks" fell, was in part due to the deliberate, not to say criminal, speculative movements, carried out by these unpatriotic citizens. Obviously, wisdom dictates that there shall be some discretion given the executive branch of the Government in this matter. In view of the mandate and the policy, we must trust it to carry out the same.

Section 3 provides that when the stated proportion of silver has been secured, or when the market price of the same passes its present monetary value of $1.29 per ounce, purchases shall cease. The propriety of this provision is so manifest that it needs no elaboration. I might add, however, that any price up to $1.29 per ounce may be paid for silver in foreign markets and in the United States, after the present surplus in the United States has been dealt with. The section also provides that purchases of silver situated in continental United States on May 1, 1934, shall be made at a price not in excess of 50 cents a fine ounce. That provision is for the purpose of meeting a situation which many believe justifies its enactment. Undoubtedly there is silver within continental United States which has been purchased for speculative purposes at prices much less than 50 cents an ounce. If, by Government action, a limitation is placed upon these transactions, and profits are made therefrom, it is believed that the profits so made should be taxed, and provision is made in the bill to meet conditions of this kind.

Under this view it is proper that a reasonable limitation should be placed upon the price which may be paid for present accumulations of silver in this country, but it is to be noted that any price up to $1.29 per ounce can be paid for silver in foreign markets as well as in this country after such present accumulations are dealt with. Should the price of silver rise above $1.29 per ounce, the result would be that silver dollars would be melted down to the great detriment of the public interest. For that reason section 4 of the bill authorizes the Secretary to sell silver when its market price exceeds its monetary value of $1.29 per ounce or when the stocks of silver are greater than 25 percent of the stocks of gold and silver.

Section 4 is a necessary and proper complement to the preceding sections. It provides that so long as the market price of silver exceeds its monetary value, that is, $1.29 an ounce, or the monetary value of the stocks of silver is greater than 25 percent of the monetary value of the stocks of gold and silver, the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the President, and subject to provisions of section 5, may sell any silver acquired under the act for present or future delivery, at such rates and at such times and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem reasonable and most advantageous to the public interest. The language of the section is clear and needs no explanation. The purpose of the act being to acquire silver for monetary stocks and at a price not exceeding the monetary value, then it necessarily follows that authority should be given to dispose of silver in order that the situation provided in the bill may be maintained.

Section 5 contains provisions of major importance. Section 3 authorizes and directs the purchase of silver, but section 5 makes it mandatory, that there shall be issued and put into circulation against all silver bought under the authority of this proposed legislation, silver certificates in a face amount not less than the cost of all silver so purchased. This means that the currency of the Nation must necessarily be expanded to the full extent of the market value of all silver purchased under the act. The important words in the section are that the Secretary is "directed to issue * * * not less than." In addition to this mandatory provision, the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 authorizes the issuance of silver certificates against any silver in the Treasury from whatever source derived, and under that law, unaltered by this bill, if any certificates are issued they must be issued on the basis of $1.29 per ounce.

It is to meet the mandatory provisions of this bill that one-fourth of the monetary stocks shall be silver, that the Government will be required to purchase more than a billion ounces of silver. Payment will be made for the same by the issuance of silver certificates which, as the bill provides, shall be legal tender, and have all the validity and qualities of gold certificates or any other money, specie, or currency of the Government.

Indeed, the section guarantees that silver certificates shall be just as good as any coin or currency of the United States. Ample silver reserves must be maintained back of these silver certificates, at the present statutory rate of $1.29 per ounce. They are made redeemable in standard silver dollars, and, as I have stated, will be made legal tender not merely for all debts, public and private, but also for all public charges, taxes, debts, and dues. This is the legal-tender provision now applicable to all forms of our money, and is reproduced, so to speak, in the measure before us.

The suggestion has been made that silver certificates should be issued on the basis that they would be redeemable in an amount of silver which a gold dollar would buy at the then current market price of silver.

I do not subscribe to this view. It seems to me that it would be a most unfortunate admission of the superiority of gold as a yardstick of value; it would disturb the present status of half a billion of silver certificates now outstanding, and it would add absolutely nothing to the standing or value of silver certificates either in the United States or in foreign countries. It has been suggested that it would lessen the demand for gold and thus relieve the strain upon gold reserves. I do not regard that position as sound. Even though silver certificates were made redeemable in the amount of silver purchasable at its current market price with a gold dollar, no holder of a silver certificate would have any reason for taking advantage of this statutory privilege.

So long as there are world markets in silver, the provision would be a complete nullity. The suggestion it seems to me, overlooks an elementary and inescapable fact. Any holder, foreign or domestic, could take his silver certificates into the open market and obtain the same quantity of silver for the same, that he could get from the United States Treasury. There would be therefore, no occasion for the holder to go to the Treasury with silver certificates in order to exchange them for silver. The silver in the Treasury is money the same as gold, performing all the functions that gold performs; it is a reserve the same as gold, for any silver certificates issued and outstanding. Certificates issued in payment for such Treasury silver, as I have stated, constitute genuine money, not token money, but real, lawful money of the United States which, in the hands of creditors or debtors is as good as gold certificates or any coin or currency issued by the Government of the United States.

I repeat that any suggestion that the market price of silver should be used in determining whether or not one-fourth of the monetary stocks is in silver, is subject to the fundamental objection that it degrades the status of silver from that of a monetary metal to that of a mere commodity. Market price necessarily means dollar value in gold. To evaluate our monetary stocks of silver at its market price means to measure its value in gold and hence to treat it as any other commodity in such evaluation.

If the suggestion is made with the thought that it would require the purchase of more silver in order to attain 25 percent, it probably overlooks the fact that it would not increase by 1 ounce the amount of silver which would have to be bought, if in the course of such purchases, silver reaches a market price of $1.29 an ounce.

Mr. President, I hazard the opinion, and it is a conviction, that under the operation of this bill the price of silver will steadily rise until it reaches $1.29 an ounce before we have attained the one-fourth of silver stock for which the bill calls.

This bill provides for the redemption of silver certificates in standard silver dollars, which means redemption in silver on the basis of its monetary value—that is, statutory price—of $1.29 per ounce. This provision gives silver certificates the full status of money. They have all the legal tender attributes that all other forms of United States coin or currency have, and the Government is bound at all times to maintain their purity with all other coin and currency. This is the basis on which over half billion of silver certificates that are now outstanding have been issued.

The situation is different for gold because, except in London, there is no effective open market for gold bullion. Hence the central banks or the mints are the only convenient places for obtaining gold bullion at a standard price. Not only would the suggested provision fail to accomplish the end sought by those proposing it, but it would have numerous unfortunate results: Thus (1) as I have suggested, it would bring into question the status of the half billion of silver certificates which are now outstanding and concerning which no question has ever been raised. A silver dollar is worth what it states upon its face; not its bullion value. If suggestions made by some critics of this bill were carried out the result would be that the silver dollar would have a valuation for bullion purposes, not a valuation for monetary purposes; (2) it would decrease the amount of silver certificates which could be issued against silver owned by the Government; (3) it would be a step backward because the whole tendency today is away from making currency redeemable in bullion except for shipment abroad in settlement of international balances; and finally, (4) to repeat, to measure the monetary value of silver in gold, as this suggestion proposes, would constitute an unfortunate admission of superior merit of gold as a yardstick of value. In addition such a redemption provision would introduce a multitude of administrative difficulties in determining and providing the needed silver reserves which would shift from day to day and from hour to hour. We have never had a form of money redeemable in a fluctuating quantity of precious metal.

I stated that the suggestion that the redemption of silver certificates in silver, meets the whole point involved in the rehabilitation of silver. The core of that problem is making silver worth in the silver markets of the world $1.29 per ounce which is what the law of this land declares to be its monetary value.

It also fails to take cognizance of the purpose and language of the bill, that silver is made a part of our monetary stocks, and as I have stated, is with gold, the foundation upon which rests currencies and credits.

This measure goes straight to the heart of the problem, because it provides for the purchase of silver in quantities designed to restore the metal to its proper place in the markets and commerce of the world. That it will accomplish that result I verily believe. All who are interested in the restoration of silver to its proper place in our monetary system and in broadening the base of our entire monetary structure, must, I believe, reach this conclusion.

This bill seeks to put silver in its proper place. When silver has again attained its monetary value, the first thing to be done will have been accomplished.

Section 6 of the bill provides important reserve instrumentalities, should they be needed for the protection of the public interest in the execution of the silver policy declared in this proposed legislation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, with the approval of the President, to investigate, regulate, or prohibit by means of license or otherwise, the purchase, importation, or exportation of silver, and of contracts whenever necessary to prevent a frustration of the policy announced in this measure. That will be, in my opinion, effective to prevent attempts among silver holders to dictate the terms under which silver purchases by the Government are made.

Section 7 is equally important. It gives the Executive authority power to take over the excess stocks of silver in this country upon payment of just compensation. It is important that this authority be among the implements which the Executive authority may use, if required, in the process of making the policy of this legislation an actuality. While the bill lacks none of the vigor necessary for the purpose in hand, it is drawn with commendable restraint. Thus, it provides for the acquisition of existing silver stocks in this country by voluntary sale to the Government, if they can be obtained in that manner, but further provides for their acquisition by eminent domain if that should become necessary in the public interest.

I wish to say a word about the part of the bill providing for a tax of 50 percent on profits accruing from dealing in silver. The quantities of silver which would have to be purchased in carrying out the policy of this act are of such magnitude that large profits would accrue to some speculative holders of this metal, as its market price approached its monetary value of $1.29 an ounce. Unless some of our gold is released for the purchase of silver or is otherwise disposed of, over a billion and a third ounces of silver will have to be purchased. The total floating supply of silver in this country, not required for industry, is probably about 150,000,000 ounces, and the total excess of silver which has come on the world markets during recent years from the debasement of the currencies of other nations, has been estimated at about three-quarters of a billion ounces. Much of this has probably disappeared as precious metals do. Therefore, the probable available supplies of silver are such that purchases of silver of the magnitude contemplated by this proposed legislation cannot be made without a rise in its world price that will result in substantial profits to speculative dealers in this metal. And, since this increase in value would result from governmental action, it is only right and just that a portion of the profits realized should be paid into the public treasury.

In his message of May 24, the President stated that—

> There should be a tax of at least 50 percent on the profits accruing from dealing in silver.

Section 8 of the bill seeks to carry out the President's recommendation. An examination of this impost, its purpose and affects, its incidence and burdens, its advantages and disadvantages, as a part of our monetary plan presented, warrants the conclusion, I believe, that it is a proper and just feature of this program.

As indicated, the primary object which is sought to be accomplished by this proposed legislation is the improvement of our monetary system through the broadening and strengthening of its metallic base. Its purpose, likewise, is to increase the circulating medium and to that extent, increase commodity prices and contribute to increased industrial and commercial activity.

This measure seeks to develop further the monetary uses of silver, the result of which must be improved business conditions. Undoubtedly the enactment of this measure will stimulate the domestic mining industry with the consequent increase in employment in that industry and in other industries which are directly or indirectly associated with it.

There is one group to which I have referred which will be affected by this provision; a group that neither produces silver nor consumes it, but deals in silver. This group seeks only a profit resulting from the success or failure of the efforts of others, from the action or inaction of the Government, in fact, from all the chances or mischances of life. These are the speculators. It is they who have guessed, perhaps shrewdly, that the Government would take steps similar to those indicated in this bill and are ready to glean, without effort, large profits. It is believed by many that under these circumstances they should not be the sole beneficiaries of their speculative activities.

There were many in the House of Representatives, as I am advised, when this bill was under consideration, who believed that the entire profits of these speculators should inure to the benefit of the Government. The tax seeks to deal in a fair way with this situation through governmental action.

Undoubtedly the price of silver will be enhanced. In that event silver and the contracts for its delivery would be bought and held by those who perhaps never saw a silver mine, nor even purchased silver for industrial purposes.

They have been content to permit the Government to make a profit for them.

It would seem that this is an unearned increment in which the Government is warranted in sharing.

The tax in this bill is levied upon "all transfers of any interest in silver bullion", but does not extend to transfers by deposit or delivery to the United States Mint under proclamation by the President, nor to transfers in compliance with any Executive order issued pursuant to section 7. Whom does it reach? The American producer will have no tax to pay, for the President's proclamation of December 21, 1933, permits all domestically mined silver to be deposited at the mints. Under the provisions of this bill, industry will pay no tax for the use of silver because only the profits on the sale of silver bullion are taxed. Only the speculator, or at most, the speculator and the middleman—the broker—will be forced to pay a tax. They will, of course, collect their commissions and will have a profit over and above the tax, equal to the amount of the tax.

It is argued by some that this tax will injure the silver market in the United States. It will tend to limit excessive and improper speculation, but not legitimate and proper market transactions.

If there had been legitimate efforts made to prevent the gambling and orgy of speculation in 1926, it would have been advantageous to the American people. The bill before us attempts to place silver, like gold, under governmental control, and henceforth, like gold, to affect it with a major public interest. Dealings in silver, like dealings in gold, should be primarily the Government's business; at any rate they should not be the speculator's business.

If the President and Secretary of the Treasury, in their efforts to carry out the policy established by this bill, were to be placed at the mercy of the silver speculators, it might interfere with the execution of the policy herein declared. Silver is not to be merely something on which traders may make a profit, but an instrument by the use of which a wise government may improve the condition of all the people.

I might add that there is need of revenue in view of the magnitude of governmental expenditures. The revenue which will be derived from this tax provision will, perhaps, not be great, but it will come, as I have indicated, from profits produced by governmental action, not from human effort and labor.

Mr. President, I have a chart here which I wish Senators would examine. I think it demonstrates that the tax provision of the bill will not injuriously affect the so-called "silver market" in the United States, but, on the contrary, will have a most salutary effect in the stabilization of prices and prevention of violent fluctuations which so often occur when gamblers and speculators intrude themselves into the business and industrial life of the people. An examination of this chart indicates that there was considerable speculation in the buying of silver futures, as indicated by these irregular lines [exhibiting], but when the President's message was announced, as indicated by the black arrow upon the chart, it shows that the silver market was not destroyed, as some may claim, but it was steadied, and the sales and purchases of silver became more uniform. Prior to that time, there were irregular purchases and evident speculation, which undoubtedly were injurious to many people.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In view of the endorsement by the able Senator from Utah of the tax feature of the pending bill, may I ask him whether he has made any calculation as to the probable purchases of silver under the bill which will or may accrue to the benefit of speculators?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have heard various figures stated, but my information is not sufficiently definite to justify my submitting figures with a certificate as to their accuracy. Undoubtedly, there will be several hundred million ounces of silver purchased.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Has the Senator incorporated in his informative address any statement as to the maximum amount of silver which the Treasury Department or the Executive branch of the Government will be directed to purchase under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in my opinion—and that is the opinion of the Treasury Department—the Treasury will purchase approximately 1,300,000,000 ounces of silver, and that will be the basis of the issuance of silver certificates.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Those purchases will be made, will they not, in order to bring about the proportion called for by the pending bill, as compared with the present proportion of silver to our basic metallic supply?

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly, and I may add, in reply to my friend from Colorado, that there may be some difficulty in obtaining 1,300,000,000 ounces of silver, but, of course, in the sincere effort to carry out the provisions of this bill and to purchase this quantity, silver is bound to rise until, as I stated a few moments ago, silver will reach $1.29 an ounce, the old historic value; and when that day shall come bimetallism will have arrived.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, does the Senator plan to insert this graph in the RECORD?

Mr. KING. If I could, under the rule, I should be glad to do so.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me, I asked to have a graph printed in connection with what I had to say on this question a few days ago, but the Printer called me up and said that it could not be printed without the consent of the Joint Committee on Printing. I think that it is important to have this graph inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he is advised, in order to have the graph printed in the RECORD, the consent of the Joint Committee on Printing will first have to be obtained.

Mr. KING. I will ask unanimous consent to have it inserted in the RECORD providing, under the rules of the Senate, it may be printed.

Mr. President, the draft of the bill carefully exempts from taxation the users of silver for industrial and similar purposes, and leaves tax-free newly mined silver now being disposed of to the Government under Presidential proclamation, with a further and more general provision exempting from this tax legitimate producers of silver who market their metal as it is produced, to whomever they may in the future sell it.

Mr. President, this bill constitutes but one part of the firm and orderly policy of the administration with reference to silver and other monetary matters. The President's message, and particularly the latter part of it wherein he refers to making both gold and silver, on some coordinated basis, a standard of monetary value, challenges our attention. This is an explicit reference to a reversal of the action so disastrous to silver which was taken when in 1873 it was demonetized, or, more accurately, destandardized by the party then in power. This, as I have stated, is an epoch-making pronouncement in our monetary history. I call particular attention to the significance of the following declaration in the President's message:

* * * to arrive at that point.

That point, I may say, being the use of both gold and silver as a yardstick of value—

We must seek every possibility for world agreement, although—

Now mark these words—

it may turn out that this Nation will ultimately have to take such independent action on this phase of the matter as its interests require.

No wonder, Mr. President, that the adherents of the gold standard see in Mr. Roosevelt a friend of silver, a friend of the monetary system which was adopted by the fathers of the Republic. His message indicates a purpose to carry out a policy that will achieve the object to which I have referred.

Again President Roosevelt said in his message:

The ebb and flow of values in almost all parts of the world have created many points of pressure for readjustments of internal and international standards. At no time since the efforts of this Nation to secure international agreement on silver began in 1878 have conditions been more favorable for making progress along this line.

The final sentence of the message is:

* * * such an agreement would constitute an important step forward toward a monetary unit of value more equitable and stable in its purchasing and debt-paying power. * * *

I submit to the Senate that that is a statement of an unshaken purpose to move forward vigorously to a monetary structure more just and equitable in the evaluation of commodities and in the liquidation of debts. This message sounds the same note as that struck by the President in his radio address to the people of the United States on October 22, 1933, when he announced an orderly purpose and plan to restore commodity prices. The present bill is but a part of that plan. The language used on that occasion needs repeating:

* * * Finally, I repeat what I have said on many occasions, that ever since last March the definite policy of the Government has been to restore commodity price levels. The object has been the attainment of such a level as will enable agriculture and industry once more to give work to the unemployed. It has been to make possible the payment of public and private debts more nearly at the price level at which they were incurred. It has been gradually to restore a balance in the price structure, so that farmers may exchange their products for the products of industry on a fairer exchange basis. It has been and is also the purpose to prevent prices from rising beyond the point necessary to attain these ends. The permanent welfare and security of every class of our people ultimately depends on our attainment of these purposes. * * * Obviously, and because hundreds of different kinds of crops and industrial occupations in the huge territory that makes up this Nation are involved, we cannot reach the goal in only a few months. We may take 1 year or 2 years or 3 years. * * * No one who considers the plain facts of our situation believes that commodity prices, especially agricultural prices, are high enough yet.

* * * Some people are putting the cart before the horse. They want a permanent revaluation of the dollar first. It is the Government's policy to restore the price level first. I would not know, and no one else could tell, just what the permanent valuation of the dollar will be. To guess at a permanent gold valuation now would certainly require later changes caused by later facts.

* * * When we have restored the price level, we shall seek to establish and maintain a dollar which will not change its purchasing and debt-paying power during the succeeding generation. I said that in my message to the American delegation in London last July. And I say it now once more.

The President in his message to the American people, which I have just quoted, reiterated a monetary policy that is a fixed part of the administration's program for dealing with the depression. When what he said on that occasion is read with what was stated in his message to the Congress on the gold bill and again in his message transmitting this bill to Congress, it becomes abundantly clear that both this bill and also the steps which he says are now under way to exhaust the possibility of international agreement on an improved standard of monetary value, are but two parts of a broad plan for the restoration of values destroyed by the depression, and for improving the monetary system under which our people work and live.

There is a growing conviction in many parts of the world that the gold standard has failed to meet the needs of the people and that silver must be restored to its former monetary status. As an evidence of this statement I invite the attention of the Senate to a manifesto issued by an organization in Great Britain, the members of which are among the leading statesmen, financiers, and industrialists of that country.

The manifesto declares in favor of the reintroduction of silver into the world's monetary system. It further states that as a first step the central banks might be authorized to keep a percentage of their—metallic currency reserves in silver, which would then become freely available for payment of international differences as well as in support of domestic currency reserves. The metallic basis of credit would thus be expanded and the level of commodity prices raised and kept higher and more constant than would be possible with gold alone.

The association further declares that it is its opinion that if as a result of an agreement between the British Empire and the United States and the cooperation of the French Republic—silver were reintroduced into the monetary system of the world the present depression would end and prices could be rendered comparatively stable on their higher level.

Mr. President, I ask that the manifesto of this association be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, earlier in my remarks I referred to a bill which I had offered in the Senate providing for bimetallism. That bill is pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency. I ask that at the conclusion of my remarks it be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, recently there have been a number of issues of the London Financial Times devoted to a discussion of the silver question. Some of the leading statesmen and industrialists of Great Britain contributed to the issues of the paper referred to. Among the persons referred to are: Sir Hugo Cunliffe-Owen, Bt., Sir Henri W. A. Deterding, Lord Hunsdon, Sir William Dampier, the Right Honorable L. S. Amery, M.P., Sir Robert Horne.

In these articles these distinguished British statesmen and industrialists discuss the importance of the rehabilitation of silver. They make it clear that the plan proposed in the bill under consideration rests upon a sound basis and if carried into execution will prove of inestimable benefit, not only to the people of the United States, but of all countries. With the limited time at my disposal, I shall not have time to read from the articles referred to, but ask unanimous consent to have excerpts from the same inserted in the RECORD without reading, at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before action is taken upon the bill, I shall have an opportunity to further discuss this important measure. It will, I am sure, receive the approval of the Senate. That it will prove of incalculable benefit to the people of the United States and, indeed, to the people of other countries, I have no doubt.

[From manifesto by the Silver Association]

The increasing strain placed upon our gold reserves from various causes drove this country to abandon the gold standard on September 21. This action has modified the situation by setting free the pound sterling to find that natural level which corresponds to a balance of trade. But it is inevitable that the question of the reestablishment of a metallic basis for credit should be discussed, and the silver association suggests that the advantages of employing silver should be carefully considered.

The importance that attaches to monetary systems, and in particular to price changes consequent on modifications of national and international monetary systems, has long been recognized. The voluminous records of half a dozen Royal commissions on the subject in the last 40 years testify to the difficulties with which successive generations of statesmen and administrators have been confronted in the task of adjusting the problems to which monetary changes have given rise, and the social and political disturbances which have followed in the wake of attendant economic complications. The world is now suffering from a catastrophic fall in prices ascribable, among other factors, to a shortage of gold arising largely from maldistribution. Owing to the war and its consequences, the United States of America and France have become world creditors. By means of high tariffs they refuse payments in goods, and they are not relending to the debtor countries. They have thus accumulated 60 percent of the world's stock of monetary gold, and, if war debts and reparations stand unmodified, this drain of money will continue. That which is left is not enough to carry the credit needed by the rest of the world, and prices have fallen catastrophically. The new creditor nations, holding contracts to be paid in gold, have thus lowered the value of their debtors' exports and left them no gold in which to pay. Even Great Britain has been forced to suspend payment in gold. The consequent fall in the value of the pound sterling, while producing some financial losses, has temporarily improved certain aspects of our trade position to the extent that it is stimulating exports and checking imports.

A DIMINISHING QUANTITY

The connection between war debts and tariffs, the maldistribution of gold and the present world depression, is becoming more clearly understood and remedial measures are under active consideration. It must, however, be borne in mind that, while the world's production of goods demands increasing currency and credit, the new gold available to meet monetary needs is likely, as the Macmillan report points out (par. 144–145), to be a diminishing quantity.

There is indeed a school of economists who dispute the necessity for a metallic basis. They point to the fact that already gold and silver coins are largely dispensed with as a circulating medium, that the sole use of our gold reserve today is to enable the country to meet obligations in its international balance of payments; they contend that a stable level of prices is more important than stable exchanges, and could be secured by the adjustment of credit in the light of index numbers based on commodities. Others think that, at the present time, the best course is to work for an economic league of those nations which will accept the pound sterling as the basis of their currency, with no link to gold or silver. It is, of course, conceivable that mankind may in time cease to demand a metallic basis for currency and credit, but those who, in the words of Mr. Francis W. Hirst (The Times, Nov. 6), "believe a metallic anchorage is indispensable, have to consider very carefully whether we can return to gold, and if so, on what terms; or whether a gold and silver basis (bimetallic or symmetallic) would be preferable."

The Silver Association holds that the world's monetary psychology still demands that currency and credit should rest upon tangible metallic substances possessing intrinsic, universally recognized value, easily stored, and easily transported. Experience shows that without such basis confidence in times of crisis gives way to panic and inflation becomes all too likely. The Silver Association is further convinced that if the need for a metallic basis be accepted the easiest and quickest way of restoring confidence, raising values, and stabilizing them when raised would be to widen the metallic basis of currency and restore confidence in silver, especially in the East, by reintroducing it into the world's monetary system. The question of silver is intimately bound up with the welfare of India and China. The facts that neither country exports silver to pay for its imports, that both normally have favorable trade balances, and that the amount of silver which each imports annually is determined by its trade surplus rather than the price at which the metal is offered do not invalidate the contention that both countries have suffered from the heavy fall in the value of silver which has taken place since 1928.

THE INDIAN PEASANT

India, which until recently was on a gold-bullion and is now on a sterling basis, invests, and has for centuries invested, much of its savings in silver. The popular sense of well-being is to a considerable extent dependent upon the value of such savings, and this dependence is rendered none the less real by the fact that a large proportion of the savings is frozen—that it takes, in other words, the form of hoards or ornaments. The realizable value of hoards and ornaments has been saved from catastrophic depreciation only by the imposition of an import duty on silver. Consequently the peasant who formerly enjoyed a comfortable feeling of prosperity and security now feels very much less certain of his position.

China uses silver in all her transactions, not only as a store, but also as a measure of value. Her people reckon prices in terms of dollars and taels and expand or contract their purchases of foreign goods in accordance with the number of dollars or taels which they must give for them. Many foreign goods, no doubt, still represent luxuries to Chinese buyers, and the hardship of deprivation ought not to be exaggerated. But some of the goods are no longer classifiable as luxuries. In the coastal regions they form part of the standard of life and affect the cost of living materially. In any case, diminished import of certain classes of goods, whether describable as luxuries or necessities, has contributed to the stagnation of the trade of the United Kingdom and of other countries. Similar considerations apply to Persia, which is not on the gold standard. At the sixth plenary meeting of the League of Nations, held on September 10, His Excellency M. Ala, the delegate of Persia, said:

"In addition to the main causes of the crisis to which previous speakers have referred, there is one to which the League's attention has not been sufficiently drawn. I refer to the loss in purchasing power of countries having a monometallic—a purely silver—currency, among which is Persia. To remedy this state of affairs it will be necessary to institute, through the technical services of the League, an exhaustive inquiry into the question of silver, the revalorization of which, with the effective cooperation of all countries concerned, would appear to be advisable."

It is no reply, either to oriental buyers or to western manufacturers and shippers, to say that the diminished importation of the goods in question is small in comparison with the more general decrease which has occurred in the trade of gold-using countries. For the resulting dislocation, increased by uncertainty as to the future of silver, has been serious, whether estimated in relation to the number of persons involved or to the economic, social, and, therefore, political consequences of the dislocation.

The fall in the value of silver has not been due to overproduction by the mines, nor is it explainable solely as part of the general fall in commodity values. The annual production has never equaled the effective demand. The progressive shortage from 1920 to 1930, inclusive, has totaled about 308,000,000 ounces. A surplus has been created only by the action of governments in throwing on the market some 408,000,000 ounces of demonetized metal. During the last 3 years over 200,000,000 ounces have thus been sold, chiefly by the Governments of India and French Indo-China. The natural tendency of silver to fall in value in sympathy with other primary commodities has thus been accentuated and accelerated by governmental policy. Alike in India, China, and Persia confidence in silver has been undermined, and so long as mistrust continues—as it must do while there is a prospect of further sales—we cannot expect those countries either to share fully in, or to contribute towards, a trade revival. If, on the other hand, confidence in silver were to be restored in those countries, and the rest of the world, which has suffered more than they have, supplied with an increased metallic basis for its currency and credit, there would be an immediate and world-wide recovery from the present depression, accompanied by a much more assured outlook in respect of the future than restored values based on gold alone could furnish.

SELF-REGULATING

There is no reason to fear that a moderate increase in the value of silver would lead to a great increase in available supplies. About three-quarters of the present production of silver is incidental to the processes of refining lead, copper, and zinc, and is consequently almost unaffected by changes in the price of silver itself. The fact that its production varies with the world demand for these base metals gives silver, as a currency basis, the advantage of being in a measure self-regulating, the supply of currency varying proportionately to the demand made upon it by the state of industry. Nor does experience suggest that a rise in price would bring hoarded silver into the market. On the contrary, the higher the price the less the Indian peasant is forced to surrender to the money lender when crop failure or other difficulties compel him to clear his debts. To the argument that a rise in the price of silver would injure the Chinese peasant by lowering the export price of crops which he has grown with borrowed dollars, it may be replied that, if the gold price of such crops also rose (a probable consequence of the restoration of silver to the world's monetary system), the peasant would suffer no harm. Indeed, he would probably be benefited. Not the least of his troubles at the present time is his inability to grow crops for export at a remunerative figure. Hence the fall in exports which the Chinese customs returns for 1930 show, a fall which is reflected in the customs returns of India and Persia.

To the further objection that banks with silver liabilities covered by gold assets would be seriously perturbed by a rise in silver, and that an abrupt change in the value of the currencies of China and Hong Kong would result in dislocation of business, it may be replied, first, that most banks operating in eastern countries hold silver assets against silver liabilities and gold assets against gold liabilities, and, secondly, that the risk of dislocation would be greatly lessened once it was known that the purpose in view was stabilization. China and Persia have shown in the past ability to adjust themselves to various higher levels; what has so often upset the calculations of Chinese and Persian merchants has been the lack of stability of exchange rates.

FIRST STEPS

The Silver Association urges that prompt consideration should be given to the suggestion that His Majesty's Government, with the support, if possible, of the Dominions, should convene or agree to participate in an international conference on silver, with a view to its reintroduction into the world's monetary system. As a first step the central banks might be authorized to keep a percentage of their metallic currency reserve in silver, which would then become freely available for payment of international differences as well as in support of domestic currency reserves. The metallic basis of credit would thus be expanded, and the level of commodity prices raised and kept higher and more constant than would be possible with gold alone.

In addition to the advantage of expanding the metallic basis of credit there would be the further benefit to be derived, from the point of view of trade, from a system based on the use both of gold and silver at a fixed ratio, which would have the advantage of avoiding exchange fluctuations between the gold- and silver-using halves of the world. There is not a trader, western or eastern, who does not deplore the instability which characterizes exchange rates. The world is, moreover, much better equipped to fix and maintain a ratio between gold and silver than it was when a bimetallic system was discontinued. Speaking at the American Chamber of Commerce on September 26, Lord D'Abernon said:

"The clear objective for New York and London must be the restoration of general prices to the level of 1929. * * * Both inflation and deflation are bad; what is wanted is stability."

The Silver Association is convinced that an immensely powerful group of communities such as the British Empire and the United States of America can do much to mitigate the worst effects of world-wide monetary fluctuations, and, indeed, to bring those fluctuations under control. Complete international agreement is, perhaps, in present circumstances impossible; nothing, however, is more likely to assist it than agreement between the British Empire and the United States of America with the cooperation of the French Republic. It is the opinion of the Silver Association that if, as a result of such agreement, silver were reintroduced into the monetary system of the world, the present depression would end and prices could be rendered comparatively stable on their higher level.

The executive committee of the Silver Association includes, besides Sir Robert Horne, M.P. (chairman), the Right Hon. L. S. Amery, M.P., Mr. T. D. Barlow, Lord Barnby, Mr. Clive Baillieu, Mr. D. G. M. Bernard, Mr. R. Boothby, M.P., Mr. Colin D. Brodie, Mr. J. S. Bruce, Mr. John Buchan, M.P., Sir G. Clarke, Sir H. Cunliffe-Owen, Lord D'Abernon, Sir W. Dampier, Mr. J. F. Darling, Lord Desborough, Mr. J. H. Grey, Lord Greenway, Mr. S. S. Hammersley, M.P., Col. F. L. Harden, Lord Hunsdon, Mr. H. D. C. Jones, Mr. F. A. Lauder, Sir James Leigh-Wood, Lord Lloyd, Lt. Gen. Sir G. Macdonogh, Sir Bernard Mallet, Mr. P. E. Marmion, Mr. S. F. Mayers, Mr. H. E. Moon, Sir Roland Nugent, Sir John Power, Mr. W. Maxwell Reekie, Mr. H. Rothbarth, Mr. E. Raymond Streat, Mr. E. W. D. Tennant, Mr. J. S. Wardlaw-Milne, M.P., and Mr. J. Wild. Mr. E. M. Gull and Sir A. T. Wilson are honorary secretaries of the association, whose office is at 99 Cannon Street, E.C. 4.

A bill to establish a bimetallic system of currency, employing gold and silver, to fix the relative value of gold and silver, to provide for the free coinage of silver as well as gold, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the proportional value of silver to gold in all coins which are by law current as money within the United States shall be as 16 to 1, according to quantity in weight of pure silver or pure gold; that is to say, every 16 pounds weight of pure silver shall be of equal value in all payments with one pound weight of pure gold, and so in proportion as to any greater or less quantities of the respective metals.

SEC. 2. There shall be free coinage of both gold and silver, at the ratio fixed in this act, subject to the conditions and limitations now provided by law with respect to the coinage of gold; and all the laws of the United States relating to such coinage or to recoinage, exchange, or conversion of coins, bars, or bullion of gold, shall apply equally, so far as practicable, to silver.

SEC. 3. The dollar consisting of 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine, or of 412.8 grains of silver nine-tenths fine, shall be the standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity of value with this standard, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity.

SEC. 4. The weight of the silver dollar shall be 412.8 grains troy of standard silver; the weight of the half dollar shall be 206.4 grains; the weight of the quarter dollar shall be 103.2 grains; and the weight of the dime shall be 41.28 grains.

SEC. 5. Subsection (b) of section 43 of the Agricultural Relief Act of May 12, 1933, except the last sentence of paragraph (1) thereof, as amended, is repealed; and all orders, regulations, and other action taken pursuant thereto inconsistent with the provisions of this act relating to the free coinage of gold and silver and establishing a ratio between gold and silver are hereby rescinded.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act.

FACTORS PERTAINING TO CREDIT—SILVER

SILVER AND THE ECONOMIC CRISIS—A SUGGESTED PRACTICAL SOLUTION

By Sir Hugo Cunliffe-Owen, Bt.

* * * * * * *

What, then, are the causes of our economic and financial troubles? Put very briefly, they are the appreciation of gold in gold-standard countries and the depreciation of silver in silver-standard countries. In our own country we are today suffering severely also from our policy—unique now in the world—of free imports, but I am concerned rather with general world forces than with those peculiar to Great Britain.

It is a common observation that in the past 2 years the world has been afflicted by a fall in commodity prices almost incredibly severe and universally recognized as disastrous. In speaking thus of "the world" we ignore the important fact that a very large part of its trade is transacted on a monetary basis differing materially from our own. The fall in commodity prices is common to all gold-standard countries, but no such fall has occurred in China, that vast potential market for British goods, which still operates on a complex-silver standard.

* * * * * * *

The responsibility of the western world for this catastrophic devaluation of savings, leading to all kinds of economic and social evils, cannot be evaded. Some economists are in the habit of attributing the recent slump in commodity prices to the unprecedentedly rapid increase in the world's output of raw materials and finished goods. Whether this be true or not of most commodities, it is certainly not true of silver, the output of which has been steady for many years past. The fact is that the whole weight of influence of the western world has been thrown into the scale in favor of gold as a sole monetary metal, and against the maintenance of silver in its age-old position as a basis of values in the east. This is clearly to be seen in our own policy regarding India, which has imposed a gold standard in the teeth of expert opposition, as well as in the steady movement of country after country away from silver towards gold. Ancient habit, however, is difficult to change, and it is impossible by ruthless government fiat to transform the conception of monetary value in countries like China or India. It is the action of the gold-standard world, in attempting to impose its policy and its monetary ideas on the east, that is principally, if not wholly, responsible for the disastrous fall in the value of silver.

The reactions of this development on the trade of the west, particularly of our own country, require no elucidation. Not only has the fall in silver impaired the power of the east to buy our goods, but it has enabled—indeed, forced—them to sell their manufactured products, in competition with our own, at prices so low as to oust our goods from important neutral markets. Self-interest alone, leaving aside altogether any question of equity or humanitarianism, demands that the west should realize its responsibility, and that the more powerful gold standard countries should regard it as their inescapable duty to ensure at least the maintenance of a minimum price for silver. Action along this line would directly assist in restoring prosperity, not only to silver-using countries like India and China, but also to silver-producing countries like Mexico, whose capacity for buying others' products has been ruinously depleted. The immediate result would be a market revival in the trade of the gold standard world.

A PRACTICAL SOLUTION

This duty—and it is nothing less than a duty—so far from being difficult would be comparatively easy to perform. It does not require the establishment of world-wide bimetallism, whatever the merits may be of that system. It can be done by a far simpler means. The principal producers—mainly, in order of importance, Mexico, the United States, Canada, and Peru—and the principal sellers—among whom the Indian Government is predominant—if brought together, might be relied upon to agree, for example, that they would not sell silver for export below a definite price, say 2 shillings per ounce, which minimum might perhaps be gradually raised as conditions improved. There would be little or no risk of increased production of silver in consequence of such a plan, for silver is produced mainly as a by-product of other metals, and the output is not in excess of normal consumption. The fall in the value of silver is not attributable to excessive and growing production; the difficulty has arisen from attempts to dispose of stocks arising from wide-spread demonetization and debasement of token currency. A scheme for maintaining the gold price of silver would arrest the trend away from silver standards towards gold, and set up a demand for silver in the east, which in course of time would absorb existing stocks and reestablish confidence in the ancient standard of half the world.

To the process of clearing existing stocks the gold standard countries could make a valuable contribution. The light-hearted abandonment of silver as a standard in India has been accompanied by severe dimunition of the quantities used even in token coin. We ourselves have reduced the silver content of our tokens, and similar action, in the direction either of a larger content of alloy or of the substitution of a different metal, has been widespread. A restoration even of the pre-war composition of silver coinable in western Europe would go a considerable way toward absorbing the existing stocks of silver.

What more desirable, therefore, than that the demands for gold which arise from countries which by established usage prefer a different metal should be reduced to the lowest possible level? The restoration of silver as a dependable more stable store of value would go far to minimize the growing demands from the east for the metal which the west has endowed with a monopoly of monetary rights.

Clearly, it is to the advantage of the west, equally with the east, to act, and to act quickly. The fall in the value of silver must be arrested at once and a substantial and sustained recovery brought about. The new Government could scarcely act more wisely, in dealing with causes rather than symptoms, than by calling forthwith a conference of the western nations to consider the plight of silver and to produce a plan for its rehabilitation in the practical esteem of the whole world.

GOLD AS TRADE DESTRUCTOR—"MAKE THE WORLD INDEPENDENT OF IT"

[By Sir Henri W. A. Deterding, managing director of the Royal Dutch Combine]

The last 12 years have shown in an ever-increasing degree that gold (elevated and reinforced more and more as a monopoly of measure) has been not only a cruel but a stupid master; created to be a servant of trade, it has been allowed to become the destructor of trade.

We have now arrived at the sad picture that all things which are necessary for life and comfort—namely, food and materials of every kind and description—are for a great part unsalable, and the only thing that people seem to be after is "gold." If it were the other way round, and all things which are necessary for life stood at a good price, and gold (being for practical purposes confined to cellars) almost worthless, the position would be more logical.
